Mr. CARAWAY. I have here—it will take me only a minute to read it—a letter from one of the large milling concerns, the Bay State Milling Co., millers of hard spring wheat and rye flours. Their address is 608 to 622, Grain and Flour Exchange, India and Milk Streets, Boston, Mass. I might explain that this letter is preceded by another letter, which I shall offer for the RECORD, which shows that the manipulation in wheat hurt both the farmer and the millman:

Referring to my letters of April 30 and May 1, if you have not happened to see a summary of the trading in wheat "futures," alone, in Chicago last week, you will be interested to know that the sales officially reported for the week were 478,000,000 bushels for each day, the session being three and three-quarters hours, except on Saturday, when it is two and one-half hours.

In other words, in one week they sold 478,000,000 bushels of wheat every day in three and a half hours, except that on Saturday they compressed the sales of that wheat into two and a half hours.

You will note that upon the basis of these transactions the entire wheat crop of the United States would be sold in 10 days.

Now, here is the interesting part of it:

* * * * * * * *

During the week the range in price was 17½ cents per bushel, the widest fluctuation on one day being 7 cents per bushel, the narrowest 2⅛ cents, the average daily range being 4⅝ cents per bushel. Bear in mind that this does not represent a steady movement up or down but a constant swinging back and forth many times during the day. You can realize the impossibility of safely using such a market for the legitimate purpose of hedging or as a basis for the purchase of wheat from the farmer.

I do not advocate the complete abolition of trading in "futures," but I do believe that measures should be adopted that will prevent gambling in foodstuffs by hosts of small speculators and a comparatively few large ones having no legitimate connection with the production, processing, or distribution of grain and its products.

You will be further interested to know that the trading in corn "futures" during the week totaled approximately 225,000,000 bushels, oats and rye—I have not the exact figures—approximately 50,000,000 bushels, making a total of over 750,000,000 bushels of grain "futures" traded in in the six sessions of the Chicago Board of Trade alone.

Can there be any excuse for gambling of such magnitude in foodstuffs?

Yours very truly,

BERNARD J. ROTHWELL.

A longer letter that preceded this, to which this letter came as a supplement, contains the information that the price of wheat was broken by the great drive 17½ cents a bushel. It would represent prosperity to every wheat grower in America if he could get 17½ cents cash more per bushel for his wheat than he had been getting; but he does not get it because somebody gambles in his product and prevents his reaping the world's price for it.

The letter is too long for me to read, and I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD, together with a supplementary letter of May 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letters will be printed in the RECORD.

The letters are as follows:

BAY STATE MILLING CO.,
Boston, Mass., April 30, 1928.

Hon. THADDEUS H. CARAWAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR CARAWAY: I understand that your bill with regard to the control or elimination of "future" trading in grain is now under consideration, and I have been asked to write the Senators and Representatives from this State urging them to oppose its passage.

I am unwilling to do this, as, not having copy of the bill at hand, I am not familiar with its provisions.

That trading in grain "futures" has in the past been most seriously abused is unquestionable. It is carried to such extremes as to make hedging, which is a necessary factor in the merchandising of the crop and the milling of its products, an added liability rather than a protection, which it was designed to afford.

So intolerable had this fictitious grain trading become in 1924–25 that many in the milling industry believed that prohibition of "future" trading in wheat would be decidedly the lesser of two evils.

During the last two years, owing partly to closer relation of supply and demand the world over, and the consequent lessened opportunity for wide speculative swings, and partly, perhaps largely, to the activity of professional speculators being centered upon the stock market, these causes combined resulted in a reduction of "future" trading from an average of perhaps 65,000,000 bushels per day—occasional peaks of eighty or ninety million bushels, and on some occasions during the period referred to of 100,000,000 bushels; in one day 150,000,000 bushels, or nearly one-fourth of the entire crop of that year—to 10,000,000 or less bushels per day up to within a few months.

As a result of the unfavorable crop conditions in a part of the wheat area, gambling in grain has again assumed large proportions and is now running in the neighborhood of 60,000,000 bushels or more per day. On this basis, the entire prospective crop of the United States is being sold in Chicago alone once every two weeks. By far the greater proportion of this trading is by outright gamblers having no direct or indirect connection with the production, processing, or distribution of the actual grain or its products.

This has resulted in an advance of over 40 cents per bushel in "May" and "July" wheat in Chicago. This has been of little advantage to the producer, because nine-tenths of the crop had already left his hands.

The activities of this gambling element will probably, as in the past, be on the opposite side of the market as soon as the farmer begins to make deliveries of the new crop. At that time, not the weight of the crop itself, but the added weight of the millions and millions of bushels of paper wheat thrown on the market will tend to depress the price unduly.

As in the past, there will be such wide fluctuations in price as to make it necessary for the country dealer to protect himself, so far as possible, by a wider margin between central market price and price paid the farmer.

The miller will be unable to hedge with any safety or to calculate accurately the cost of his product. There were long periods during 1924–25 when a miller could not tell, from one hour to another, within 25 to 50 cents per barrel, or more, what it was costing him to make a barrel of flour.

I would like to point out that the greatly lessened activity of grain gamblers during the past couple of years was not due to any reforms by the grain exchanges, which have persistently refused to publish from day to day information regarding volume of trading, segregated as to months; total of outstanding "short" interest in each month, etc. All of this information is in possession daily of the grain futures administration of the Government, but the Agricultural Department has shown no disposition to publish such information, although it has been called for by the Millers' National Federation and by numerous individual millers throughout the country. No sound reason can be assigned for the refusal to publish this information; its suppression can only be in the interest of the professional grain gamblers. Its publication would involve no additional expense to the Government.

I believe it should be insisted upon by all who favor minimizing the evils inherent in trading in breadstuff "futures."

Personally, I have always believed that prohibition of speculative "short" selling would be a decided advantage to all concerned except the grain gamblers and their brokers, "short" selling being confined to the holders of the actual grain or its products, and, if necessary, to the farmer who had a crop about to be harvested, every "short" sale being based upon the identical grain or its products.

I likewise believe that all "future" trading should be limited to not exceeding three—or at the outside, four—months in advance, instead of eight or more months ahead as is the case at present.

Whatever you can do to minimize the evil effects of unlimited speculation in grain will, I believe, be to the interest of all legitimately connected with it from producer to final retail distributor.

Yours very truly,

BERNARD J. ROTHWELL.

DAILY STOCK LETTER

NEW YORK, May 3, 1928.—Two important financial developments scheduled for to-day are the meeting of the New York Federal Reserve Board, which may possibly increase the rediscount rate and publication of monthly loan figures by the stock exchange. Heavy selling featured yesterday's market on widely disseminated reports that the New York rediscount rate would be raised and that loan figure reach the $5,000,000,000 mark. A strictly economic interpretation, even assuming these anticipations were realized, would not be bearish. The business of the country will always have first call on the money market and the stock market will get the money only when there is a surplus. Legislation would not change the economic flow of money. If New York is to be the largest of international money exchanges, moreover, why should brokerage loans be limited to $5,000,000,000? The total borrowings in New York City real estate alone, we understand, exceed that figure. The psychological effect of a higher rediscount rate and a very large increase in brokerage loans would undoubtedly inspire some selling of weakly held securities. We would not look for more than a temporary setback, however, followed by the usual upward procession in selected stocks.

While Radio is making an impressive showing, the volume is not sufficiently large yet to indicate that the present is more than an intermediate move preparatory to a broad advance somewhat later. We note impressive buying of General Motors by interests who are not seriously disturbed by Ford competition. The rank and file of traders have been selling General Motors short and the technical position is considered strong at the present time. American Can broke through its old record high, and we again advise its purchase at the market. We look for a large increase in Can's earnings, not so much on account of a heavy increase in sales, but rather on account of the introduction of new machinery which will lower the cost of production. American Can Co., we understand, has exclusive control of patents on this new machinery. We look for a consolidation of the recent sharp gains in the oils stocks which we have been recommending, followed a little later by new high prices. In the rail group we are decidedly partial to Canadian Pacific, which offers speculative possibilities on a basis of possible segregation plans which are not matched by any American railroad. Four months ago the average daily trading in wheat on the Chicago Board of Trade was less than 10,000,000 bushels a day. Now transactions are running at the rate of about 100,000,000 bushels a day. This gauges the big increase in public participation in the commodity markets. Interest in securities and commodities is nation-wide and the public is in a decidedly bullish mood. It will take more than a minor economic influence to shake the public's confidence, and we note no major influence on the horizon at the present time.

JACKSON BROS., BOESEL & CO.

BAY STATE MILLING CO.,
Boston, Mass., May 1, 1928.

Hon. THADDEUS H. CARAWAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR CARAWAY: Supplementing my letter of April 30, you will perhaps be interested in the inclosed Associated Press report of yesterday's grain market, clipped from to-day's Boston Herald. I have not yet seen the volume of trading yesterday, but I presume that it ran in the vicinity of 75,000,000 bushels.

I also inclose telegraphic advice of the market report in to-day's Chicago Tribune and Chicago Journal of Commerce, and also on the telegram marked "4" some private advice as to the character of the trading.

To-day's wheat market was a wild one in Chicago, price covering a range of over 5 cents per bushel, and fluctuating widely back and forth every few minutes, finally closing about 4 cents per bushel lower than yesterday.

I mention this simply as confirming what I stated yesterday—that such incessant fluctuations make impossible either accurate calculation of wheat values in the country or of the cost of manufacturing grain products.

Yours very truly,

BERNARD J. ROTHWELL.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have here a letter from the Texas Wheat Growers Association, at Amarillo, Tex. These gentlemen are engaged in the marketing of wheat. Many of us know that northern Texas produces a considerable amount of wheat. The letter is so short and to the point that I want to read it:

TEXAS WHEAT GROWERS ASSOCIATION,
Amarillo, Tex., March 22, 1928.

Senator CARAWAY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The country for six years has been stirred from center to circumference by the graft and scandal in the Teapot Dome lease case, but if the editorial written by Carl Williams in the Oklahoma Farmer Stockman of March 15 is correct, and it evidently is, the Teapot Dome graft is a small affair compared with the exposures made by Mr. Williams.

The editorial says: "On July 30, 1926, Chicago, December wheat touched $1.50. On or about that date two big speculators began to sell short and kept on selling until by September 4 they had between them accumulated a short line of more than 23,000,000 bushels. This was the largest volume of speculative wheat ever dealt in on either side of the market at one time by any two men in the history of the Chicago Board of Trade. As a result of the short operations of these two men, and for no other known or guessed-at conditions whatever, the price of wheat dropped 18 cents a bushel between July 30 and September 4. So far as I know this is the plainest and the worst case of artificial manipulation of the wheat market known in history. In August, September, and October more than 60 per cent of the wheat crop of the United States goes to market. During these three months of 1926 these two speculators for their personal profit took 10 cents a bushel out of the pockets of the farmers who sold wheat in the United States. It meant a direct loss of not less than $40,000,000 to the wheat growers solely because two heavyweight speculators with plenty of money for manipulation saw a chance to grab more."

That shows that in 35 days the wheat farmers were deliberately swindled out of more money than is involved in the Teapot Dome case.

Then from the best information that we can get the public lost in margins they had bet on the game of these two men more than $86,000,000. Thus, robbing the farmer and the public of $126,000,000 in 35 days. Why does not Congress take cognizance of this crime and graft and either stop it or create public sentiment so it will stop it?

Awaiting your reply, we are,

Yours truly,

TEXAS WHEAT GROWERS ASSOCIATION,
L. GOUGH, President.

I have in my hand a letter from the American Cotton Association and Better Farming Campaign of Greenville, S. C. They are headquarters of the American Cotton Association and Cotton News, St. Matthews, S. C. The letter is signed by Harvie Jordan. I presume everybody knows who Mr. Jordan is. The letter is too long to read, and I want to insert it in the RECORD. Mr. Jordan is protesting, in the name of the cotton growers of the South, against a continuation of the conditions which he says and which his association says—because he writes as the president of his association—are robbing the southern cotton growers of what little chance they have under the law to make a profit.

I ask to have the letter inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

AMERICAN COTTON ASSOCIATION AND BETTER FARMING CAMPAIGN,
Greenville, S. C., April 13, 1928.

Hon. T. H. CARAWAY,
United States Senate, Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CARAWAY: I notice in the press dispatches that you have introduced a bill to abolish the present cotton futures exchanges. I would be pleased to have a copy of your bill, so as to study and familiarize myself with its terms. The legitimate cotton trading system as at present organized depends upon "hedging" practices to insure against market fluctuations in the price of spot cotton bought from farmers for future sale and distribution to consuming mills. This has been necessary, due to the dumping methods of marketing in the fall months, when a large proportion of the crop has to be bought, stored, and financed until sold to the mills for forward delivery.

On the other hand, the system employed on the exchanges which permits unbridled speculative purchases and sales of cotton-futures contracts by persons and firms not engaged in any department of the legitimate industry has developed evils which seriously jeopardize the welfare of the growers and interfere with the orderly business of manufacturers. For several years I have contended that limitations should be placed by law upon the unbridled sales of fictitious cotton futures by individuals and firms for speculative purposes. I have also contended that when a contract or contracts for spot cotton sold on the exchanges is tendered to the purchaser, and not accepted, that such cotton should not be permitted for retender under future contract sales.

This would prevent the accumulation of a lot of spot cotton in any market for purposes of futures trading and consequent manipulation. I am now and have always been interested in the welfare of the cotton growers, and have never felt that our system of marketing and pricing spot cotton was fair or just to the farmers. I have had experience as a cotton grower for 50 years. While the evils of the present system of cotton-futures trading and control of spot markets by exchange dealings should be cured by proper amendments to the Federal cotton futures act, I doubt the wisdom of abolishing the system without a better and safer method being provided. There is but one way I have been able to work out that would simplify the market system, maintain fair prices for spot cotton, and protect the growers without so much reliance of the cotton trade on futures contracts. The plan in brief is to store and retire from the market each year the estimated surplus or carry-over for several months until it is needed by the mills for consumption. Dumping the surplus on the market every year is what depresses prices, fixing them upon as low speculative basis as the industry can stand, and with consequent heavy financial depression on the growers, who are merely pawns in the world cotton industry. If Congress, or the banks of the South, would provide a fund of, say, $100,000,000 as foundation capital to be handled by a strong financial organization in the South, it would be ample as a revolving fund to protect and retire the surplus cotton each year.

When only the actual supplies of raw cotton are placed in the markets for a 12-month period, based upon consumptive requirements, the legitimate laws of supply based upon demand will function and the staple will command its fair value unhampered by speculation. When the surplus is gradually sold its value, less interest, storage, insurance, and costs of handling, should be distributed to the growers who produced it, less loans advanced.

It should be handled by proper agencies in the South and the business put under the administration of trained and efficient bankers. The details of storing and making loans on the surplus cotton would have to be handled by local bankers of each county, each county's part of the whole prorated. The cooperative marketing associations could handle the surplus prorata part of their members. While the great masses of the growers could be reached through the county unit system.

The evils and depressing influences of speculation in raw cotton, with or without futures exchanges, will never be corrected until a sound system of protecting the surplus of crops is properly provided for. There can be no stability of prices so long as several million bales of cotton is dumped upon the markets each year that are not required for consumption purposes during the year in which it is sold. Safety to the farmer and minimizing the evil effects of extreme speculation depends upon a proper solution of that problem.

I am presenting these suggestions for your thoughtful consideration.

With best wishes,

Yours very truly,

HARVIE JORDAN.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have here a letter from Shreveport, La., from F. R. Shuford, who for six years was the auditor of a cotton association, and for a number of years had to do with a broker's office. It unqualifiedly condemns gambling in the future market. I ask to have it inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

SHREVEPORT, LA., April 17, 1928.

Senator CARAWAY, of Arkansas,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am interested in a small way in the cotton investigation that has been going on for several weeks in the Senate. It occurs to me, though I am only a small figure in the cotton world—but have worked from the Carolinas to west Texas during the past 20 years as interior cotton buyer—that the Senate or House either in Washington does not know how to go at finding the faults in the cotton market South, or else know and don't want to know for political and financial reasons. This I do not believe holds true with yourself.

Let me ask you to bring out from witnesses the culling out of cotton and redelivering all bad-classed bales they find in cotton they take up. This is bad abuse. I have seen 100 per cent consist of parts of 40 contracts—of course, this was the cull—out of cotton received on the exchange. It has been abused during my time of over 25 years in the business. The way to stop it is that 100 per cent must contain one serial contract number and can not be retendered if split or part of the original 100 taken out without being recertificated in hundred bales; then the classers might turn the cotton down as off grade. Let me say that classers get off, all of them, at times, on the exchange or anywhere else; and then we don't know but what the big fellows can reach a small man classing cotton in many ways—you can only deliver late 100 per cent New York. It should contain only one serial number—New Orleans the same, Houston for Chicago—50 per cent is the contract. It will prevent culling out the good cotton in the contracts and retendering the offs of all contracts in class and staple.

To find out about manipulation introduce and pass bill that all sales across the ring of all exchanges must actually be kept correct by the superintendent of the exchange—who bought them and who sold them and what months traded in; the broker must give the person or persons he has traded for or acted for; make a strong penalty attached, and that the Senate committee has access to check these exchanges up any time. A manipulator will buy and sell through a dozen brokers, called floor traders. Cut out floor trader and make him tell who he is buying or selling for. I have been from Mississippi to west Texas recently, and all of us poor little cotton men laugh at the investigation as a farce. If the superintendents of the exchanges are forced by law to keep the sales of all—every—contract daily, as to seller and purchaser, with some Government agency authorized to check the exchanges, you could discover the manipulation. I venture to say that every cotton buyer in the Cotton Belt knows that the big fellows, Anderson-Clayton Co. and McFadden, with their New York friends, manipulate the market constantly. It is easy for them, but is a complicated business to the average business man, big or little. If the cotton exchanges were prohibited or done away with the farmer and the public would be better off in the South. In the West, if the grain exchange was done away with the western farmer would be better off. If the stock exchange, New York, was done away with the public generally would be better off. These are institutions sponsored and regulated and brought into use for financiers; they are not for the poor man in any way, shape, form, or fashion under the sun. They have made the Senate and House think they are needed for hedging purchases. That is the veriest rot of it all. Did it ever occur to you that the financiers need an exchange for marketing everything the farmers grow and their own stocks, but they do not need any exchange to market any articles or anything they produce for the consuming public?

The farmer does not need any exchange. What in the world is there to guarantee the farmer after he puts his seed in the ground whether he will harvest a crop at all, whether a good one or small one?

It took me over 20 years to decide that the cotton, stock, and grain exchanges were for the rich people only. They are of no use to the farmers of the West and South, and the public ought to stay out of the stock market.

I am sure the South in few years would reap advantages if the cotton exchanges were done away with.

A small crop of cotton advertises itself very quickly to the trade and a big crop the Government advertises in July to the world. What chance has the farmer?

Cotton should be marketed like all other merchandise, covering a period of about eight months, the mill buying the cotton as they sell the goods, or otherwise suiting themselves, and it does not need any hedges—that's a farce to fool the Washington politician.

I will venture the assertion that the cotton crop of 1927–28 has been sold through New York and New Orleans over one hundred times, probably 150,000,000 bales bought and sold. I have seen in my time 500,000 traded in one day.

Yours truly,

T. R. SHUFORD,
230 Egan Street, Shreveport, La.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have a letter from N. C. Williamson, at Millikin, La., in which in the very strongest terms possible he asks that Congress do something to prevent the destruction of agriculture by the gamblers on the exchanges. He professes to have had quite a considerable experience with them, and is a grower of cotton. Since I do not want to take the time of the Senate to read it, I ask to have the letter included in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

MILLIKIN, LA., March 8, 1928.

Senator CARAWAY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: There has always been serious doubt in my mind as to the necessity of the cotton exchanges as presently governed and operated, and I am frank to say I have no definite idea just how they could be regulated so as to serve the grower instead of the speculator. I notice you have a bill which, if passed, will destroy the exchanges, for the reason they could not exist if confined in their trading to actual hedges of spot cotton.

If you have not the information as to how many bales of cotton are bought and sold through the exchanges, it will be very interesting to you, and I suggest that you get these figures for use before the committee. You will have to get this data from the Department of Internal Revenue in Washington, they having the record of tax collected on each trade executed. This is the only place the figures can be secured, and then it will take your influence as a Senator to obtain them.

I can not see why these figures should not be published the same as sales of spot cotton each day and the sale of stocks on the New York Stock Exchange; however, it is not done. To prove how they guard these figures, just send some one around without letting them know you as a Senator want the figures, and see what he may be told.

It will be particularly interesting to see how many bales of actual cotton are delivered on contracts through the exchanges.

The last figures I have are for the year 1921–22, when 78,361,700 bales for New York and 40,701,700 for New Orleans, as published in the report of the Federal Trade Commission in 1924. During this year about 640,000 bales were delivered on contracts. The volume of business is larger now, and the Chicago Exchange will add quite a volume of business not included in the above.

I think it would be good to amend your bill so as to require the publication every day of the number of bales traded in through all the exchanges the same as spot-cotton sales are reported and published in all the different markets.

If the exchanges are to serve the grower as a vehicle for hedging his crop, the minimum number of bales for a trade should be reduced to 25 or even lower, instead of being 100 in New York and New Orleans and 50 in Chicago.

There is one thing we must not overlook in thinking of the exchange as a clearing house for all cotton markets, as they may term it, and that is, for every sale there must be a buyer, and if conditions are too rigid against the buyer, the markets might be restricted and thus prices depressed more easily. On the other hand, the reverse might be true if rules are too rigid for the sale of cotton. What we want is a more stable value for cotton. It appears now that trading facilities are more favorable to the speculative seller than the buyer.

While I have no definite information to support my belief, it is my firm conviction that the drive made on the market during the past few months has been a determined effort to destroy the cooperatives, and unless some strong Government agency is created to finance the surplus control of farm products the big spot dealers, together with the speculative interests, will always control prices. Personally, I like the Jardine plan for providing funds for surplus control as against the equalization fee as provided in the McNary-Haugen bill. Doctor Kilgore does not represent the thought of more than a very small percentage of cotton growers, and his attitude should be more practical. I am a member of the cotton cooperatives and president of the Louisiana association at this time; and while I am speaking personally, I know the Louisiana cotton growers with whom I have talked are in favor of the appropriation by Congress of a fund as suggested by Jardine instead of the equalization fee. Doctor Kilgore represents the thought of a few of the cooperative leaders who decided that is the right plan to stand out for. This may be all right, but I want to see the machinery set up and worked out in a practical way by capable men after it is started, if we can do no better.

I write only to possibly give you some thought that might be of assistance, for this is a great big question and one that affects vitally every cotton grower in this Nation.

Yours very truly,

N. C. WILLIAMSON.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am not unmindful that many may say that legislation of this great importance ought not to be included in a revenue bill. It is the only way, however, in which we are going to get a chance to have a vote, uninfluenced by other considerations, on this question of short selling.

Let me say again that I presume that most of us who live in the South grow cotton. I commenced when I was 7 years old working in a cotton field. I believe I know all about its production, and I am reasonably familiar with its sale. I have been a hired hand; I have been a share cropper; I have been a tenant; and now I am what is called in my country a shade-tree farmer. I have an equity in the land, and I rent it out, and between the sheriff and myself we get what the cotton grower makes off of it. The sheriff gets the most of it. Therefore, I am not speculating about what I am talking about.

I have seen the price of a load of cotton, where it left the plantation to go to a gin not in excess of 2 miles away, drop $10 a bale while the farmer traveled those 2 miles. There will come a wire that the Liverpool market opened at such a figure. Every cotton merchant in America drops his price immediately. There is a decline. On the other hand, if there is an advance, he says, "I will wait to see whether that is a reaction or whether it is just a temporary flurry." He follows every decline down, but he does not follow every rise up; and it is perfectly reasonable that he should not do it, because as long as you give to people the right to sway and control a market by betting that the price will go up or down, that there are more people on my side than on your side, nobody can do business safely on that sort of a market; and he necessarily hedges at the expense of the grower of the product.

I said I have seen cotton drop $10 a bale in the time I mention, and that is more profit than the people who grew that cotton had in it. They lost more while they were going from the plantation gate to the gin than a year's toil produced; and the result is—I do not know how it is in other States, but I can speak with authority for my own—that I know hardly a single producer of cotton on a large scale who is not insolvent.

This gambling, Mr. President, is reflected not alone in the loss of profits by the growers of cotton; it is reflected in the loss of industry in New England; it is reflected in the loss in the buying power of all the people living in the southern cotton-growing belt. It is reflected, therefore, in every walk of life in America; and I presume what is true about cotton is true about wheat.

We will get a vote on it, Mr. President. As I said yesterday, let me repeat, there is not a Senator on this floor who would record his vote in favor of opening a gambling hall in the District of Columbia.

There is not a State in this Union that licenses gambling. They all pronounce it a crime. Yet the greatest gambling institution the world ever knew would pale into insignificance compared with the gambling on the cotton and grain exchanges in America. The double crime is that the people are gambling, not in their own wealth, but they are gambling in the sweat and toil of every man, woman, and child who eats his bread in the sweat of his brow. If Senators would not vote to license a man to open a gambling house here in the District of Columbia, where he can bet his own money and lose his own money, or win somebody else's money who may bet with him, can we afford to license a gambling place that is not only an infinitely worse one but that is going to take the profits of people who never saw it and had no chance to win on its gamble?

REVISION OF ARMY PROMOTION LIST

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, due to the fact that a flood of telegrams has come to the Members of the Senate in the last few days from a certain group of officers with reference to Senate bill 3089, introduced by me, without attempting to go into the merits of the bill completely I desire simply to give a sufficient explanation so that those who are here will understand the source of the dissatisfaction and the reasons for the introduction of the bill. I shall be very brief, and I desire to make this statement in order that Senators may understand something of the underlying reasons behind the bill and behind the objections.

When the war was over there was a large group of officers who desired to be admitted into the Regular Army. Provision was made for examination. Any person who desired to get into the Regular Army had a right to apply for appointment to the grade he believed himself qualified to fill. If he thought he was capable of being a captain, he could apply for a captain's commission. If he thought he was capable of being a major, he could apply for a major's commission. If he thought he was capable only of being a second lieutenant, he could apply for a second lieutenant's commission. Every man in the United States who wanted a commission in the Army, whether he was already in the Army or not, had a right to take that examination. The statement has been made to Senators in telegrams that the examination was not open to all. That is incorrect. It was open to any man who was in the Army or out of the Army.

An elaborate system of examination was prepared. Men were invited to come into the Army under this competitive system. I have in my possession here the rules governing that examination. Age was to count. Business experience in the outside world was to be considered in the grade or commission which the man received.

Under this elaborate system of examination competitive tests were held. Various commissions were issued to thousands of officers—some of them received appointment as second lieutenants after they applied for this particular commission and met the test provided, some of them were made first lieutenants, some captains, some majors, and some lieutenant colonels.

After they had stood these tests they received their commissions. Then the War Department, interpreting the national defense act in such way as to deprive these officers of the benefits of the competitive test, scrambled together the lieutenants and captains and permitted 1,500 lieutenants to skyrocket over night above 1,500 captains. This stepping-up process was without examination or test. Many who had stood the examination for second lieutenant, who wanted nothing else, who evidently felt that they could get nothing else, stepped immediately over the men who had stood the examination for captain, and to-day the men who received the captain's commissions by competitive test have standing over them, blocking their promotion, men who either could not or did not stand the test. This has blocked the promotions of worthy and capable men, without fault on their part, for a period of about 10 years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. KING. What class of men was it who received those discriminating benefits?

Mr. BLACK. The class of men mainly were provisional second lieutenants—and I will explain that in just a moment—or Regular Army officers.

Mr. KING. Were they graduates of West Point?

Mr. BLACK. Some of them were; some of them were not. There is one major who has given a study to the effect of my bill who in 1916 was a cadet at West Point. A man who is now a captain and is blocked was at that time a lieutenant colonel in the National Guard on the border. That lieutenant colonel stood an examination and received a captain's commission. To-day the man who was a cadet at West Point in 1916 is a major, although he has been in the service only since 1916, and this other man has been in the service about 10 years longer.

When war was declared, the Government needed officers, and an order was issued to the effect that any man who had been to West Point and had made as much as 30 per cent on his test, even though he had flunked and failed to stand the prescribed examination, should be given a provisional second lieutenant's commission. Four hundred and thirty-three men who had previously failed to pass the examination at West Point were given second lieutenant's commissions. Those men to-day rank the graduates of West Point who were in their class and who successfully stood the examination. One of them is here lobbying against this bill. He failed in the class of 1916. He failed to pass the test at West Point, but under the needs of war time received a provisional second lieutenant's commission. This officer to-day ranks every member of his own class of 1916 at West Point, although he failed and the other classmen passed satisfactory examinations. The reason he ranks them is the same reason these other officers are ranked by men who previously had lower grades.

The provisional second lieutenants, in the main, were granted commissions before they did a day's service in the Army. They were selected and were given commissions that same day. On the other hand, the emergency officers who went to the training camps were compelled to work three months, and then, if they met the test, secured their commissions. That gave to the provisional second lieutenants, it will be noted, a longer range of service, counting from the date they received their commissions, than was given the man who received an emergency captain's commission in the training camp. The War Department interpreted the national defense act to mean that officers should be promoted according to length of service only, so that if a second lieutenant, who had received a provisional commission started into service the same day a man had started in service in the reserve officers' training camp, that provisional officer's commission ranked from the day he went into the service, but the reserve officer's commission ranked from the day he completed his service in the training camp and was commissioned. So we have the strange and anomalous situation to-day in the American Army, fought for and contested for by these men who are sending the telegrams—the men who receive an advantage which is not theirs—we have the strange and anomalous situation of men who were second lieutenants July 1, 1920, standing above the men who were captains on the same date.

I know an officer who was a captain in a training camp, and he is ranked to-day by every provisional second lieutenant whom he trained as candidates for commissions. He did not get credit even for the length of time he served as a captain-instructor, and he turned out provisional second lieutenants of a less mature age, youthful men, and this weird system switched them above him where they are to-day. They object to this bill on the ground that it is unjust to them. What about the captain?

Those provisional officers are some who are dissatisfied with this bill. They feel that since they have something, they ought to keep it. They have had it for practically 10 years, and in the meantime these men who stood the examination and met the test have their way absolutely blocked by these younger men. We have that situation defended by the War Department, although the War Department declared at one time that this condition was a menace to the American Army. Yet they say, "Do not try to rearrange it, because it will create dissatisfaction." Of course, it will create dissatisfaction among some of those young officers who have been promoted over older men, who block the way now for those officers who gave up their service in the outside world and entered the American Army with the promise on the part of the Government that they should receive such commissions as they proved themselves capable of holding, but who, strange to say, saw their hopes turned into ashes the very day they won the prize.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator's bill provide for taking these persons who have these advantages, apparently discriminatorially, and reducing them en bloc and elevating en bloc those who were denied the advantages to which they were entitled?

Mr. BLACK. It provides exactly this——

Mr. KING. It seems to me that to remedy the situation those persons who have been denied advantages ought to be put over the heads of those others, and, if necessary, the others who have had advantages to which they were not entitled should be reduced.

Mr. BLACK. I have provided that the promotion list shall be rearranged and readjusted so that those who were captains in 1920, when they stood this test, shall rank those who were first lieutenants and second lieutenants when they stood the test. That is the reason Senators are receiving telegrams from groups who have obtained something which was not justly theirs and who wish to cling to it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Not for a long time has there been a bill before the Senate concerning which I have had so many letters and telegrams; but they are not all one way.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. I get many telegrams and letters favoring the bill, and others in opposition to it. If the Senator will bear with me, I would like to read from some letters I have and ask him about what is said in them. Here is a letter which states:

We feel that no legislation for a long time has been so calculated to favor the few at the expense of the many or has promised to be so damaging to the democratic spirit of the service.

Granting that injustice may have been done at the inauguration of the present promotion list, it has been in effect now for eight years. A change at this late date would only serve to bring about fresh injustices at the expense of officers who have given their best to the service during this time and bring about the resignation of the best of them.

Unfortunately, the only officers who would suffer are World War veterans who came into the Army from civil life and remained in the service. We believe the Black bill is class legislation in its most superlative form.

Mr. BLACK. I will be glad to explain that to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me read another, and then the Senator will have them both.

I am taking the liberty of addressing you with reference to the Black promotion bill.

I will ask the Senator to listen to this and tell me whether it is correct:

As I understand it, these bills provide that all classes which graduated from West Point after the declaration of war, up to and including the class of 1921, and a small group of other officers, gain hundreds of files at the expense of World War officers who entered the Regular Army in 1920, especially former National Guard officers. I am informed that many of the officers who are thus adversely affected were not afforded an opportunity to appear before the Committee on Military Affairs.

Are those statements true up to that point?

Mr. BLACK. No. Those mainly benefited are former National Guard officers and World War veterans. Everybody was entitled to appear before the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. The letter continues:

I am personally acquainted with a number of officers who served creditably with me during the World War, who, upon their return to the United States, became officers of the Regular Army. While I have every respect for the United States Military Academy, I do not think that Congress would really care to discriminate against men who, while former citizen soldiers, served their country faithfully during a period of emergency and who, prompted by motives of patriotism, decided to remain in the Army. I shall be very grateful for anything that you may do to prevent the passage of a bill which would thus unfairly treat men of the highest standing, who are a credit to the Military Establishment of the United States.

Those are the criticisms. I have no desire to enlarge upon them. I do not know enough about it to do so, but I would be glad to know what the Senator has to say in reply.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BLACK. I would like to answer the Senator from New York first, but if it is in line with his question I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. This is my suggestion. As the Senator knows, and as other Members of the Senate do not know, a minority report was filed against the bill. The committee was divided on it. I am betraying no secret when I say the vote was 6 to 5 in favor of the bill of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. It was 9 to 7.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator must have included some who were not there.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; those who voted by proxy.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In any event, the minority report has been filed and the bill will lead to a long debate. This is what I want to ask the Senator: I am wondering whether it is worth while to start that debate now while we are considering the tax bill. Would not the Senator find that his remarks had greater force if he made them while the bill itself was before the Senate and not now when the tax bill is here?

Mr. BLACK. I expect to do that, but the reason I am making the statement now is this: These telegrams are coming in very rapidly, and a large part of the time of myself and those in my office is consumed in giving information concerning the bill. I am not going to argue the bill at length now. I simply want to explain something about the situation.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. While the Senator is doing that will he explain this feature? I have a telegram from an officer in the Second Division, down in San Antonio, an officer who had long experience in the National Guard and who was in the same battery with me in training camp in 1917. He got his commission in August, 1917, and served at the front practically all the time until the armistice. He wires me as follows:

I want to thank you for your splendid support of the customs of the old Regular Army. Any change in the present promotion list will be a huge injustice. At a meeting of a group of officers of the Second Division it was estimated that fully 80 per cent of the lieutenants and captains stationed here will lose hundreds of files. Many contemplate resignation if present promotion list is revised.

Mr. BLACK. I am glad to explain that. In the first place, the contemplated resignation is not limited to any one group. It is the desire of the Army, or at least it is believed by these emergency officers to be the desire of those in charge, that every effort under the sun be made to eliminate them from the Army. That is based upon numerous statements, to the effect that "There is a hump in the Army and we have to relieve it by getting the emergency officers out." In my judgment there is no group of officers more thoroughly competent to fill their positions in the American Army than are the emergency officers who came in from civil life. If I were to put in the RECORD the vast number of letters and telegrams which I have had from men in the American Army who see suspended above their heads the sword of Damocles, proposed by the War Department and sponsored by the minority report of the committee, the information would be surprising to many.

Why do I say that? The first bill proposed by the War Department was a bill to create an arbitrary board of five general officers, with power to pluck any officer they saw fit in the American Army without a trial. They stood for it. They testified for it before the committee. They urged it. They urged that a system of autocracy be perpetuated in the American Army which would be as bad as any that has ever existed in any despotism in the world. They urged a board of five general officers, with absolute power, without a regulation, without a restriction, with the right to put a sword over the head of every officer in the Army and say, "We will put you out if we do not like the color of your hair or the color of your eyes."

Against that bill I had letters from emergency officers all over America and as far as the Philippine Islands, begging and pleading that the American Army be not permitted to hang such a sword over the heads of its officers. These emergency officers wrote me almost as with one accord: "We believe from the evidence before us that it is intended to get rid of the emergency officers who came into the Army in 1920."

The minority bill retains that board of officers. They keep the board limited by such rules and regulations for "plucking" officers as may be promulgated by the President of the United States. In the first place, I am unalterably opposed to giving the President or any bureau or any board the power to enact regulations tantamount to law. It is my judgment that such practice has already gone entirely too far. All of us know that the President is not a military man. We know that such rules would be promulgated by the same group of officers that came before the Committee on Military Affairs and insisted on the creation of a plucking board with unlimited authority. Therefore, I am opposed to any plucking board, whether it be limited by regulation of law or permitted to be operated within regulations promulgated by the President.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator is talking about the system of promotion examinations suggested by the minority?

Mr. BLACK. I am talking about the system provided in the minority bill.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The same system prevails in the Navy, does it not?

Mr. BLACK. I do not understand that the identical system prevails in the Navy.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. They have promotion examinations.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; they have promotion examinations and then select from those who are eligible, as I understand.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is for promotion to the grades of general officers; but so far as the grades of captain and below are concerned, I do not understand that is correct.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. It applies above the grade of captain. Some of them are attempting to bring it all the way down the line. The Senator is correct.

There are instances of men who served in the World War who will be injured and others who will be helped by this proposition. It is not limited to any one class. I have, for instance, a letter from a man who was decorated with the distinguished-service cross, who is blocked in such a way that if he lives to be 62 years old he will never rise above a captain. I have a letter from a National Guard officer, as follows:

> In behalf of many hundreds of former National Guard officers throughout the Army please allow me to extend our grateful appreciation for your splendid efforts in our behalf as evidenced by your bill, S. 3089. We note with pleasure that it has been reported favorably to the Senate.

It is no trouble to get letters on either side of the question. What I wanted to show this morning is what is intended to be remedied. It is the insistence of the majority of the committee that when a test has been prepared and a man has met such test, it is undemocratic, it is un-American, it is contrary to every fundamental principle of the progress of human life to take away from him that which he has earned, unless he forfeits it by his misconduct or by his neglect. It is the insistence of the majority that when these men stood that test throughout the Nation, with the statement made, "We will make you a captain if your ability justifies it," that this constituted an implied obligation on the part of the American Government to permit no man, who had stood the test and gotten no further than second lieutenant, to rise above one holding the commission of captain unless the captain was guilty of misconduct or had proven unworthy of the trust which had been bestowed upon him because of merit.

We believe that the only way to build up morale in the Army is to let a man not only obtain but keep that which he can get by meeting the tests prepared by the Government. They talk about unrest and dissatisfaction and resignation. I know men in the Army who gave up lucrative careers in the outside world. I have in mind a man who was graduated by one of the greatest colleges in the world. He gave up a lucrative law practice. He served valiantly and bravely in our Army. When the time came to stand the examination, he concluded to give up his career in the outside world and remain in the American Army. He proposed to do it because he believed that he could stand the test for a captaincy, and that in due course of time he would be promoted so that he might have a normal career in the Army. To-day that man is blocked by more than 3,000 men who were below him on the day he received his captain's commission.

My position with reference to these telegrams is that some of the officers are injured, if it be an injury to take away from them that which was never justly theirs. I would not care, so far as I am concerned, what were the proportionate numbers injured and benefited.

The whole single question in this matter with me is, What is right? Shall we permit these officers who have given to the Government the best years of their service, who have now reached a period in their career when it would be difficult to start out and begin life anew, to be blockaded, to be shut up in a stagnant pool where there is no hope of getting promotion because, forsooth, some man may have had a day's longer service than they, or perchance because some received their commissions at the beginning of training and this captain received his commission when he completed his training. We take the position that we do not disturb the promotion list of the Army when we restore it to the position which was promised these men it should have when they came into the service of the Government. We say that a wrong once done can be cured in only one way, and that is by restoring so far as possible the status quo which existed before the injury was inflicted upon those who met the test which the Government itself provided for them to stand. So much for that.

Now, as to the other feature of the bill. My bill, instead of providing a plucking board, with rules and regulations promulgated by the President or anyone else, and recognizing the fact that there is a hump blocking promotion, and knowing that there should be a normal yearly attrition by retirement, provides, instead of an involuntary retirement as does the minority bill, a method for a voluntary retirement. It holds up, to these officers who have given up their outside life for a career in the Army, a reward, and says, "If you want to go out by reason of the fact that you may not advance as rapidly as you anticipated you would, we will give you a half year's pay and later give you a retirement annuity."

We do that on this basis, that they gave up a business career to enter the Army, and it is neither fair, nor just, nor right for the Government of the United States to set these men adrift, to begin life anew, without aid in their future work. We are unalterably opposed to a forced system of retirement. We stand again holding a sword over the necks of the officers of the American Army, and saying: "We will put you out when we get ready; when we get tired of you; although you have given up your business careers to serve your Government which no longer needs you, we will set you adrift." Therefore we provide for the attrition by the only fair method which this Government can assume, in our judgment, for the benefit of these officers.

We provide a system of accelerated promotion which will really promote the provisional second lieutenants quicker than they can reach such a position now if they remain in the places which they do not justly occupy; and we arrange a flow of promotions, even and smooth, which will permit the American Army to advance as it should and give to every officer, whether he comes from the Military Academy or elsewhere, a normal career in the American Army.

TAX REDUCTION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President and Senators, I wish to discuss the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], which proposes to impose a tax of 50 cents for each $100 in value on the contracts on the grain and cotton exchanges of the country, which at present prices would amount to about $50 on each contract of 100 bales. This is a very important matter, and I hope I may have the attention of those who must vote upon it in order that they may receive the point of view of one who has studied it very carefully for many years.

To start with, let me say that the presentation of this amendment is an attempt to engraft on this revenue bill a piece of legislation seeking to destroy cotton exchanges, which has been pending more or less continuously in the American Congress for the last half century. In 1892, when the late Chief Justice White was a Senator from Louisiana, the Hatch bill to destroy cotton exchanges was pending. Senator White made a convincing and classical address in opposition to it. From time to time since then measures have been introduced the purport of which was to destroy the contract markets in cotton. I shall speak more particularly of cotton, as I am better acquainted with it, although this amendment reaches both cotton and grain.

It was recognized years ago that there were some evils in the practices of the exchanges, just as there are evils in practically every human agency, and a serious attempt was made to correct those evils. The efforts finally culminated in the United States cotton futures act, which became a law in 1914 and which has since been known as the Smith-Lever Cotton Futures Act. That law was found to be unconstitutional and was reenacted in 1916 in a form which overcame the constitutional objection. It has been in existence ever since, with slight amendments, and has functioned admirably. It justly takes rank with the great constructive pieces of legislation of the last quarter of a century and is fairly comparable with such legislation as the Federal reserve banking act and the act creating the Federal farm land banking system. The Smith-Lever Act has been of very great benefit to the producers and consumers of cotton in America. When the bill was under consideration an able report was made in support of it, and I will read a brief extract therefrom. That report was prepared by Representative Lever, of South Carolina, and was submitted on behalf of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives in the Sixty-third Congress. In that report it is stated:

It is the opinion of the committee that the abolition of the cotton exchanges would result inevitably in the monopolizing of the entire cotton crop in the hands of a very few powerful interests with the force and means to fix the price at which the farmer would be compelled to sell his cotton. Fully 75 per cent of American-produced cotton leaves the hands of the producer during the four months of September, October, November, and December. It takes no stretch of the imagination to foresee how utterly helpless the farmer, as a class, would be in his present disorganized condition as a factor in fixing the price of his own product, as against the organized genius and money of the spinners and powerful spot-cotton dealers.

Mr. President, without reading it, I will ask to insert the remainder of that statement, along with my remarks, in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement referred to is as follows:

The report of the House Committee on Agriculture (Sixty-third Congress), which framed the cotton futures act, had this to say on the functions and economic uses of the cotton exchanges:

"It is the opinion of the committee that the abolition of the cotton exchanges would result inevitably in the monopolizing of the entire cotton crop into the hands of a very few powerful interests with the force and means to fix the price at which the farmer would be compelled to sell his cotton. Fully 75 per cent of American-produced cotton leaves the hands of the producer during the four months of September, October, November, and December. It takes no stretch of the imagination to foresee how utterly helpless the farmer, as a class, would be in his present disorganized condition as a factor in fixing the price of his own product, as against the organized genius and money of the spinners and powerful spot-cotton dealers.

"The fundamental principles of trade is that the buyer always buys at the lowest possible price, while the seller always sells at the best possible price to be had. With this principle in mind and with the economic conditions surrounding the southern farmer not overlooked, it does not take a prophet to foretell what must be the result of a contest between the farmer on the one hand and the spinner and big spot-cotton dealer on the other in a struggle for fixing the price of cotton. The farmer can not hope to survive in such an unequal contest. He would be forced to peddle his cotton upon the streets and to take such prices for it as had been agreed upon, secretly, perhaps, by these big interests. He would be absolutely at their mercy without even the law of supply and demand to aid him.

"Any legislation, therefore, which eliminates from the cotton trade the element of legitimate speculation and legitimate speculators must, in the opinion of the committee, result disastrously to the producer, especially at that season of the year when the bulk of the crop is moving from him into the channels of commerce. Cotton exchanges properly regulated in their operations, in that they afford opportunities for legitimate speculation, may be made to be of real benefit to farmers, merchants, and spinners. The legitimate speculator, operating through the exchanges, is the only buffer standing between the helpless producer and the powerful buyer of his product."

Mr. RANSDELL. Let me remind Senators that there are literally thousands—I presume hundreds of thousands—of people in this country who are engaged in the production of cotton and the consumers are the spinners. Practically all the cotton is consumed by the mills, the manufacturing establishments. There are only a few hundred of those that buy the cotton of this country, and, of course, there are many of them abroad. I do not pretend to say that the splendid men who handle the manufacturing business of our country, and who have added so much to the wealth of this Nation by handling it in a successful manner, would form a combination or engage in a monopolistic endeavor to buy the cotton at prices which suited them, but I do say that there are so few of them it would be feasible for them to have an understanding among themselves to that end. I also insist that it would be impossible for the farmers, the producers, so to organize in order to put up the price, because there are so many of them that they could not possibly organize effectively for their own protection.

In this connection let us see what happens on the exchange to help the producer. When the cotton crop is being marketed it is all bought by merchants, who hope to sell to the mills and consumers, or it is purchased directly by the mills themselves, who go into the market for that purpose and who furnish a rather limited demand, because the farmer usually sells his cotton within 90 days after it is baled, while the mill buys and uses its cotton during 365 days—the entire year. So the mill is buying from time to time as its needs accrue, while the farmer, of necessity, because he can not afford to hold his cotton, must part with his crop within a period of three or four months.

When this situation appears the speculator comes on the scene—the speculator not only in this country but in other lands—in Europe, Asia, even Africa, and other parts of the world. The intelligent speculator says, "Cotton is too cheap. I will buy some cotton as a speculation, just as I would buy stocks, bonds, or real estate as a speculation, believing they are too low, and they are going to go up in price, and I can make money on the enhanced value of the cotton." Many people take that view if the price is low, and there is quite a widespread buying movement.

Everyone knows that when there are a good many buyers in the market the price of the commodity tends to go up. It rises in value; and, as it goes up, the farmer gets the benefit of the increase in value. As it goes up, the mill man who has been holding back says to himself, "This product is going up. I had better lay in a pretty good supply. I am going to need for my mill this year 10,000 bales, perhaps 12,000 bales; I need a thousand a month. I will not take chances on the commodity going out of sight, but I will go in the market and purchase 12,000 bales, 1,000 bales per month, for future delivery, not expecting actually to take up that cotton on contract, but as an insurance." That is called a "hedge," and the purpose is to assure him a supply of raw material at the rate of a thousand bales per month for the price set out in the insurance contract—a perfectly legitimate transaction.

This manufacturer has to make his contracts to deliver his product a long time in advance—6, 9, 12 months in advance. How can he intelligently say at what price he can sell the manufactured product unless he knows what the raw material is going to cost him? It is impossible for him to know what it will cost unless he does one of two things: He could buy it, of course. He could actually go in the market and buy 12,000 bales of spot cotton, pay the cash for it, and store it in his warehouses.

Mr. SMOOT. If he had the cash.

Mr. RANSDELL. If he had the cash, as the Senator from Utah so tactfully and wisely suggests; but it would take a great deal of cash to do a thing of that sort, and then he would be out the interest on his money for that time, and would be obliged to insure the spot cotton for that time. It would be a most troublesome and expensive transaction; whereas by going in the contract market and making a trade, an agreement to have a thousand bales per month delivered to him, at the end of each month he sells his future contract and buys on the spot market the corresponding amount of the particular quality of cotton needed for his mill. He has not been out of his money, except a very small portion of it. He has not had to tie himself up with the expense of storing, and insurance, and loss of interest, and innumerable transactions.

Mr. President, the most important feature of the cotton exchange is the insurance feature. It is just as important as insurance in any other kind of business.

Now, I am going to read a statement from a very able man who lives in Arkansas. I have been told that he was born in Louisiana, and if he was I am proud of it; but I understand that he lives now in Arkansas. His name is Sidney West, who has just retired as president of the American Cotton Shippers Association, which organization embraces more than 90 per cent of the cotton merchants of the South. Here is an analysis which he gave before the Senate committee on the question of the insurance feature of the cotton exchange:

Boiled down, the thing looks to me like it comes to this: A number of years ago, before we had marine insurance, people who shipped stuff around the world had to make much larger profits than they do to-day, when we can, for a very small premium, have our marine risks insured. The cotton people under the present system have price insurance, and it would be much better if these exchanges were called price-insurance associations, as Lloyd's is called an insurance, than if they were really called futures.

Senator RANSDELL. They are really price insurance?

Mr. WEST. They are really price insurance associations. They are not themselves companies. It is simply a place for people to meet.

Senator RANSDELL. It is very much like Lloyd's in that respect, is it not?

Mr. WEST. Yes; it is, exactly. Lloyd's is not an incorporation, as an insurance company is in this country at all. It is just a meeting place where these underwriters get together, this terrible speculating that we hear so much about. We have underwriters of marine risk, underwriters of fire, underwriters of credit insurance, underwriters of all sorts of insurance. They are speculators, if you please. That is just exactly what they are, speculators, as much so as in the cotton business. In the cotton business there is a price underwriter. He bets it is going up or down, just like if I have insured a home in Little Rock, the insurance company will bet me a hundred dollars to two that it will not burn up this year. That is all it amounts to.

Any changes, as we know, upset confidence. I am from a farm State. The exchange that I represent there, of which I happen to have been president, 60 per cent of its membership are farmers, and we do not know a lot about the technical side of these things, but we do know this. We know what happened to us there in our State. I am also interested in a little bank. Futures went up very high in 1919 and 1920, during the winter of 1920, and then the next fall they were very cheap, and still kept getting cheaper. The man who had taken price insurance—and they were forced to do it in my town of Little Rock, because the banks would not loan them any money—was able to pay off his bank, and there was not a dollar lost by a bank in Little Rock on a cotton man. In other sections of Arkansas, where they are not quite so conservative, cotton shippers and merchants, the banks do not understand the economic functions of the futures, they did, or lots of them, and I will say they are in a poor condition. I don't mean that any of the banks are going to bust down there, but they are not flourishing with money.

Here is a buyer and here is a seller. Their interests are diametrically opposed. They have got very little in common. The buyer wishes to buy as cheaply as possible always, and the seller wishes to sell at the highest price obtainable all the time.

Senator RANSDELL. And the ultimate buyer in this country is the spinner?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir; he is the spinner. I am a buyer this minute and a seller the next. I am one of those horrible middlemen, and maybe I should be eliminated, and I will be whenever there is a cheaper way of handling the cotton crop than the present one; I will go by the board, and ought to go by the board.

Please listen to this:

The spinners, being much wealthier men, commanding much greater credit than any conceivable combination of farmers that I can think of, if we have no futures markets, the spinners could get together and make a combination of credits and would not pay very much for the commodity which they were trying to buy, because the speculator would not be in there. Maybe some man in India believes cotton is selling too cheap in the United States and he buys a lot of cotton here. That helps to stabilize the price.

Senator RANSDELL. Suppose the spinners were the only buyers, Mr. West, and they chose to get out of the market for a few weeks. What would happen then?

Mr. WEST. It would be just like it was in 1914. There would be no bottom to it.

Senator RANSDELL. Just like some other agricultural commodities—no bottom?

Senator KEYES. Then, I understand your position to be that they are really a protection to the grower?

That refers to these horrible exchanges that we hear so much about.

Mr. WEST. Positively.

Senator KEYES. It is a fact that they do not buy through the exchanges?

Mr. WEST. I should say that 98 per cent of the spinners, or 99 per cent of them, never take up a bale through the exchange, Senator. The exchange is simply an insurance association. It is a body politic. The cotton exchanges do not make money at all, just like you might belong to a church or something of that kind. It is just a trading place.

Senator RANSDELL. The spinners do use the exchange as an insurance to hedge? When a spinner wants a thousand bales of spot cotton six months in advance, he will go on the exchange and buy a thousand bales of future cotton for the time?

Mr. WEST. That is right.

Senator RANSDELL. To insure that he is going to get his spots at the price?

Mr. WEST. Mr. Chairman, I did not mean that the spinners did not use the exchanges as price insurance, but for the actual acquisition of their spot cotton which they spin they do not use it.

Senator KEYES. Yes; that is what I understood.

Mr. WEST. That is the way I understood your question.

Mr. President, without reading, I ask to have the remainder of the statement of Mr. West inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator Dial's bill, the one that he withdrew, and the one that he now wishes passed, I believe that is the thing we are talking particularly to-day——

Senator KEYES. Yes; also a bill introduced by Mr. CARAWAY.

Mr. WEST. Well, I was going to come to that.

Senator Dial's bill would have the same effect upon the marketing of cotton as if insurance companies with whom I have my fire insurance policies would say to me, "I will only insure certain qualities of your cotton against fire." Immediately my financial backers, my bankers, would want to know, "Well, what part of that cotton is insured? That is the cotton that we want to loan money on. We won't loan you any money on this other cotton that you can not get fire insurance on." That is, the whole thing is a question of insurance. A great many people don't believe in insurance. I think Senator CARAWAY does not believe in insurance. He told me that yesterday afternoon, that he had practically no insurance. We are able to get this price insurance to handle cotton on about as close a profit as possible, 1½ to 2 per cent, and out of that we have to pay everything. If I handle 50,000 bales of cotton in a year, at $2 a bale, and do $5,000,000 worth of business, if I make $50,000 a year on my business I am delighted and have done very well. People in the wholesale dry goods business, wholesale jobbers and grocers, who handle $5,000,000 worth of business, if they don't clear pretty near a million they feel like they have got a very hard deal. That is true in the State of Arkansas. I don't know about any place else. Without price insurance it would be impossible for us to do business on so small a margin.

Senator Dial misunderstands the functions of the future exchanges, I believe. He wishes to force everybody to trade on a modified form of section 10 of the Smith-Lever bill. Now, I am from the country, and before the passage of this Smith-Lever bill I felt that people in my position were at a very serious disadvantage many times. Under the present system I have just as much protection as anybody. The Government functions in this matter just as in any other law for the protection of the farmer, and the Smith-Lever bill is as much a protection for the farmer as for the cotton exchanges.

Mr. CARAWAY wishes in his bill to eliminate the speculator.

Senator RANSDELL. That would destroy the exchanges?

Mr. WEST. That would destroy the price underwriting feature of the cotton exchanges just as if you said to any insurance underwriter they could not any longer underwrite. To-day you get credit insurance from Lloyds. Is costs you pretty big, but you can get it. In 12 months' time they will guarantee the bank against loss under certain conditions.

Then we are attacked about this 100,000,000 bales traded in when only 10,000,000 bales are raised. You take the matter of fire insurance on that same number of bales, you will find it relatively about the same number as the 100,000,000 they speak of being traded in on the future exchanges, because every time I move a bale of cotton from one warehouse to another—buy it, for instance—when it is moved out of the warehouse that insurance policy is canceled out, and when it gets to my warehouse my policy covers it. When it gets to the depot my policy is canceled out, and another one takes effect when it gets on the railroad. Then, when it arrives at the compress at Little Rock the railroad policy is canceled out and the other policy takes effect at Little Rock. Then, when I sell that cotton, if it goes on the railroad again I cancel my Little Rock insurance and another policy takes it up, and so on, and it is carried right through. Each bale of cotton is insured, on an average, against fire, about six different times. There are 10,000,000 bales of cotton, and there are at least 60,000,000 bales insured against fire.

Senator RANSDELL. That is a very interesting fact. I did not realize that, but I see the truth of it.

Mr. WEST. Mr. Chairman, you asked for suggestions that would better the situation.

Senator KEYES. Yes. We would certainly be very glad to have them if you have any.

Mr. WEST. No. I must frankly admit that I am not intelligent enough to offer any constructive suggestions on this subject unless it would be to increase the number of grades deliverable on a contract rather than to decrease them. That is the interest of my State, because we are pretty far north, and our growing season is short. Our cotton is generally of poorer grade than the rest of the people's, with the exception of western Tennessee, Missouri, and northern Mississippi, possibly. That is the only suggestion I could make of that nature.

Another thing. We all know that uncertainty upsets confidence, and we have had this Smith-Lever bill as an excellent thing, but this business of putting a law in that changes your price insurance policy over night is very destructive of confidence in values. I think one thing that is the matter with the markets now—it has been sluggish for six weeks or more—one thing is the fear on the part of a lot of us that something drastic will be done in regard to futures, and our ability to get price insurance will be destroyed or so badly impaired that we won't be able to finance our business.

The head of the Arkansas Bankers' Association, president of one of the biggest banks in that State, told me that if this law passes there was not a firm that would do business in Arkansas in the cotton business that his bank would be willing to loan more than 40 per cent of the value of cotton or any other commodity which could not get price insurance which, in a very short time, would concentrate the cotton business into the hands of a very powerful, rich firm. People working way back in the woods, willing to work for a small profit, sort of keep the thing from getting into the hands of a very few people.

Senator RANSDELL. Mr. West, do you know of any very well-defined sentiment in your State for the passage of this Caraway bill or the Dial bill?

Mr. WEST. The only sentiment in my State is in opposition to both bills. I have heard no favorable expression about either.

Senator RANSDELL. But there is a decided opposition to them?

Mr. WEST. The very fact that I am here, sent here by my exchange to fight this thing.

Senator RANSDELL. Which is not a future exchange at all?

Mr. WEST. Not at all.

Senator RANSDELL. And you are not a member of any futures exchange?

Mr. WEST. Not at all. There is only one man a member of our spot exchange in Little Rock, Ark., that is a member of any futures exchange, and I think he is the only member of any futures exchange in the State of Arkansas.

Senator KEYES. He is a member, as I understand it, as an individual?

Mr. WEST. As an individual; yes, sir.

Senator KEYES. Not representing your exchange?

Mr. WEST. Not representing our exchange at all. Now, as I told you, 60 per cent of our membership are farmers.

Senator RANSDELL. That is, cotton farmers, men who produce cotton themselves?

Mr. WEST. Yes, siree.

Senator KEYES. Mr. West, do you agree with the previous witness that the passage of the proposed legislation, instead of benefiting the grower, would actually injure him?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir. I think he would be very much in the same predicament that he was in 1914, when there was no futures market. With price insurance I am ready to buy cotton every day at a pretty fair value, based on that price insurance, and without it I could not.

Senator RANSDELL. And there are a great many other people in your position, sir, ready to buy cotton every day, thereby furnishing buyers for the commodity?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir.

Senator RANSDELL. And without these exchanges you would not be buying?

Mr. WEST. I would not.

Senator RANSDELL. So there would be no people in the market purchasing the commodity, and without purchasers it would naturally go down, wouldn't it?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir. I agree thoroughly with the other witnesses in that respect. I think it is much better for the farmer. He gets a better price. He can market and does market, I believe, 60 or 75 per cent of his cotton in a very few months out of the year. The mills do not buy anything like that amount of cotton from the farmer at that time. Somebody must take up that slack. They must carry that stock of cotton just as a wholesaler carries a stock of dry goods, or whatever business he may be in. The reason he carries it is because he is convenient to the market, for his retailers to come in and buy from him. The farmer is selling from 60 to 70 per cent of his product in 90 days, and the world is using 100 per cent, or about 100 per cent of his product in 12 months. You can readily see what would happen to him without a lot of people taking up that slack in that time.

Mr. RANSDELL. To those Senators who have come in since I started, and did not hear what I have attempted to explain, I would like to say that I am opposing the effort of the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] to impose a tax of 50 cents for each $100 in value on contracts in grain and cotton. I will not go into an explanation, except to say that, in my judgment, if this tax is imposed, it will completely destroy the grain and cotton futures exchanges. I do not think they can exist, I do not think it will be possible for them to do the legitimate business which everyone admits they should do, and which forms decidedly the most important part of their functions, if this amendment were adopted. I think they would be absolutely destroyed.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] indicated in his address yesterday that nearly all the business of the exchanges was gambling. He said:

> Instead of about 50 per cent of them being wild, it would be safe to say that 999 out of every 1,000 deals are pure gambling.

I would not venture to set up my personal opinion against that of the Senator from Arkansas, but I would like to read just a line or two from the recent testimony of Mr. Marsh, former president of the New York Cotton Exchange, made before a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is chairman. Mr. Marsh was being questioned about the amount of the trading on these exchanges, in connection with a resolution looking into supposed troubles in cotton marketing. On page 201 of the printed hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the United States Senate, Seventieth Congress, first session, pursuant to Senate Resolution 142, a resolution to investigate the recent decline in cotton prices, appears the following:

Senator RANSDELL. Do you know what those proportions are in New Orleans?

Mr. MARSH. I do not, sir.

Senator SMITH. Now, I would like to emphasize for a moment what you have said, not to break the continuity of your statement. The proportion of the speculative operations on the New York Cotton Exchange, as revealed by proper investigations, is about 15 per cent, as compared to 85 per cent of the so-called legitimate hedging business; is that correct?

Mr. MARSH. That is correct, sir.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. In just one moment. I want to make a statement in regard to that, and then I will be glad to yield.

Mr. Clayton, who I believe is considered the head of the biggest cotton firm in America, also testified before the same subcommittee, and on page 760 of the hearings—April 11, 1928—he made this statement in reply to a question from Senator HEFLIN:

> Senator HEFLIN, I am very sorry to have to disagree with you on that. I think Mr. Marsh said that 80 to 85 per cent of the trading on the exchanges is legitimate trading, and that the other 15 to 20 per cent is speculative trading. I think Mr. Marsh has the speculative too small. But if the proposition is even 60 and 40 per cent, the futures markets are bound to reflect the prices that are struck as a result of that legitimate trading. Therefore, the futures markets do not fix the prices. They reflect the price which results from the legitimate factors.

From that evidence, and from all the investigation I have been able to make, legitimate trading constitutes a very large percentage of the transactions on the cotton exchanges, though there is a considerable speculative element. I am inclined to think, agreeing with Mr. Clayton, that the speculative part of these transactions is more than that stated by Mr. Marsh, although Mr. Marsh was for many years connected with and president of the New York Cotton Exchange, has been in the cotton business for many years, and had absolutely no motive to misrepresent that I can see, and is a recognized economist of high standing. He stated as his fixed opinion that 80 to 85 per cent of the transactions were legitimate hedging or price-insurance transactions, and only 15 to 20 per cent speculative.

I now yield to the Senator from Arkansas, if he wishes to ask a question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I just wanted to ask the Senator this question: About 6,000,000 bales of cotton is all that is consumed in the domestic market in this country per annum, is it not?

Mr. RANSDELL. I think it is rather more than that. I do not know just what it is this year.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is about that, I think the Senator will find. He will find that the speculative sales reach about 200,000,000 bales.

Mr. RANSDELL. Where will the Senator find that?

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator will send down to the Department of Agriculture they will send him up a statement of the number of sales day by day.

Mr. RANSDELL. I would rather the Senator would send for the statement, if he wants it. I do not know whether it is true or not. I do not think it enters into the argument at all. I do not admit the correctness of it, but it is immaterial.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have a letter here from the Bay State Milling Co., which has mills at Winona, Minn. It has its general offices in Boston. I just want to read a paragraph. This is dated May 9:

> Referring to my letters of April 30 and May 1, if you have not happened to see a summary of the trading in wheat futures alone in Chicago last week, you will be interested to know that the sales officially reported for the week were 478,000,000 bushels—

He is talking about wheat—> for each day, the sessions being three and three-fourths hours, except on Saturday, when it is two and one-half hours.

That was the trading each day in wheat.

> You will be further interested to know that the trading in corn futures during the week totaled approximately 225,000,000 bushels a day. Oats and rye have not exact figures. Approximately 50,000,000 bushels a day. Making a total of 750,000,000 bushels of grain futures traded in on the stock exchange of the Chicago Board of Trade.

In other words, they would sell the entire crop of grain in 10 days. That does not reach the high-water mark. I am credibly informed that in one day in Chicago at one time they sold as much wheat as was grown in America that year. How much of that necessarily would be gambling?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not know, and I doubt whether any other Senator can say. Some of the Senators from the grain States probably can tell something about that.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator would have a strong suspicion that there was a good deal of gambling, would he not?

Mr. RANSDELL. There may have been some speculating there. I do not admit that all these trades are gambling. A great many of them may be speculative. The Senator would perhaps call it gambling if a man were to go on the stock exchange and buy some of the stocks and bonds of the Radio Corporation, for instance, or of some of the railroads. I would not call it gambling. I grant you that in that instance he would have to pay the then market value of the property, but he would not buy it unless he thought he was going to make money on it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator this question: When a man sells that which he does not have and never expects to have to a man who never expects to take it and never does take it, and they simply settle on a difference, is that gambling?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not think it is gambling at all. I think it is a price-insurance contract.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Supreme Court of the United States said it was. The courts of every State in the Union, I think, have so stated, that wherever the settlement is made on a commercial difference it is a gambling contract, and void.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Federal courts have repeatedly held that such contracts are legal and enforcible.

Mr. CARAWAY. They have said that where there is a settlement on commercial differences, where the contract does not contemplate delivery, it is gambling.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator please put that in the RECORD, quote from the Supreme Court, and put it in along with his remarks?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will; but I wanted to know whether the Senator knew it.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am not supposed to know all the Supreme Court has said. I am not in the active practice of law, having given up the practice when I entered Congress 29 years ago. I do not keep up with their decisions. I have not seen such a decision as that. Will not the Senator please place it in the RECORD?

Mr. CARAWAY. Very well.

Mr. RANSDELL. Answering the question about the large volume of sales, I want to quote from a gentleman from the Senator's own State. I do not know whether the Senator stands by him or not, but I understand he is a good, reliable man, Mr. Sidney West.

Mr. CARAWAY. He lives in Louisiana.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. West stated before the committee that he lived in Arkansas; but if he is a Louisiana man, I am proud of it. If he was born and reared in Louisiana, I am proud of such a citizen; he is a very intelligent one.

Mr. CARAWAY. He did not go there until he became thoroughly imbued with the idea that the way to raise a crop was to go on the stock exchange. Then he went to Louisiana.

Mr. RANSDELL. Maybe he learned something wise from the people of Louisiana. This is what Mr. West said in testifying before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in regard to this awful amount of sales about which the Senator from Arkansas is talking:

> Mr. CARAWAY wishes in his bill to eliminate the speculator.
> Senator RANSDELL. That would destroy the exchanges?
> Mr. WEST. That would destroy the price-underwriting feature of the cotton exchanges, just as if you said to any insurance underwriter they could not any longer underwrite. To-day you get credit insurance from Lloyd's. It costs you pretty big, but you can get it. In 12 months' time they will guarantee the bank against loss under certain conditions.
> Then we are attacked about this 100,000,000 bales traded in when only 10,000,000 bales are raised. You take the matter of fire insurance on that same number of bales, you will find it relatively about the same number as the 100,000,000 they speak of being traded in on the future exchanges; because every time I move a bale of cotton from one warehouse to another—buy it, for instance—when it is moved out of the warehouse that insurance policy is canceled out, and when it gets to my warehouse my policy covers it. When it gets to the depot my policy is canceled out, and another one takes effect when it gets on the railroad. Then, when it arrives at the compress at Little Rock the railroad policy is canceled out and the other policy takes effect at Little Rock. Then, when I sell that cotton, if it goes on the railroad again I cancel my Little Rock insurance and another policy takes it up, and so on, and it is carried right through. Each bale of cotton is insured, on an average, against fire, about six different times. There are 10,000,000 bales of cotton, and there are at least 60,000,000 bales insured against fire.
> Senator RANSDELL. That is a very interesting fact. I did not realize that, but I see the truth of it.
> Mr. WEST. Then we are attacked about this 100,000,000 bales traded in when only 10,000,000 bales are raised.

That is the very point Senator CARAWAY is talking about. He says 200,000,000 now, but where he got the 200,000,000 I do not know. They might have traded in 10,000,000,000; I do not know; but I do like to have a man present statistics here and not mere statements.

Senators, there are as many or more legitimate hedges or insurances in the commercial transactions relating to cotton as there are insurances against fire relating to cotton. When a farmer sells to the local merchant, that is one hedge. When the local merchant sells to the big merchant, that is another. It goes on from one to another, one after another, until there are at least six or seven absolutely legitimate hedges on each bale of cotton.

I have stated that the effect of the bill would be to destroy the cotton exchange. What would be the effect of destroying the cotton exchange? If there be one criterion for the future, and only one, it is the fact that the lessons of the past instruct and tell us what is going to happen in the future. If I can show absolutely what happened in the past, then Senators can get from the same set of circumstances a pretty good idea about what will happen in the future.

All of us remember the terrible disastrous effect on cotton when the World War broke out in 1914 and the exchanges of the country were closed and ceased to operate. Cotton actually went down to 6 cents a pound. We had a "buy-a-bale" movement. It was away below the cost of production. The exchanges remained out of business or out of commission for three months. I have a number of clippings of articles from the press showing the solicitude of the people at that time. I shall not read them, but I ask permission to insert them in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROUSSARD in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The newspaper articles are as follows:

[Mobile (Ala.) Register, September 9, 1914]

Referring to the action of the committees at New York in trying to effect a settlement of contracts made before the war, the cotton-market report in the Mobile Register of September 9 says: "If a settlement of these contracts will open the way for the resumption of business by the exchanges it is 'a consummation devoutly to be wished,' as ever since the exchanges closed shippers, brokers, and manufacturers, as well as everyone else in any way interested in cotton, have been all at sea as to what cotton is worth. The lack of a broad, central market has resulted in an irregularity in prices such as the trade has never witnessed." (Reprinted from Pearsalls News Bureau, September 12, 1914.)

[Atlanta Constitution, September 12, 1914]

The chamber of commerce committee on ways and means to meet the cotton situation has taken steps to cut down the 1915 crop and materially improve the market for the present year's output. The committee also adopted a resolution urging the New York, New Orleans, and Liverpool Cotton Exchanges to open so a definite market price may be fixed on spot cotton for the benefit of the immediate market.

[Textile Manufacturers' Journal, September, 1914]

In any event it is only a wild speculation for mills to sell ahead without a cotton-futures market on which to hedge. If spot cotton should go below 7 cents there is no indication of what it would sell at for four months off, and unless mills can buy their full supply of raw cotton, to cover whatever futures business they should take, they might be caught with the cotton market against them later in the year. There is no doubt in the minds of dealers that the various movements that aim toward the holding or wider buying of cotton have shown direct results in the recent advance of 1½ to 2 cents per pound, but everywhere there is doubt cast upon the permanence of the new level. It is not remarkable that buyers doubt it, because they are always bears, but dealers themselves doubt it. Ginnings are far below the normal now, which indicates the holding of a large volume of cotton, but whether the immense pickings of October and November can so be held is another matter. Spinners are, however, learning the economic value of the cotton exchange. When the exchange was being condemned last spring, dealers said: "Let them close the exchanges with their laws and they will soon see how handicapped they are." The experience has been made and spinners realize how valuable is a futures hedge. (Reprinted from Pearsalls News Bureau, September 28, 1914.)

[New York Journal of Commerce, October 5, 1914]

A special London cable to the New York Journal of Commerce this morning says: "The disorganized cotton position is gradually producing a grave position in the Lancashire cotton industry. Hence demands are becoming insistent that there should be a full, unrestricted resumption of business on the Liverpool Cotton Exchange. There is slight evidence thus far that spinners are buying direct from America. The situation apparently is that spinners are loaded up with Liverpool contracts at high prices. They have hedged against these contracts in New York and New Orleans. On paper these hedges protect them fully against their severe losses on their home contracts. But owing to the closing down of business in America and the great financial risks incidental to covering American commitments under existing conditions, cotton manufacturers and traders are not likely to actively cover their commitments on your side until they have some relief from their losses on Liverpool contracts." (Reprinted from Pearsalls News Bureau, October 5, 1914.)

The absence of a contract market for hedge purposes is having a somewhat serious effect on the situation. Many cotton men hold the opinion that conditions will grow worse so long as the exchanges are closed. Bankers do not care to make full loans on cotton when the holder has no means of protecting such cotton by sales of contracts as hedges. One banker says that his institution would not loan a single dollar on cotton until the exchanges resumed and hedging was restored. Buyers are not allowed advances in the way of overdrafts unless they can show that the cotton for which they wish to pay has been sold. The banks want to be sure of immediate reimbursement if they are to put out their money for purchases of cotton.

Cotton can not be sold to the mills for later delivery without hedging facilities. No buyer here is able to secure actual cotton and carry it until December or January, even if he were willing to do so, because of financial conditions and because of the extreme risk involved. If the contract markets were open, however, many buyers would not hesitate to make sales for December or January shipment. Probably the people of the South never so fully realized the advantages of exchanges as at present. Certainly never before were they so anxious for the exchanges to be in operation.

[Governor O'Neal's address, Alabama State Exposition]

In his opening address at the grounds of the Alabama State Exposition at Montgomery Monday afternoon Governor O'Neal, of Alabama, declared, "The greed and avarice of the spinners of New England is directly responsible for the present condition in the cotton-growing States." He charged that the closing of their spindles at this time was merely for the purpose of creating panic prices for cotton in order that they might step into the market at the psychological moment and buy up their supply for this and next year at panic prices.

Governor O'Neal also said: "There is another thing that must be overcome in the minds of the general public. The people believe that cotton exchanges are merely gambling devices and gambling machines. That is not true. Cotton exchanges are absolutely necessary for the salvation of the cotton crops from year to year, and they and their existence are the salvation of the cotton planter. The teaching that cotton exchanges are gambling devices is wrong; we must recognize the vast importance they are to the cotton grower and encourage their reopening throughout the country." (Reproduced from Pearsall's News Bureau, October 15, 1914.)

[Textile Manufacturers' Journal, October 24, 1914]

The opening of the cotton exchange, it is believed, will exert a bullish influence on raw cotton, as there is bound to be a large amount of buying of hedges and for speculation. A futures market will afford mills a basis for contract work and will give advance orders a safer standing.

[New Orleans Times-Picayune, November 14, 1914]

With the cotton exchanges reopened for future trading the speculative public will be able to deal in the commodity and the producer will no longer be at the spinner's mercy. That the crop of 1914 is a very large one—the largest, perhaps, ever known—is a matter of common knowledge. It follows that several million bales must be carried until a short crop or greatly improved trade creates an imperative demand for the present surplus. That either one condition, or both, will arise sooner or later is absolutely certain unless all human experience is delusory. Even if 5,000,000 bales should have to be impounded in this way, the task would not prove difficult with the vast speculative public to help. With cotton readily salable, bankers will not hesitate to lend and the problem which was recently so acute will solve itself. It remains for the farmer to do his part. Speculation might carry the entire crop at a price, but at only a price low enough to bankrupt every son of the soil. The reopening of the exchanges does not necessarily mean that the price will rise, but only that there will henceforth be two possible buyers for each bale. The lesson has been frightfully expensive, to be sure, but lasting wisdom is not acquired "on the cheap."

One thing is certain, the futures markets will open with the people of this country in general holding a better opinion of their value and their economic worth more than has ever been entertained before. To put it in the mildest terms possible, the carrying on of the cotton trade during the last three months and a half without the aid of the large cotton exchanges and their future rings, and what used to be called "paper" cotton, has not been a satisfactory experience at all to everyone concerned. The attitude of the farmers has undergone such a complete change that at one of the most important of their gatherings they passed resolutions calling upon the exchanges to reopen as soon as possible. In Congress there now appears to be almost a unanimous desire to build up the futures trade rather than destroy it, and to attempt to destroy the cotton futures markets used to be the favorite performance of statesmen and near statesmen when they thought it necessary to play to the galleries. President Wilson even went so far a short time ago as to express his wish that the cotton exchanges should reopen as soon as possible. Futures trading is apparently entering upon a new phase of its existence.

Mr. RANSDELL. Here is just a brief quotation from the great cotton-producing State of Texas, from Cotton and Oil News, Dallas, Tex., September 17, 1914:

[Cotton and Cotton Oil News, Dallas, September 7, 1914]

The closing of the futures market has certainly eliminated the speculator or "gambler," as some are pleased to term the trader in cotton futures.

Some Congressmen and some agitators among southern cotton growers have long demanded that the speculator be eliminated. Well he has been eliminated, boots, breeches, and all. The exchanges have been closed, another demand of said agitators.

According to the claims and promises of these great reformers the southern cotton grower should now be reaping his profits. The mills would be buying direct from the farmers and paying the latter the big margins that erstwhile went to the exchanges and the gamblers, so called. But what do we see?

Even a blind man can see that the closing of the exchanges and the elimination of speculators have closed the cotton markets and have put the cotton grower entirely at the mercy of a few spot buyers for the mills. The cotton grower is forced to accept any price offered him.

The cotton mills are also handicapped since they can not go into the open market and buy cotton for future delivery by putting up a margin of about $5 per bale in cash, one-tenth of the value of cotton. Now that he is required to pay cash this buying power is paralyzed and he only purchases one-tenth the quantity of cotton he was able to buy when the exchanges were open and future trading possible.

Under these conditions there is no wonder that cotton has declined and keeps declining.

Our reformer friends among the farmers have simply been forced to take the physic they have been so long prescribing and it certainly should make them sick of silly and quack nostrums.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the Senator to say that at a certain time the exchanges were out of commission temporarily.

Mr. RANSDELL. On account of the war.

Mr. SIMMONS. And that during that period cotton fell to 6 cents a pound.

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes; it did.

Mr. SIMMONS. Was there anything in the amount of cotton produced in that year or in the amount of cotton goods consumed that year or in the international relations of this country that would have accounted for that tremendous drop?

Mr. RANSDELL. Not altogether. There was a large crop produced that year. As I recall, it was around 14,000,000 bales. The Senator will remember that there was such a dearth of shipping that we could not send our cotton across the sea. A great many of our men, ordinarily engaged in industry, were put into the service or at least we put them in the service in 1917. But I am talking about 1914. We all were on the qui vive. We feared the war would break out, and there were untoward conditions, but the stopping of the cotton exchanges completely closed all speculation in cotton. That is the point I am trying to reach.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. RANSDELL. Pardon me just a moment and then I shall be glad to yield. They completely stopped everything except the actual demand for the spot cotton. In spite of the war there were many people in this country with large sums of money who felt that cotton was too low at 6 or 7 or even 8 cents a pound who would have gone into the exchanges and bought cotton, if they could have done so, and who did go in as soon as the exchanges opened, and cotton began to come up immediately.

I now yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator will recall that the exchanges were not closed until cotton had reached about 6 cents. The war broke the price, which was 14 cents a pound, and it went down to the bottom like an iron wedge dropped in a well. When it was down there, the exchanges were dubious themselves about whether they could handle the situation. They were not very much opposed to the matter of withdrawing. The exchanges were not opposing very seriously the closing, which was because of World War conditions being so dreadful, and they were very uncertain as to what the future would bring forth. My recollection is that they were not closed until cotton had dropped, while they were still running, from 14 cents to 6 cents, or $40 a bale.

Mr. RANSDELL. I think the Senator is mistaken. The last quotations on the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, July 31, 1914, were as follows: January, 10.65; March, 10.75; May, 10.80; October 10.57; and December, 10.60. The quotations on the New York Cotton Exchange for the same date were as follows: October, 10.50; December, 10.75; January, 10.70; March, 10.79, and May, 11.10.

I have already placed in the RECORD quotations from several papers in which I think the Senator will be interested.

As I said before the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] returned to the Chamber, there has been agitation for 50 years to destroy these exchanges. I stated that my great predecessor in this Chamber, the late Edward Douglas White, made a wonderfully practical address in 1892, fighting the same kind of legislation as that before us now. I stated there had been argument after argument, debate after debate, effort after effort to destroy the exchanges. I read from the report of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the House of Representatives, which was headed by Mr. Lever, of South Carolina, in collaboration with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], when Mr. Wilson was President, in support of the Smith-Lever Cotton Futures Act, which I designated as a great piece of legislation. It was intended to cure certain bad practices in the exchanges.

No friend of the exchanges has ever said they were perfect. No friend of the exchanges says they are perfect now. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], in a most intelligent and comprehensive manner, has been conducting hearings to ascertain whether there are any troubles at the present time in the exchanges that can be cured by legislation. I have on my desk two bills which have been introduced, one by myself to prevent manipulation in cotton contracts and one by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to prevent manipulation in cotton contracts. The Congressman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] has a most comprehensive measure pending in the House to prevent manipulation in cotton contracts. All of those pieces of legislation are intended to correct what is recognized as an existing evil. But, Senators, the authors of none of these bills seek to destroy that great commercial agency which has been in existence in the country for nearly 60 years and which the ablest economists of the land have recognized as very beneficial to the cotton industry. If anyone can point out a better agency, then in heaven's name let him do so, and I for one will say "Thank you," and will push the exchange aside, if I can, by legislation, but not until something better is presented. In the meantime let us try by proper legislation to overcome what may seem to be bad.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I infer from the Senator's remarks that he interpreted my interrogation of a few moments ago as having been made in a spirit of hostility.

Mr. RANSDELL. Not at all. I thought the Senator too wise a man to favor such legislation as this is supposed to be. His record is too well established in the Senate for me to suppose any such thing as that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I must confess that I am not familiar with the technique of the subject. I think the Senator from Louisiana is. I think the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is. I am very glad for Senators to have the benefit of the discussion of this question by both of the able and learned Senators to whom I have referred.

I agree with the Senator that legitimate hedging, and that is the only kind of hedging I know anything about, is not speculation. The object of hedging, as I understand it, is to secure a guaranty by a perfectly reliable and solvent person or institution that one's cotton or corn or wheat will be worth so much at a given time.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator is right.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is its object.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is correct, to insure it just like one would insure his house against fire.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is an insurance and a guaranty, and nothing else.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is all.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is not speculation, if that is correct.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is my idea. Of course, some people may speculate. Some may go into the exchange who are not actually hedging, but are merely speculating.

Mr. SIMMONS. A policy of insurance against fire is pure speculation on the subject of whether there will be a fire.

Mr. RANSDELL. Absolutely.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know of any cotton dealer who does not, when he buys a large lot of cotton, feel that safety and prudence require that he shall hedge against loss. I think nearly all the spinners of the country do the same thing, and I do not think they do it in a spirit of speculation at all. They do it because they want to stabilize the price of their own product, and in that way they can stabilize it by being guaranteed against a certain fluctuation in the price of the raw material out of which they produce it.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator is entirely right; they can not stabilize it in any other way.

Mr. SIMMONS. I agree with the Senator thus far, and I say that the number of bales of cotton that are actually produced in excess of the demand of the cotton mills does not measure the extent of the legitimate transactions in cotton. We have got to take in these other transactions that do not contemplate actual delivery, but contemplate a guaranty of a certain price. When those are taken in, I think we shall have taken in a large part—I do not know how much; I have never estimated it; the Senator from Louisiana probably has the proportion; but I think it will be a considerable part, to say the least—of the transactions that take place on the exchanges. That is the only place where we can go to get this guaranty.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. Eliminate that and we should have no place to go to get it, and no person and no institution or corporation to which we might go.

Mr. RANSDELL. Certainly; it is the only cotton insurance association that we have. We can not go to a fire insurance company, for they will not give the guaranty to us; we can not go to a life insurance company, for they will not do so. The cotton exchanges are the price insurance associations, just as Lloyd's in England is the great marine insurance association; they are of the same character.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I was very much interested in the statement of the Senator from Louisiana a little while ago about the tremendous drop in the price of cotton that occurred while the operations of the cotton exchanges were suspended. I asked the Senator the question I did because if there was no circumstance connected with the production of cotton in that year, or in the general domestic and foreign uses of cotton, the figures the Senator gave were very convincing. I asked him the question for the purpose of ascertaining those facts. Now, what I am interested in hearing the Senator upon is this: If we shall destroy the cotton exchange, for the same reason we should destroy the wheat exchange; for the same reason we should destroy any speculative organization in stock and bonds; for the same reason we should destroy or discourage, whichever the case may be, by placing upon it a handicap or a burden dealing in livestock on the stock exchanges of the country, especially in Chicago. If all of those exchanges as a result of that burden that we place upon them or propose to place upon them, are destroyed—I do not say they will be, but if they are destroyed—what will be the effect upon the standardization, if I may use that term, of prices?

People produced in the hope of securing a certain price; that is certainly true of certain lines, for instance, in the manufacturing industry, and it ought to be true in the growing of cotton, but circumstances are such that it can not be altogether so. However, if we destroy these exchanges, will we or will we not bring about a state of chaos as to prices in this country? When we want to know the price of hogs, we go to Chicago to find the price. When we want to know the price of cotton, we go to the quotations of the New York market.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me just a moment?

Mr. RANSDELL. I decline to yield. I will yield to the Senators one at a time.

Mr. CARAWAY. I merely want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. RANSDELL. I decline to yield to any other question until the pending one is disposed of.

Mr. SIMMONS. If these institutions from which we get our quotations of prices shall be destroyed, then what will be the condition with respect to prices generally in this country? Will they not depend almost entirely upon local conditions? Will the price be reflected by world conditions to any particular extent?

Mr. RANSDELL. Is that the Senator's question?

Mr. SIMMONS. That is my question. What I fear is it might bring about a general collapse of stable prices in the products of this country. I am not expressing an opinion definitely one way or the other, but I want to hear the Senator, who, I think, has given a great deal of study to this question.

Mr. RANSDELL. I thank the Senator for his courteous question, and I will endeavor to answer it as well as I can.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] tells me privately that there is no future market with reference to hogs and livestock.

Mr. RANSDELL. He is right; but there is a future market with reference to the products of hogs, lard, and so forth.

Mr. SIMMONS. Possibly the Senator from Arkansas is right about that technically.

Mr. RANSDELL. There is no future market in hogs themselves on the foot, but there is in the products of hogs.

Mr. SIMMONS. But it is a fact that the livestock market in Chicago fixes the price upon livestock, whether hogs or cattle.

Mr. RANSDELL. Not on the foot but in the finished product.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought it was also on the animal itself.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not so understand, but of course the price of the animal is gauged by the price of the finished product.

Mr. SIMMONS. Probably it is; they fix it by the price of the finished product, and the price which they fix is the price at which that product is now being sold throughout this country.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is right.

Mr. SIMMONS. To illustrate: I know something about the hog business; at one time we started, in certain sections of my State at least, a great movement to raise hogs, but when we had raised them we had no market for them; we found we could not sell them; the local demand would not take the product. Certain local concerns, one located in Richmond, advertised that they would pay for any number of hogs that might be brought to them the Chicago price. That meant the price fixed on the Chicago stock market, I presume.

Mr. RANSDELL. The price as reflected on that exchange.

Mr. SIMMONS. That price, as I have reason to believe, was very much in excess of the local price at which the hogs were selling in my community and in my section of the State.

Mr. RANSDELL. Of course, it would be necessary to add transportation charges.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, transportation charges would be added. The result was that, although the movement for the raising of hogs had been halted by the fact that there was no local demand, when the producers found a market in which they could sell their hogs for a fixed price, the industry was revived and became a very extensive one and is to-day a very extensive one in that section of the country. The hogs are brought to a certain distributing point; they are there placed on cars and sent to Richmond, Va., and sold at a staple price. That has been a very great encouragement to the production of livestock in my State.

Mr. RANSDELL. And the Richmond people gave a price based upon the Chicago market.

Mr. SIMMONS. Exactly.

Mr. RANSDELL. Now, I will try to answer the Senator's question applying it to cotton. In the first place, the cotton exchanges do not make the prices but merely reflect them; the transactions between the buyers and sellers of the world are reflected on the exchange; a record is kept of them, and every morning in the State of the Senator from North Carolina those who buy cotton and who deal in cotton, be they mills or cotton merchants, receive quotations from the New York market, the Chicago market—I am speaking about the Chicago cotton market now—and the New Orleans market.

Those markets in turn get quotations from every place in the United States and abroad where cotton is bought and sold. Those cotton exchanges are clearing houses for the whole world, and they reflect the prices at which cotton is dealt in. They are in close touch with European countries which consume our product. They are in close touch with the great Liverpool exchange, with the Bremen exchange, with the Havre exchange, and I believe there is one in Alexandria, Egypt. They are in the closest touch with the cotton-consuming public of all the world. They know from the reports how much cotton is on hand everywhere on earth, and how much cotton is needed for the mills everywhere on earth. They deal with the situation in a broad, comprehensive way.

Suppose we did not have these exchanges. How could the intelligent people of New Bern, N. C.—that is, the Senator's home, I believe—know whether there was a shortage of cotton in Egypt and in India and in Russia and in Africa and in South America? What would they be able to tell about it? It costs a great deal of money and effort, and requires a trained organization to get all these facts, to collate all these facts, to bring them into scientific, intelligent computations and put them before the world. Otherwise they could not tell anything about it. Therefore, a local condition would exist in New Bern, and some of the buyers there might say, "Well, we do not know. There is a mighty small crop here in North Carolina. I believe cotton is going to go up," let us say at the present time, "to 24 cents a pound, and I am going to buy all I possibly can." But there may be conditions somewhere else in the world which would induce the same men to feel that it would be risky to pay any more than to-day's market on that cotton. Or the farmer might say, "There is a very good crop here in North Carolina, and I believe cotton is going to go down." But from the information gathered by the exchanges, which is, of course, available to producers as well as consumers, he learns that there is a shortage of cotton elsewhere in the world, which enables him to avoid sacrificing his crop. In fact, they would not know what to-day's market is without this service of the exchanges.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I understand the Senator to say that if the cotton exchanges are permitted to exist, the price of cotton will be substantially the same from one end of the United States to the other?

Mr. RANSDELL. Absolutely.

Mr. SIMMONS. But if we destroy them the price of cotton may be one thing in one State and another thing in another State?

Mr. RANSDELL. It actually was during the time when we did not have the exchanges.

The Senator was just about to ask me if such a state of affairs would not have a bad effect on the price of cotton, as I understood his question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I meant to ask this question: The Senator stated that as a result of the cotton exchanges establishing prices, the price of cotton was the same in every part of the United States.

Mr. RANSDELL. Substantially—leaving out of consideration transportation charges, of course.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; omitting those from the question altogether, as a matter of course. Now, if the institution which has brought about this condition is destroyed, or is so handicapped by taxation that it can not function, would it not follow that the price of cotton would range differently in different sections of the country, in different States, and possibly in different sections of the same State?

Mr. RANSDELL. It surely would. Another thing, Mr. President, I do not know that the Senator from North Carolina heard the first part of my argument. In the first part of it I tried to show that the speculators, by going into the market, had a steadying and a buoying effect on it.

Suppose cotton is pretty low, as I tried to say, when we did not have the exchanges, in the World War. It went down to 6 cents a pound. There were a great many people in the United States who knew that cotton was intrinsically worth a good deal more than 6 cents. They might have to hold it for a year or two, but they knew it could not be produced at 6 cents. There were no exchanges for three months on which they could buy cotton. They were closed. Of course these speculators who lived in Paris, London, Brussels, Rome, Madrid, Calcutta, Tokyo, or some other place, could not go down into North Carolina and buy the actual spot cotton. They could say, however, "Cotton is too low; I am going to load up"; and they would load up; and as soon as the exchanges began to operate they began to buy cotton and buy cotton and buy cotton; and that immediately steadied the price, and it went up and up and up. It was a wonderfully steadying factor and raised the price materially, to the benefit of the producer.

Mr. President, what makes prices? Demand for the product. There may be a great supply of anything, but if there be no demand you can not get much for that product. In addition to the legitimate hedging which I tried to describe and which, according to Mr. Marsh, former president of the New York Cotton Exchange, constitutes from 80 to 85 per cent of all the business on the exchange, there is a considerable speculative element; and I do not know that it is wrong to speculate. I have done some speculating in real estate myself at times. I paid only a little money down. I have speculated in various things. I would make a small cash payment and get credit on the balance, hoping that the product would go up and I could sell it at a nice little profit.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not understood the Senator as antagonizing the elimination, if it were feasible, of purely speculative dealing in cotton or any other agricultural product. I think everybody is agreed that if there is any way by which that can be done without at the same time destroying these exchanges, or placing upon them such a serious handicap as would probably prevent their functioning as they should in the interest of business and in the interest of maintaining and stabilizing and steadying prices in the country, we ought to adopt that legislation, if anybody can present it here in a form that will be accepted as accomplishing that purpose and not going farther than that. I understood, however, that the Senator was making the point that if this heavy burden were placed upon a part of the operations of cotton exchanges, it would probably destroy the exchanges.

Mr. RANSDELL. Not only in my judgment, Mr. President, but in that of a great many others, it would have that result. I understand that as a practical proposition you can not use them for the legitimate insurance business without the possibility of their being used for speculation. It is all so blended that you can not separate it. The exchanges would be destroyed if a tax of this kind, which amounts to $50 a contract, were imposed. It would completely destroy the exchanges, both grain and cotton.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that the purpose of the Senator from Arkansas is to prevent, by imposing a tax, these speculative transactions on exchanges. The question to my mind is whether he has not fixed the penalty so high that it might possibly be too serious, and might accomplish more than he has in view.

Mr. RANSDELL. As I understand, in trying to cure the disease he would kill the patient.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know whether that would be so or not.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is absolutely so, in my judgment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that to be the contention of the Senator.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is my contention, without a doubt.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think it is a very serious question.

Mr. RANSDELL. And does not the Senator think we ought to go very slowly in destroying or in endangering a great agency of commerce that has existed for nearly 60 years, that is used so extensively by so many people engaged in the agricultural business? Unless we are certain we are right, had we not better go slowly? Had we not better follow the lead of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], for instance, in the bill which he has just introduced to-day seeking to correct some possible evils? Had we not better follow the bill which I introduced, seeking to correct similar evils; or the bill which the Congressman from Georgia introduced, seeking to correct some evils instead of destroying the whole thing, instead of pulling down the house on its inmates?

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that that is the question in difference between the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Louisiana. The Senator from Arkansas contends that it will not destroy the exchanges. I do not understand it to be his object and his purpose to destroy the exchanges. The Senator from Louisiana contends that it will. That is where I want enlightenment.

Mr. RANSDELL. If I may just put it in this way, the difference between the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Louisiana is this: The Senator from Louisiana stands by the existing institutions, by something that has been used for years and years and years. The Senator from Arkansas wants to destroy them. He wants to put in something else. "He who asserts must prove" is a principle of law with which the great Senator from North Carolina certainly is familiar. I am not seeking to do anything here except to maintain the status quo; that is all. I do not want to do a thing but let these exchanges alone. Is not that a different position from his? I think it is very different.

Now I want to proceed, because I have taken up too much time already. I was trying to place in the RECORD some newspaper statements about the condition in 1914. I will read just one or two very brief ones, and will ask to put the others in the RECORD without quoting them.

I had just read this sentence:

Some Congressmen and some agitators among southern cotton growers have long demanded that the speculator be eliminated. Well, he has been eliminated—boots, breeches, and all. The exchanges have been closed, another demand of said agitators.

According to the claims and promises of these great reformers the southern cotton grower should now be reaping his profits. The mills would be buying direct from the farmers and paying the latter the big margins that erstwhile went to the exchanges and the gamblers, so called. But what do we see?

Mind you, this is a great Texas paper. There are no future exchanges in Texas.

Even a blind man can see that the closing of the exchanges and the elimination of speculators have closed the cotton markets and have put the cotton grower entirely at the mercy of a few spot buyers for the mills.

I hope every Senator who contemplates voting for this amendment will consider that sentence.

Mr. President, without reading, I ask to be permitted to place in the RECORD the statements of two Secretaries of Agriculture in opposition to this identical bill, or a bill so near it that it is just as dangerous—Secretaries Wallace and Jardine—both addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, expressing the utmost opposition to this bill and saying that it would not be right to pass it.

Here is the closing sentence of Mr. Jardine:

In the meantime, it—

That is, his department—

feels that the hedging function of the future exchanges is of real necessity in the present-day developments of our markets for cotton and grain, and that it should not be destroyed until other means of accomplishing the same end are discovered and established.

May I have the privilege of putting these statements in the RECORD?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, January 25, 1924.

Hon. G. W. NORRIS,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR NORRIS: In compliance with the request of the clerk of your committee, I submit herewith the department's comment on S. 626, entitled "A bill to prevent the sale of cotton and grain in future markets."

The general purpose of the bill is to prevent the offering to make, or the making, of any contract for the purchase or sale of cotton or grain for future delivery, without intending that such cotton or grain shall be actually delivered or received, and to impose upon the purchaser of such a contract the obligation to accept delivery. To accomplish this purpose the seller is required, before transmitting any message offering to make or enter into such a contract, to furnish an affidavit stating among other things his intention to deliver such cotton or grain, and the buyer is required to furnish an affidavit that he has the intention to receive and to pay for such cotton or grain. It penalizes with fine or imprisonment any person sending or causing to be sent any message offering to make or enter into a prohibited contract and any person owning or operating any telephone or telegraph line, wireless telegraph, cable, or other means of communication, or any agent of such person, who knowingly uses or allows such property to be used for the transmission of a prohibited message. It also prohibits the use of the mails for carrying any written or printed matter tending to induce or promote the making of a prohibited contract and penalizes any person who knowingly uses the mails for the transmission of such matter, or any person who knowingly takes or causes such matter to be taken from the mails for the purpose of circulating or disposing of it.

The bill is based upon the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce.

During the past 50 years many bills have been introduced in Congress which would prohibit the sale or purchase of contracts for the future delivery of grain or cotton not providing for the actual delivery thereof. None of these drastic bills passed, because evidently Congress reached the conclusion that such legislation would substantially impair, if it would not actually destroy, the valuable hedging facility which is furnished by the making of the vast number of contracts on and through the exchanges in which deliveries are contemplated rather than actually assured. In rejecting these bills it seems that Congress wisely refused to deprive the producers, the merchants, and the manufacturers of these farm products of the benefit of this insurance against price fluctuations. However, congressional study of the subject matter led to the passage of laws designed to regulate and supervise future trading in cotton and grain, for the purpose of eliminating excessive speculation, market manipulation, dissemination of false information, and other known injurious practices which attended the operation of exchanges in the conduct of their business in future trading. The legislative thought on this subject crystallized into the cotton futures act and the grain futures act.

Since the passage of the cotton futures act in 1914, its reenactment in 1916, and its amendment in 1919, it may fairly be claimed that the quotations for cotton have more accurately reflected the value of spot cotton than was previously the case. As the future quotations have functioned on the value of spot cotton, the market has offered a better opportunity for the making of hedges than was previously the case, when futures sold at a much larger discount compared with spots. The requirement which the act makes of settlement on ascertained commercial differences, rather than on arbitrary differences which were fixed by the exchange rules, has resulted in settlements of such contracts which are much fairer to the buyer. Since ascertainment of commercial differences and the classification of cotton by the department there has been much less opportunity for unfair manipulation of the future market by powerful traders. Practically all interests directly concerned in future trading in cotton agree that the law has been of great benefit, and many of those which formerly strenuously opposed the enactment of the law have accepted it and are operating under it without complaint.

The grain futures act of September 21, 1922, comprehensively places under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture the exchange whereon there is future trading in grain. It prohibits the dissemination by an exchange of any of its members of false, misleading, or inaccurate reports concerning crop or market information or conditions that affect or tend to affect the price of commodities, and prohibits manipulation of prices or the cornering of grain by the dealers or operators on the exchanges. This requires the keeping of memoranda and the filing of reports with the Secretary of Agriculture showing the details and terms of all transactions entered into on the board. The Secretary now requires that such reports be made daily. The law has not been in force long enough fully to demonstrate its effect. It is apparent, however, that it has resulted in restraining the dissemination of false or misleading market information, the manipulation of prices, and corners, and has had and is having a stabilizing influence upon the price of grain in that it seems that violent price fluctuations have disappeared. The law has been very helpful, notwithstanding exchange resentment, which has hindered and delayed the full accomplishment of its purpose. While this act permits the buying and selling of contracts for the future delivery of grain under the rules of the exchange which do not provide for actual delivery, nevertheless it has and will restrain the excessive selling or purchasing of such contracts on the part of powerful sinister interests.

Therefore, I am inclined to believe that Congress should give the grain futures act and also the cotton futures act more time to demonstrate their worth before it resorts to far-reaching legislation proposed by S. 626, because I am convinced that the insurance facility is of great value and is largely dependent for its existence upon public speculation in grain and cotton contracts, and this hedging privilege should not be destroyed until these industries find some better way to insure themselves against price fluctuations.

In view of the foregoing considerations, it has not been thought advisable to enter upon a discussion of the legal phases of the bill.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY C. WALLACE, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, January 13, 1926.

Hon. G. W. NORRIS,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR NORRIS: In accordance with your letter of December 9, I wish to submit the department comment on S. 454, entitled "A bill to prevent the sale of cotton and grain in future markets."

This bill, which is based upon the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, is intended to prevent the sale of cotton or grain for future delivery without intending actual delivery of the product and to impose upon the purchaser the obligation to accept delivery. The seller is required before transmitting any message offering to enter into such a contract to furnish an affidavit stating, among other things, his intention to deliver the product and the buyer is required to furnish an affidavit that he intends to receive and to pay for such cotton or grain. It penalizes any person sending or causing to be sent any message offering to make or enter into a prohibited contract and any person owning or operating any telephone or telegraph line, wireless telegraph, cable, or other means of communication, or any agent of such person, who knowingly uses or allows such property to be used for transmission of prohibited messages. It likewise prohibits the use of the mails for carrying any written or printed matter tending to promote the making of prohibited contracts and penalizes persons who use the mails for the transmission of such matter or any person who knowingly takes or causes such matter to be taken from the mail for the purpose of circulation.

From time to time a great many bills have been introduced to prohibit the purchase and sale of contracts for the future delivery of agricultural products not providing for actual delivery thereof. Congress, however, evidently concluded that such legislation would impair or destroy the hedging facilities which are furnished through trading on the exchanges, and thus far it has refused to deprive the producers, merchants, and manufacturers of these farm products of the benefit of such insurance against price fluctuations.

Study of the subject matter, however, has led to the passage of laws providing for the regulation and supervision of future trading in cotton and grain for the purpose of eliminating undue speculation and other injurious practices which had crept into the business of future trading.

You will recall that the cotton futures act, which was first passed in 1914, was reenacted in 1916 and amended in 1919. It is believed that the cotton futures markets now offer better opportunity for the making of hedges than was previously the case. The requirement which the act makes of settlement on ascertained commercial differences rather than on arbitrary differences which were fixed by the exchange rules has resulted in settlements of such contracts which are much fairer to the buyer. Since ascertainment of commercial differences and the classification of cotton by the department, there has been much less opportunity for manipulation. Practically all interests concerned in future trading in cotton agree that the law has been of great benefit.

The grain futures act regulates to some extent trading in grain futures. It prohibits such transactions unless (a) the seller actually owns or is the grower of the grain or either party to the transaction is the owner or renter of land on which the grain is to be grown or is an association of such owners, growers, or renters, or (b) the contract is made by or through a member of a board of trade which has been designated as "a contract market." One of the conditions precedent to such designation is that the governing board shall make provision against manipulation of prices and the cornering of grain. The act requires the keeping of memoranda and the filing of reports with the Secretary of Agriculture showing the details and terms of all transactions entered into on the contract markets. It prohibits the dissemination by any person of false, misleading, or inaccurate reports concerning crops or market information or conditions that tend to affect the price of grain. While the law has not been in force very long, it is believed that its enforcement has had a wholesome effect.

Some of our best-known economists have pointed out that future trading is a field which, though large and important, has had comparatively little economic exploration. It is my feeling when called upon to consider any question connected with our future markets that intelligent disposition would be much facilitated if there were more sound information available.

In the administration of the two statutes above mentioned, the department is actively studying the available data, with the hope of being able to offer from time to time suggestions of a more constructive nature for the treatment of problems of this kind. In the meantime, it feels that the hedging function of the future exchanges is of real necessity in the present-day developments of our markets for cotton and grain, and that it should not be destroyed until other means of accomplishing the same end are discovered and established.

Sincerely yours,

W. M. JARDINE, Secretary.

Mr. RANSDELL. Just a few words more. I have a statement prepared by me in regard to the legality, the unconstitutionality of this provison, that I should like to put in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The legal advisor of the Department of Agriculture has expressed the opinion that the drastic provisions contained in section 2 of this bill are unconstitutional. It is true that the solicitor was discussing the Candler bill introduced in the Sixty-third Congress (1913–1915) when he wrote that opinion, but I have gone to the trouble of comparing section 2 of the Caraway bill with section 2 of the Candler bill and they are identical, even down to the punctuation, with this exception: In the Caraway bill the words "or grain" are added wherever cotton is referred to, and the penalty is increased from $1,000 to $10,000. Therefore the opinion of the legal advisor of the Department of Agriculture applies to this bill. Here is what he has to say about section 2:

"Under the bill, as drawn, the prohibition in section 2 extends to the sending of messages by telegraph, telephone, wireless telegraph, cable, and other means of communication. It is not clear just what the phrase 'other means of communication' would include. Under the rule of ejusdem generis it would probably be construed as confined to any possible agencies of communication, other than three specifically mentioned, which are based on, or which apply the scientific principles of, the telegraph and telephone. But if the phrase be held to include such means of communication as railroads and boats, which carry corporeal objects instead of intangible messages, there is, at least, a doubt as to the validity of the proposed legislation when applied to such other means of communication. This doubt arises primarily out of certain statements of the United States Supreme Court in Paul v. Virginia (8 Wall. 168) and cases following it.

"It is firmly established that contracts of insurance are not transactions of interstate commerce which are subject to regulation by Congress under the commerce clause of the Constitution. Paul v. Virginia (8 Wall. 168); Hooper v. California (155 U. S. 548); New York Life Insurance Co. v. Cravens (178 U. S. 389). Likewise, contracts for the sale of an article for future delivery are not, in themselves, transactions of interstate commerce if they do not oblige the transportation of anything from one State, Territory, or District to another State, Territory, or District of the United States. (Ware & Leland v. Mobile County, 209 U. S. 405.) However, in Paul v. Virginia (8 Wall. 183) the court, in the course of its opinion, goes further than to hold that the contracts involved were not in themselves transactions of interstate commerce, and says:

"'These contracts are not articles of commerce in any proper meaning of the word. They are not subjects of trade and barter offered in the market as something having an existence and value independent of the parties to them. They are not commodities to be shipped or forwarded from one State to another and then put up for sale.'

"Because of what has been held in the cases referred to, and particularly because of what was said in the extract just quoted, there is some doubt as to whether the Supreme Court would hold that, under the commerce clause, Congress is empowered to regulate the physical transportation of a written or printed contract or offer to make such contract, which is not itself the subject of interstate commerce."

Nor was the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture beating a new path in the mazes of law when he took a stand regarding the unconstitutionality of this bill. He was in distinguished company; and perhaps the most eminent of all the jurists who viewed this class of legislation as he did was the late Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, Hon. Edward Douglas White. Prior to his elevation to the highest court of the land he had served here as a Senator from my State, and it was while opposing almost identical legislation as this that he made the constitutional argument on the floor of the Senate which attracted the attention of President Cleveland and the bench and bar of the country to his remarkable ability.

That great address has taken its place among the legal classics of America and the words in which he concluded it are as true to-day as when he uttered them. I do not think this committee, in deciding upon the fate of this measure, could do better than to ponder them. Here they are:

"Suppose we do pass the bill and strike the present business methods down, what good is it going to do? Is there not a cotton exchange where futures are dealt in at Liverpool? Are they not on the continent of Europe? Did not just a few days ago a gentleman send me the charter of the organization of a great exchange in the city of Hamburg for the purpose of conducting this business of futures in cotton? Did he not send me a letter from a German merchant saying that they had noticed the intention to strike down the business here, and they hoped it would come to them?

"Is there not a cotton exchange at Alexandria, in Egypt? Does not both the Egyptian and the Indian crop move under the operation of laws of future delivery? Without that system I have shown that the disparity between the American price and English price is large. With the system I have demonstrated that the disparity diminished until there has been an average gain to the producers of this country of over a cent a pound. I am unwilling by my vote here to transfer this vast sum of money out of the pockets of the people of the cotton States into the pockets of the people of Great Britain."

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, without attempting to discuss the matter longer, I hope Senators will bear in mind that this legislation is really to carry into effect the measure which has been pending for a great many years, the bill which is now pending before the Senate and has a preference place on our calendar following the Boulder Dam bill, and it will probably be discussed for days when it comes up; because, when you seek to destroy the existing order, when you do something which will break up and completely put out of business hundreds—I started to say thousands and thousands—of business firms in every part of this country, you should not do that without long and careful consideration.

It would be almost criminal to take such radical action as contemplated by this amendment unless certain of the ground. If it be right, in heaven's name let us do it. If we are going to better the condition of agriculture, which certainly is now to a great extent in the slough of despond, I say in heaven's name let us pass the legislation, regardless of whom it may affect. But until we are certain, I beg of Senators not to vote in favor of this destructive piece of legislation, which offers nothing constructive in lieu thereof.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I am conscious of the fact that there is not much gained by bandying opinions as to what the effect of any piece of legislation will be, but I am persuaded that there is one thing that is true. There is a contention on the part of the Senator from Louisiana that future markets can raise prices. He said, when they were destroyed in 1914, the price went down. If they can raise the price, they can lower the price. That is an admission of all we have ever said, that the future markets are not a reflection of world conditions, but permit the gamblers to fix the price of a product that he does not produce. Nobody need argue that the future market can raise the price and then say that it could not lower it, because if it can influence it one way it can influence it both ways.

The Senator from Louisiana admits all we have ever said. The difference, then, between him and me is this: He says the exchange is a good thing because it can raise the price if it wants to. I say that it is a bad thing because it permits people who are gambling in the products of other people's toil to influence the prices of products they have nothing to do with creating. He admits that in his statement.

If anybody who knows enough to find his way to the paying teller's desk should insist that the question of closing the markets in 1914 had anything to do with the deranged conditions of commerce, he would at least do himself some justice if he would go and look into the matter of what at that time destroyed all our foreign commerce. The condition then affected just as much things that were to be sold in Europe, that are not dealt in on the cotton and grain exchanges, as it affects those things that were dealt in on those exchanges. That result followed the closing of the sea, when it was not yet known whether Germany and the Central Powers or Great Britain would control the seas. Therefore any shipment that started out was likely to be seized. Of course, all foreign commerce stopped, and everybody knows that 65 per cent of the cotton grown in America has to find a market in Europe. In the face of these facts, to say that the closing of the stock exchange has a thing to do with the cotton market puts a strain on our credulity.

The Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Louisiana spoke of fixing the price of hogs on future markets. There is not a future market for hogs. The Senator now can not find out to save his immortal soul what a hog is going to sell for on the Chicago market in the morning. There is no way of finding out. The market opens as the traders open it, and there is no future market anywhere for hogs. The Senator says there is a future market in the products. If there is, it does not control the market of hogs, because they do not undertake to say what the market is to be for hogs to-morrow or the next day or the next. Yet that is about as pat an argument as anything else, an argument dealing with hogs on a future market for cotton.

Mr. President, the only difference on this question is this: Had you rather the people who gamble prosper than the people who produce the cotton prosper? That is all there is in it. Any man with any learning may refine as much as he wants, but he is finally going to vote for one crowd or the other, and he is not going to deceive anybody by his vote. He is going to say, "I would rather the gamblers in Wall Street, in Chicago on the grain exchange, or in New Orleans on the cotton exchange, should prosper, than that the people who produce the bread and meat and clothes we wear should prosper."

I know beyond any cavil, and everybody knows, that speculation to a certain extent influences the prices of products that the people produce. If it did not, here is one thing that is so conclusive that it does not need any argument: You can go to the cotton exchanges to-day and buy a hundred million bales of cotton if you want to do it, American cotton, and every living idiot on earth knows there is not a hundred million bales of American cotton in the world, and will not be, in all human, probability, in the next five years. Yet people will undertake to sell it to you for July or August or September, or whatever the delivery months are.

I know that a man who sells that which he has not to somebody who does not expect to take it, and, more than that, who sells what is not in existence and never will be in existence is one of two things—he is a man who has some means to influence the price when delivery date comes on which he is going to settle, or he is an idiot, and since he has money, and idiocy and money do not dwell long together, we are forced to conclude that he has some way to influence the price on delivery date, and thereby be the beneficiary of a gambler's market.

There would not be anybody rash enough to sell 200,000,000 bales of cotton in a year when there will not be 13,000,000 made, if he thought there was any way of making him deliver, or suffer for not delivery. He must know how to manipulate.

Gentlemen talk about the exchange being a place where cotton is delivered. The Senator has referred to Mr. Clayton, who I believe is about the keenest gambler in futures I have ever seen. He was so smart that he has brought down the gambling fraternity on his head because he did not play the game according to the rules. He not only skinned all the outsiders, but he went to work with a very keen razor and skinned also the professionals, and Mr. Marsh, who at one time had been the head of the cotton exchange in New York, said the Government ought to indict Mr. Clayton because he was guilty of a dishonorable transaction, that he had manipulated the cotton market, that he squeezed people out of the market, and cost them much money. He sat here with a long array of counsel for weeks to show to the committee—and he convinced every member of it that he was right about it—that you could manipulate the cotton market and ruin people who were not on the inside and engaged in the same manipulation. There was not anybody so full of love for the cotton exchange then when these two were facing each other who undertook to deny that the cotton market could be manipulated.

Mr. Clayton said you could manipulate the New Orleans Cotton Exchange. He said you could manipulate the New York Cotton Exchange. He said they did manipulate the Liverpool Cotton Exchange until it could not be handled as a hedge at all. There was not anybody anywhere—and the Senator from Louisiana was present—who undertook to deny you could do those things.

The statement that the future market gives you the same price for cotton in every place in the United States sounds all right, but if anybody ever grew cotton and sold it at two markets 10 miles apart, he found that that was not true. Some cotton may sell for a cent or 2 cents a pound higher in one town in Texas than in another town in the same county of that State. Everybody has seen that happen. Cotton sells upon the market, unfortunately, as the folks who manipulate the market make it sell. All the witnesses testified before the Smith committee, of which the Senator from Louisiana was a member, that cotton would have sold for a higher price in 1926 if there had not been manipulation. They admitted it, and nobody thought of denying it.

Mr. President, I am astonished that we are told that a legitimate business can not be conducted unless you permit gambling. The Senator from Louisiana says he has speculated in land. He never sold an acre of land to which he did not have title. If he did and it had been found out, he would have had some trouble. You can speculate in land, but you have to have the title to do it. That is all we ask with reference to cotton, that they have the title to the product before they sell it.

Suppose somebody here in the District of Columbia should take a notion he would speculate in city lots and attempted to sell the very ground on which this Capitol stands to somebody who did not know that he did not have a right to do it. He would be in one of two places to-morrow; he would be in jail or in St. Elizabeths. I suspect he would be in St. Elizabeths. Suppose he should undertake to sell the furniture in this Chamber, he would go to one of those institutions. We have asked that the man who sells the thing which the farmer produces shall likewise obtain the right to do it or be penalized for selling that which he does not own.

As the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] said yesterday, if you organize a corporation, if the stock of the corporation is capable of being listed, you can list the stock upon the exchanges and have it dealt in, but if you do not want to do that you can not be made to do it. This bill provides only that you can not put the farmer's product on the exchange unless he consents to it. We give him just the same right that is given to every corporation organized in America. You can not sell their stock unless the corporation has listed it, and the right to sell corporation stock goes further than that. If you sell that which does not exist until you produce a corner, they will not let you profit by it. Mr. Clarence Saunders, of Memphis, could give a very learned lecture on that. He bought and bought and bought Piggly Wiggly stock and then made demand for delivery. It was discovered that he had bought more than the outstanding issue and the exchanges would not permit him to force delivery. They broke Mr. Saunders. He took a lot of newspaper space to talk about the exchange turning yellow and "welching" on their game, but they "welched" on it. If it had been a producer of cotton or grain, they would not have protected the people on the other side. They could sell and sell and sell as long as they wanted to, and settle on their commercial differences. We are asking that they apply the same rule to the farmer that they apply to the stocks of the railroads and other commercial institutions whose stock is dealt in on the exchange—that the man who sells must have the right and the power to deliver. When that is a fact we are satisfied.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] has presented an amendment which deserves most careful consideration. That it relates to a matter of prime importance all concede. There will be differences of opinion as to whether the evils of which the Senator complains can be reached and, if so, whether the amendment which he has offered effectively deals with the same. There will be some undoubtedly who are in favor of checking the evils resulting from dealing in futures upon produce exchanges, who will feel disinclined to support the amendment, being apprehensive that it goes too far and may restrict legitimate transactions. Others may feel that the entire question should be dealt with in a separate bill and not incorporated within a revenue measure.

I concede that the importance of the matter calls for a searching inquiry and that it would be better to deal with it in a special bill. However, the question is before us, and the amendment requires our attention, and we will be called upon to approve or disapprove of the same. It should be stated, however, that the subject has received the attention of committees of Congress during the present session and that the evils of which the Senator speaks were clearly pointed out by witnesses appearing before congressional hearings.

That gambling in agricultural products occurs upon produce exchanges has been established beyond a peradventure of a doubt. That the producers of cotton and wheat have suffered enormous losses through these gambling transactions is a matter patent to everyone.

When these gambling transactions and the evidences of speculations which result in losses to the farmers are pointed out and attempts are made to prevent a continuation of practices so harmful to agriculturists, it is urged that the measures proposed are not satisfactory and will fail to eradicate the evils complained of and the injustices which can not be denied. And there are those who contend that cotton exchanges and produce exchanges are necessary; that though they are tainted with gambling practices they accomplish considerable good.

Mr. President, when exchanges deal in futures and buy and sell commodities which do not exist and which the dealers and brokers do not own and never expect to acquire, injustices are bound to result and farmers are certain to be injured. The violent fluctuations upon these produce exchanges are evidences of gambling practices which can not prove other than harmful to agriculturists and demoralizing to the public. Gambling is not tolerated and many forms of gambling are denounced as crimes. The "corners" which frequently are attempted, and sometimes successfully, in commodities essential to life not only interfere with the ordinary and natural processes of trade and commerce but they work irreparable injury and prove financially harmful to the producers. We hear of stock brokers and produce brokers making millions in their stock-exchange transactions. Perhaps they made not the slightest contribution to the wealth of the country. That stock exchanges and produce exchanges may serve a useful purpose must be admitted, and it is to be regretted that these agencies which may be of value to the people are so often employed illegitimately and in a manner harmful to the public. The amendment under consideration does not interfere with legitimate and proper transactions; it strikes only at those that are improper, fraudulent, and harmful to the producers and to the public.

A few years ago I had occasion to investigate the activities of the New York Stock Exchange, as well as other exchanges in the United States which dealt in stocks and bonds. My recollection is that the data which I obtained showed that an overwhelming majority of the purchases upon the New York Stock Exchange were not actual and bona fide; that is to say, the overwhelming majority of the transactions did not involve the purchase and delivery of stocks. They were "margin" transactions, and the broker did not have possession of the stock and made no deliveries of the stock. My recollection also is that in a great majority of the marginal purchases the purchasers lost what they put up at the time of the purchase. In many cases additional margins were called for and the losses of the buyers were thus increased. With fluctuating markets, thousands of purchasers lose their marginal payments and the brokers reaped large profits. I reached the conclusion from the investigation made that many of the transactions conducted upon stock exchanges were mere gambling transactions.

The data which I obtained also demonstrated that banks belonging to the Federal reserve system, as well as State banks, were supplying hundreds of millions of dollars which were employed in these speculative and gambling transactions. The evidence was so overwhelming that I believed Congress should deal with the subject. I offered a bill which denied the use of the mails in certain of these stock transactions and forbade banks belonging to the Federal reserve system making loans for stock-speculating purposes and particularly for marginal transactions. I learned during the investigation which I made of the enormous losses sustained by thousands and tens of thousands of individuals who had dealings with the brokers and stock exchanges.

I made inquiries concerning the activities of stock exchanges and bucket shops in various parts of the United States and learned of the havoc wrought and tragedies which often resulted. Thousands of persons buy, knowing that deliveries would never be made and that the brokers did not possess the stocks which they pretended to sell. The markets were watched with feverish anxiety and with the changing figures of the tickers ruin and disaster were brought to a large number of individuals. Upon produce exchanges the same evils existed and the same disastrous consequences followed.

Mr. President, Congress has the constitutional power to deal with these interstate transactions, and it also has the power to tax these exchanges and the brokers who deal upon the same. I would be glad to support a measure that comprehensively dealt with these speculative and stock-gambling transactions and imposed such penalties as would reduce to a minimum the manifold evils resulting from the existing practices upon exchanges. While not satisfied with the amendment offered by the Senator, and recognizing that it will not prove as effective as desired, nevertheless, I shall vote for it. It will be an admonition to those dealing in futures and who convert exchanges into gambling marts that they shall change their ways. It will be a warning to some who deal upon produce exchanges that the agriculturists must not be despoiled and that the results of their toil shall not be utilized to increase the wealth of gamblers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] is necessarily absent on official business.

I also desire to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER] is absent on official business. He has a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS].

I also desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON];

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT] with his colleague the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR];

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]; and

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] are necessarily absent on official business, attending a hearing before the committee investigating presidential campaign expenditures.

Mr. MCLEAN (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. MCLEAN. I have a general pair with that Senator and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SACKETT (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with my colleague the junior Senator from Kentucy [Mr. BARKLEY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is detained from the Chamber on important business. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] are detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 47, as follows:

So Mr. CARAWAY's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

SHOOTING OF JACOB D. HANSEN

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have here a letter from the National Bank of Niagara & Trust Co., of Niagara Falls, N. Y., inclosing copy of a resolution adopted yesterday by the directors of that bank. I ask that the resolution may be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas one Jacob D. Hansen, secretary of Lodge No. 346, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, a reputable, law-abiding, and respected citizen of the city of Niagara Falls, was, on the morning of May 6 last the victim of an unjustifiable and murderous assault committed upon his person by two members of the United States Coast Guard Service stationed at or near Youngstown, N. Y., while he, the said Jacob D. Hansen, was lawfully and peacefully driving his automobile upon a public highway known as the Lewiston Road in the county of Niagara; and

Whereas our said citizen, Jacob D. Hansen, now lies at the point of death as the result of said assault with a bullet through his temple; and

Whereas warrants for the arrest of the perpetrators of said assault have been issued by the proper authorities of the State of New York; and

Whereas the commander of the unit of the said United States Coast Guard Service at Youngstown, N. Y., refuses to allow said warrants to be executed: Now therefore be it Resolved, That we, the board of directors of National Bank of Niagara & Trust Co. of Niagara Falls, N. Y., hereby indignantly protest against the reckless use of firearms against the persons and automobiles of law-abiding citizens of this community by apparently irresponsible persons of the United States Coast Guard Service, or any other service; and we hereby resolve that every effort should be made to bring said members of the United States Coast Guard to answer in the courts for their assault upon said Jacob D. Hansen to the fullest extent of the law; that copies of this resolution, duly certified, be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, Senators COPELAND and WAGNER, and Congressman S. WALLACE DEMPSEY at Washington, and to the district attorney of Niagara County.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this morning I discussed this unfortunate affair with Admiral Billard, who has charge of the Coast Guard, also with Assistant Secretary Lowman, and at the Attorney General's office. Of course, everybody is very regretful of the terrible incident, but I am satisfied that it is a matter which must receive the very serious attention of the authorities. This morning the Commerce Committee gave consideration to the request I made yesterday. It has been determined that next week there will be a meeting of the committee and that Admiral Billard will be heard, in order that the committee may determine what are the rules and regulations and under what conditions a private citizen may be shot. I think for the time being perhaps there is nothing more that can be done, but certainly there must be a reformation in the methods employed in the attempted enforcement of certain laws.

Here was a citizen who was engaged in a perfectly lawful pursuit. He was going from the home of a friend in the country to his own home in Niagara Falls and while in the outskirts of the town was shot and will probably die. If he lives, he will probably be blind as the result of this assault made upon him by members of the Coast Guard, who were not out in boats patrolling the border, but were upon the public highway.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am in thorough sympathy with the movement which the Senator has initiated, but I should like, nevertheless, to say that I think the Senator must be an optimist. There have been three men killed in my own State under similar circumstances. One had nothing to do with a still, but happened to be driving some cows in the vicinity of it; the prohibition agents mistook him for one of the men who was operating a still, and he was shot down. We have done everything we could to bring these men to proper trial. The Federal Government stepped in and took them out of our State courts and insisted upon them being tried in the United States court, where the United States district attorney acted as the defendant's counsel. Under the circumstances, while I hope this move will meet with some success, certainly similar moves have not met with any success in Maryland. Apparently, it is deemed all right by the Christian prohibitionists to take a man's life because he may have a pint of liquor on his person.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am optimistic to this extent: I believe when the people of this country are thoroughly informed as to what is going on that there will be such resentment that these violent methods will cease. In this case this man did not have any liquor on his person. He was in his automobile on a peaceful errand and in the middle of the highway. A man came out, a man clothed, according to the story that is told me, in overalls and a sheepskin jacket, with a revolver in one hand and a dark lantern in the other. He waved those instruments in front of the automobile, and the driver of the automobile did what any Senator would have done—he put his foot on the gas and tried to get away from this man whom he thought to be a highwayman.

A hundred yards farther on he met another man clothed in the same way. The second man started firing at the automobile; five or six shots were fired, and one of them entered the brain of the driver of the automobile, an innocent bystander, so to speak, a citizen who had absolutely nothing to do either with the enforcement or the violation of any law.

I am optimist enough to believe, I may say to the Senator from Maryland, that when the officials of this country, and when the Members of the Senate, and when the people at large realize what violent deeds are being committed in attempts to enforce what appears to many to be an unenforceable law, there will be an uprising and a determination that this thing must cease.

For my part I intend to go forward attempting in every honorable way to make it impossible for such a wicked performance to be repeated.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I sympathize with this man and his family. If these officers have shot this man under the circumstances related here they ought to be discharged from the service and prosecuted for an assault with intent to murder or for murder if the victim shall die. It is a very serious thing for a citizen driving along the highway to be attacked by officers who are claiming that they are seeking to enforce a particular law. If I had been in an automobile driving along the road and some one had stepped in front of my car with a lantern and a pistol in his hand I would have driven fast to get away if it were possible; I would not have stopped, and I do not think anybody else would. The man had a right to try to get away. He perhaps thought, as the Senator says, that a highwayman was holding him up. He did not know for what purpose—perhaps to rob or to kill him. The case ought to be looked into by the Government, and looked into speedily; there ought to be no dallying with a case like this. There ought to be action to-day, and we ought to know of that action to-morrow. There is no use wasting time to ascertain what are the rules and regulations concerning the Coast Guard. The responsible officials ought to bring these men to the bar of justice, so far as they can, immediately and determine what course they are going to take with them; and if they are not going to take any, then turn them over to the local authorities where this crime was committed.

We ought to be careful whom we put in charge of the law. The chief law enforcement officers ought not to put reckless men in the service. Of course, I know how utterly impossible it is in the selection of hundreds of thousands of officers to select men who are discreet and very careful about what they do.

Some reckless men are bound to get into the service. We ought to weed out the reckless ones and we ought to punish them, and they have been punished in my State. They have been convicted where they have done reckless and outrageous things against peaceful, law-abiding citizens.

I called the attention of the Senate the other day to some outlaws in Kentucky who gathered around the home of a woman with three or four children, whose sister was also living with her. She had reported a distillery. She had walked 14 miles into the town to give this information, so that they could remove this monstrosity near her home that would entice her boys, she thought, and the neighbors' children. She wanted to get rid of that thing. She had a right to do it. She was in the lawful discharge of her duty. She was a patriot, a good citizen, in doing that. These outlaws took the law into their hands. They surrounded her house at midnight. They barricaded the doors from the outside, so that the occupants could not get out, and put the torch to that home, and burned the house. When the house was filled with smoke, and the people living there saw the light of the flames flaring up around, they sought to escape, and found they could not open the doors and get out. One of the boys took an ax, broke open the door, and fled through the flame and smoke; and these outlaws, these men who buck the Government, these men who have sworn that they will not permit the eighteenth amendment, and the Volstead Act, to be enforced, taking the law into their own hands, at the dead hour of night, marching up on the humble home of a good woman, a Christian American mother, and burning her house down on her head, when her boy fled through the flame and smoke, shot him to death. She followed suit, and they killed her in the yard, and shot her other children, and shot her sister.

Senators, we must enforce the law. We must enforce it against such outrageous criminals as those, and enforce it against these men to whom the Senator from New York has called attention. The law ought to be above all alike. There ought not to be any partiality shown. We ought to let these officers who disgrace their positions be punished before the country, and driven in disgrace from the service of the Coast Guard.

That is what I favor. I am not in favor of permitting these law-enforcement officers to impose upon innocent citizens. I am not in favor of allowing them to fire into people's automobiles along the highways. I am against it. They ought to proceed under the law, and they ought to do it decently, and they ought to let every person they approach know that they are only friends in the name of the law trying to carry out the law, and that they are not seeking to shoot people and have them running down the road to escape with their lives.

Senators, we ought all to stand together on those things. We all ought to stand together, and tell the Federal authorities to go after those bandits in Kentucky and offer a reward for their capture. I would vote for a reward of a hundred thousand dollars to catch them, because it would be an outrage to permit these criminals who hide away in the mountain fastnesses of that State or any other to proceed with guns upon the home of a humble American mother in the nighttime and to kill her because she has dared to disclose the fact that the law is being violated in her community, and that she wants to remove temptation from her two boys. We ought to offer a reward for the apprehension of these men that will cause the best detectives in the country to go over that part of the country with a fine-tooth comb and gather them up speedily and punish them, and let others know what will happen to them if they dare to kill people who are good citizens and want the law enforced. Turn out these Coast Guards; punish them for assault with intent to murder; and, if this man dies, send them all to the penitentiary or hang them for that crime.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 750. An act to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes;

S. 757. An act to extend the benefits of certain acts of Congress to the Territory of Hawaii;

S. 2004. An act authorizing the paving of the Federal strip known as International Street, adjacent to Nogales, Ariz.;

S. 2910. An act granting to the State of South Dakota for park purposes the public lands within the Custer State Park, S. Dak.;

S. 3571. An act granting the consent of Congress to the County Court of Roane County, Tenn., to construct a bridge across the Emery River at Suddaths Ferry, in Roane County, Tenn.; and

S. J. Res. 135. Joint resolution making an emergency appropriation for flood protection on White River, Ark.

TAX REDUCTION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the next amendment is on page 205, the tax on sales or transfers of capital stock. The present law imposes a tax of 2 cents for every $100 of value on transfers or sales of capital stock. The House struck out the provision of existing law and reduced the tax from 2 cents to 1 cent. The majority of the committee decided to retain the existing law of 2 cents instead of 1.

That is about all there is in the matter, with the exception that it makes a difference of $8,800,000 in the revenue. I can not see why the Treasury should not have that $8,800,000. Therefore, the majority members of the committee decided to amend the House provision by striking out "one" and inserting "two," which is the existing law. That, I hope, the Senate will do.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, some of us thought that these war taxes should be, as far as possible, removed. Acting on that theory, we voted in the committee to retain the House provision that sought to reduce this stock-transfer tax.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I am sorry that while the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] was under discussion I was engaged in conference on a measure of considerable interest to this body, and to the country at large, and perhaps to some of those who desire to serve their country in a higher capacity, known as the McNary-Haugen bill. I had hoped to get back to the Chamber before the discussion was over and the vote was taken. I voted against the proposition because the method of our marketing is a matter of very vital interest to the producers of cotton.

From the time cotton has been produced there has grown up a system which, unless one makes a very close and critical study of it, is so technical that a layman, one who does not know about it, can not understand the paradoxes that occur in it.

To illustrate the point I am making, one not familiar with cotton can not understand how the man who buys cotton is called the "bull," or the friend of the producer, when the producer per se is a seller. He can not understand how a man who goes into the market and buys cotton is a friend of the producer who produces it for sale. That is one of the peculiar features that have grown up, and it is for this reason:

When one buys cotton in the future market at a given price he then becomes for the time being, as long as he is in possession of the contract for the cotton, one who expects to get his profit from a rise in the market. Therefore, the more buyers you have, the more they are interested in the rise of cotton. The man who sells his cotton, strangely enough, is the man who is called the "bear," for the reason that if he sells his cotton for future delivery at its price to-day, and the market goes down, when he comes to buy the cotton to fulfill his contract he may buy it at less than he sold it at, and therefore get a profit; so that the lower it goes the greater his profit, while in the case of the man that buys, the higher it goes the greater his profit. That system has grown up, and therefore there is very often a misunderstanding amongst the trade as to why the buyer should be considered the friend of the producer.

There is another feature of this matter that I think will be interesting to those who read the RECORD. I want to make it plain to them that between the 1st of September and the 1st of January the bulk of the crop has passed from the hands of the producer into the channels of trade. That is necessary. The conditions under which the average cotton producer produces his cotton are such that he must market it as soon as it is ready for market, for the reason that the obligation he incurs in the production of it falls due in the month in which it is to be gathered and put in proper marketable form. Therefore we have this condition existing in the Cotton Belt of this country:

There is a 12 months' supply coming on the market within 90 days. The cotton that is put upon the primary market, entering the channels of trade, is a supply that it takes the mills of the world, both European and American, to consume in the succeeding 12 months. Somebody must be prepared to take that cotton and carry it. If we were restricted to the mills—highly organized; few in number, with large resources—the inevitable would happen, that they would be the masters of the situation and would buy only at such times as their immediate needs might justify them in buying.

Under the present system, a cotton merchant may go out and purchase cotton, or he may hedge his purchase—that is, buy a contract—and then, after he has bought his contract at a given price he can fill that contract by filing it or hypothecating it with a bank as an insurance against his purchase of the cotton. He can go out on the market and buy that cotton with an absolute assurance that he will be guaranteed the price prevailing that day; and the same thing is true on the selling side. The seller can go out and sell a contract against a purchase of actual cotton and secure himself absolutely.

I shall not take the time of the Senate to explain—it is very simple to those who really understand it—how a hedge absolutely protects either the one who has sold against a spot purchase or the one who has bought against a spot sale. It is a guaranty. It is a hedge.

It has been claimed, and I think very truthfully, that under our present system, in view of the absolute necessity of the producer to sell his crop, the hedging process provides a system by which those not engaged in manufacturing may enable the producer to finance his crop by paying him the current price and not restricting him to the mills alone.

The contention has been made that four or five times, or perhaps a hundred times, more cotton is sold than is produced. In a way, perhaps, that is true; but one familiar with the market must understand that a contract even representing actual existing cotton may be registered three, four, or five times during a season, or may be registered four or five times during a day. One buying a contract may sell it during the marketing period of that day, and in turn another may buy; but we must not lose sight of the fact that for every seller there is a purchaser. No matter if they sell five times the crop, somebody buys five times the crop, and one is a balance against the other, because the man who buys is looking for a profit and the man who sells is looking for a profit, and it is a question of which one has the most resources or which has the greater power; and it is our duty to see that advantage shall not be taken of the market place for the purpose of creating a temporary monopoly that would artificially control the market, because, no matter how much speculation there may be in this commodity, ultimately the price will be controlled within a degree by the law of supply and demand.

It is my opinion that the market places are absolutely essential. We ought not to attempt to destroy the market places, but we ought to attempt to drive out those who prostitute the market places. It surely is within our power so to regulate, so to control the dealings in any of our commodities that we can prevent corners, squeezes, monopolies, and manipulations from taking place and yet allow the degree of speculation that is always present in all kinds of business.

The fact is, Mr. President, and everybody will agree, that the market that is alive, the market that is rising, is the speculative market. I do not believe in gambling, I do not believe, as has been done in the cotton market, that we ought to allow certain individuals to come in and sell or to buy without regard to the law of supply and demand, but the speculative element upon which we have to depend in the present condition of the farmer is the element that is willing to come into the market and make a bid on the prospect.

What did we have in the year 1927? There were in New York 200,000 bales of spot cotton. Everybody knew and everybody knows that New York is clear out of line with the ordinary channels of the cotton business, and it being disadvantageous to handle cotton there, the presence of cotton in that market has a tendency to depress the market. On the other hand, the absence of cotton and the selling of contracts has a tendency unduly to raise the price. Last year there were held in New York 200,000 bales of cotton that was known as "line" cotton, known as "shy" cotton, just the kind that would clear the loss in reference to tenderable grades—staple. But the presence of the weevil in the South, reduction of acreage, and a bad season cut out of the crop approximately 6,000,000 bales. As soon as the trade understood that the crop was going to be short, at first 3,000,000, which was about the estimate of the department, the price began to rise, and it rose steadily from the point of depression that had occurred in 1926 on account of the excessive production, 18,000,000 bales; it rose gradually from February, and as the prospect for still further decrease in production became apparent it rose more rapidly, until about the 1st of August, when it was beyond a doubt that the crop would be from four to five million bales short. It rose rapidly from the low point in February of about 16 cents until August, when it reached 25 cents.

There was a difference between the low and the high of $45 a bale. In spite of the presence of what was ordinarily a depressing presence of speculative cotton held in New York, the market continued to rise under the absolute pressure of the law of supply and demand, and possibly cotton would have gone to 30 cents a pound, in spite of all the artificial or speculative obstructions that could have been thrown in its way. It would doubtless have gone to 30 cents a pound had not the Bureau of Economics announced on the 15th day of September that the price would likely decline. Of course, that created a psychology the world over which no speculator and no cotton man could possibly resist. Those who were inclined to buy cotton and to deal in cotton became frightened off at the position of the Government, quit the market, and cotton broke, until it went back to 17 cents a pound, meaning a loss of $40 a bale. I cite that for the reason that I want to show that as long as there is real, genuine, bona fide trading in cotton, and no outside artificial influence is interfering with it, the law of supply and demand will control the price within reasonable bounds.

On the other hand, we discovered in the investigation that there were forces which could, with an accumulation of actual cotton, something like more than a million bales, afford to dump such quantity on the market as to break the price when contracts had been sold against the purchase. Those contracts going down would more than repay what they had sold a large portion of their stocks for.

A bill has been introduced which gives a board of control the power absolutely to limit the amount of actual cotton, speculative cotton, buying and trading in any degree, to bring it within a certain limit as to any one month or any one market, so as not to artificially interfere with the market. It also provides that there shall not be a straddle, selling one market against another market. That can easily come within the provision of the law and still leave a market there for this legitimate use. There is a provision that cotton once offered can not be retendered against the same month for the purpose of depressing the market. That is clearly within our power, and I would prefer to see that done rather than embarrass or destroy a market place, when it is wholly within our power so to regulate the forces of purchase and sale as to make them of extreme benefit to the producers, and I was not willing to see those contracts which were of a legitimate nature embarrassed by the necessity of those contracting having to make affidavits or having to go through a formality before they would be able to use the market, for the reason that it is done largely now by telegraph. The thing has to be done quickly, and in dealing with foreign countries, 50 per cent of our cotton being consumed by foreign countries, it is essential that the machinery shall function as easily and as quickly as possible.

It is clearly within our power so to regulate the procedure as not to destroy the elements that have built up our cotton trade, and still leave them to function in the interest of those who produce.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the lectures on the cotton market that we have from time to time are very enlightening. If I had a boy 5 years old and he did not understand how they sold cotton, I would send him to a school for the feeble-minded, because he could not learn anywhere else. We have but one issue here, and that is this: If one wants a gambler to fix the price, he votes "nay," and if he does not, he votes "yea." There is no need of refinement of our judgments on these things. We all knew what we were doing.

We know absolutely that the cotton market is manipulated, or everybody who has ever dealt on it is not to be believed. There is no trouble about understanding that. It does not take any refinement of our reason to know what we are doing. I know, and everyone else knows, that if the people who go into the cotton market as gamblers did not find it profitable, they would stay out. If they find it profitable, somebody has to lose the money they win. That is just as true as if it were a poker game or a crap game. There is no difference in the law of gambling. It does not make any difference what kind of a game you run, if you win, somebody loses. Anybody who does not understand that, does not understand anything, and so there is no difference between us on that. We know that when somebody goes into the gambling marts and beats down the price of an article, somebody loses, and the man who produces and has to sell always loses.

I am not willing to be stultified in my judgment and have it go out that I do not know what I am doing. There is no mistake about these things. Anybody knows what they are. Anybody understands that if somebody sells, somebody must buy. What is the use of telling us that? Everbody knows that if somebody wins, somebody loses. We all know that. We know that if you can raise the price of a product by having a gambling market, you have the ability to manipulate.

The farmer gets more sympathetic talk on his side, he has more reasons offered why certain things should be done and fewer things done for him than any class I know of. But he does not expect anything else. He has had much experience along that line. He has more tears shed for him and then more injustices heaped upon him than any other class. If he were not a great humorist he would get out of patience, and, really, I expect sometimes he will. He knows what we are doing.

In all my experience here I have never had a letter from a man who was a farmer and nothing else who condoned the system now in existence. I have not yet received a letter from anyone whose principal interest was not running a gambling game who was not against doing these things. People are always coming down here in the interest of a farmers' market, but, strange to say, they never let the farmer have anything to say about what kind of market they are going to give him. Anybody had just as much right to vote against that amendment as I had to vote for it, and I am not falling out with anyone about how he voted. I contend that no one can put a reason in my mouth, and no one can make it appear that I did something that I was not aware of its consequences, because I do know what I was trying to do. No one in the Senate can make himself believe that he did not know what he was doing when he voted against the farmer and for the gambler a while ago, nor can he convince anyone else. There are two sides to this, just as there are to any gambling game, as there is to any other proposition, and every man takes his choice. Everybody knows what he is doing. There is no refinement about this cotton futures market that anybody does not understand. If we did not know what we were doing, we would have to have a guardian appointed for us to draw our salaries. The Government would not be safe in paying us, because we would squander them before we got home.

Let us not lecture each other, because all of us know what we are doing. Everybody knows what is happening. Nobody is mistaken about it; it is perfectly clear.

There are two classes of people in this country and you can not serve both of them. God bless your soul, you have to serve the one you love best, and most of us try to do it, and I think all of us do it.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to a statement which I inserted in the RECORD last night with reference to the pending amendment, appearing on pages 8531 and 8532 of the RECORD. I believe it would be better for large numbers of smaller mining companies if the amendment were not agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, as I understand, the House struck out this tax on capital-stock transfers.

Mr. SMOOT. Not entirely. It cut it in two.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the committee amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. The committee amendment restores the present law.

Mr. GEORGE. That is, 2 cents on each hundred dollars of value?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Or, on stock having no par value, 2 cents nevertheless?

Mr. SMOOT. Whatever the value may be.

Mr. GEORGE. But if it is nonpar value?

Mr. SMOOT. On nonpar value stock it is based on whatever the market price may be.

Mr. GEORGE. The committee amendment is to restore it as it stood in the prior revenue act?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; in the 1926 act.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, this is a case in which the House of Representatives has been attempting to carry out what has been understood as the policy of the administration and of the two Houses of Congress, as I have understood it, to get rid, as quickly as possible, of the little stamp taxes which have been properly designated by the Treasury Department as nuisance taxes. They are small amounts paid upon transactions of legitimate business. The House reduced the tax one-half. I suppose the House would have repealed it entirely but for the urgency of the administration that the reduction be kept within certain prescribed limits.

I myself can see no reason why the tax should not be repealed. I do not believe the loss of the entire amount raised from this source would seriously embarrass the Treasury, even though the other propositions for large reductions proposed by the majority were adopted.

It is a tax upon every transfer of stock. It is a tax upon every transfer of corporation bonds. If that is not a tax upon business, I can not understand what sort of a tax it is. If it were confined only to stock transfers upon stock exchanges, if it were confined to stock transfers only nominally, as would be the case of dealings upon the basis of margins, it would be a different thing; but there has to be an actual transfer of the stocks or the bonds of a corporation. It does not make any difference whether it is a corporation which has issued $100,000 in stock or a corporation which has issued millions of dollars of stock, it can not be transferred without the payment of this tax. If owned by the original owner, he can not sell it or transfer it without paying a tax. If he holds one of its bonds, he can not sell it without paying a tax in the shape of a stamp. It applies to every sale of stock or bonds of every corporation in the United States, whether small or great, and burdens with the same tax every share of stock and every bond, regardless of differences in par or actual values, operating therefore very equitably. What justification is there for this tax? When the Treasury from year to year, for the last six or eight years, has been every year collecting out of the people of the country large sums of money in excess of what is needed for the legitimate expenditures of the Government, what is the reason or pretext for the retention of this little war tax, this pestiferous little nuisance tax, which requires a stockholder in a little corporation that has issued only $10,000 worth of stock, when he wants to transfer a share or two, to pay a tax by the exaspering method of having to buy a stamp and attach it to the certificate?

In my State a great many small corporations are being formed upon the cooperative plan of cooperation between the owners and the wage earners employed by the corporation. Under this plan of cooperation the stock is issued to the corporation and then transferred, as I understand it, from the corporation to the laborers as they may become entitled to it under the plan in effect. After a certain service in the employment of the corporation by the employee, he becomes entitled to a certain amount of stock. That stock has to be transferred to him. But the transfer can not be made without paying a tax upon it. The holder can not transfer it to his neighbor without paying the tax upon it. He can not transfer it to a trust fund without paying a tax upon it. He can not transfer it to a widow without paying a tax upon it.

It is a tax that is not now needed, but which was levied in the great emergency when we had to go out and gather in the little as well as the big sources of income in order that the Government might meet the enormous, gigantic expenditures incident to the Great War. That emergency has passed. We are trying to get back to a normal basis. There are certain of these war taxes which are going to become permanent. Certain of them are going to remain relatively high until our domestic debt is paid off. Those are the income taxes on corporations and individuals, the tobacco tax, and all those taxes that yield such enormous amounts of revenue to the Government. But where one of these little vexatious, annoying nuisance taxes is involved, such as requires a man every time he sells a share of stock or a bond in a little corporation to attach a 2-cent stamp to it, ought to be gotten rid of. It is a matter of common public policy and fair dealing with the citizens that such little nuisance taxes ought not to be retained after the circumstances and conditions which made them necessary have disappeared.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if it were only the transfers referred to by the Senator that were involved, this would be quite a different proposition. But when we remember that there are 5,000,000 shares of stock transferred in one day and 4,000,000 shares of stock transferred the next day in one city alone, it seems to me there should be no objection whatever to compelling each of those transfers to pay 2 cents per $100. That is what the committee is asking in the amendment. I can not for the life of me see why there should be any objection. As long as there is an income tax, I know of no source from which we could raise the amount of money and do less harm or impose less hardship on anyone than by the terms of this amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Is the Senator in favor of these stamp taxes on stock transfers and on capital-stock issues and bond issues as a permanent policy of the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. This would be one of the last that I would want to have retired.

Mr. HARRISON. This is one of the last.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; there are plenty of others.

Mr. HARRISON. What are the others?

Mr. SMOOT. First and above all of them, I would like to see the corporation tax reduced more than it has been, and next I would like to see a reduction in the surtaxes.

Mr. HARRISON. What other stamp taxes are there besides the tax on admissions, prize fights, and so forth, the tax on capital-stock issues, and capital-stock transfers, and bond transfers? What other stamp taxes are there? That is about all, as I remember it. I ask the Senator if he believes that we ought to retain those taxes as a permanent policy.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a tax on passage tickets.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator refer to the surtax on Pullman-car tickets?

Mr. SMOOT. No. I will read it to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator is wrong.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator is not wrong. Section 5 of the existing law, which is not repealed in the bill, under Schedule A, stamp taxes, provides as follows:

5. Passage ticket, one way or round trip, for each passenger, sold or issued in the United States for passage by any vessel to a port or place not in the United States, Canada, or Mexico, if costing not exceeding $30, $1; costing more than $30 and not exceeding $60, $3; costing more than $60, $5. This subdivision shall not apply to passage tickets costing $10 or less.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator believe that the tax on passage tickets out of the country ought to be retained as a permanent policy?

Mr. SMOOT. Not when we can afford to tax it off, and the tax on corporations and the surtax on individuals are reduced.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator, in 1924, was increasing the corporation tax, while he is reducing the corporation tax now.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator keeps saying, and it is reiterated throughout the United States, that we have increased the corporation tax. We did take off of corporations the tax that was imposed upon capital stock. The corporations themselves asked for it, saying they would prefer to have a 13½ per cent tax than to have 12½ per cent and a capital-stock tax.

Mr. HARRISON. Before the Senator gets away from that let me ask him about it. He has brought that question up.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; the Senator from Mississippi brought it up.

Mr. HARRISON. We increase the corporation tax from 12½ to 13½ per cent and take off the capital-stock tax.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. HARRISON. I will ask the Senator if the figures do not show that when we took off the capital-stock tax there was a reduction of $93,000,000, and that if the tax had remained on corporations at 12½ per cent as it was then, we would have raised $120,000,000 more than we did the year before, and by raising it from 12½ per cent to 13½ per cent, as we did under the Senator's amendment, we increased it over $200,000,000 from the corporation tax alone?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator——

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator before he makes his statement should refresh his memory.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is asking a question that has no reference whatever to the statement I made. The statement I made was that the corporation tax was 12½ per cent in 1924 and in 1926 it was raised to 13½ per cent because the capital-stock tax affecting corporations was repealed, and that was done on the earnest solicitation of the corporations of the country.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator did not understand my question.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I understood it.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me ask it again, because I do not think we differ about it. When we took the capital-stock tax off we lost $93,000,000 to the Government. Is not that true?

Mr. SMOOT. Approximately, yes.

Mr. HARRISON. There was a loss to the Government of approximately $93,000,000?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. HARRISON. When we raised the corporation tax from 12½ per cent to 13½ per cent by virtue of that increase, we raised from corporation taxes alone over $200,000,000.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, at the time——

Mr. HARRISON. Will not the Senator from Pennsylvania allow the Senator from Utah to answer that question?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It happens that I remember the figures.

Mr. HARRISON. I also have the figures.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. At the time we raised the corporation income tax that tax was running approximately $900,000,000 a year. The increase of 1 per cent, we figured, would supply almost exactly the amount that was necessary to make up the loss on account of the repeal of the capital-stock tax, and the two figures almost exactly matched.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me ask the Senator a question. He remembers very well that upon the estimate of the actuary, Mr. McCoy, upon whom we all rely, it was stated that for that year when we made the change if the tax on corporations had remained at 12½ per cent, as formerly, we would have received $120,000,000 more from corporation taxes than we received the year previous.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is what he now says.

Mr. HARRISON. I know.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. But neither he nor anybody else knew that there was going to be such an increase.

Mr. HARRISON. But the following year and last year, by virtue of the increase from 12½ per cent to 13½ per cent, we received in corporation taxes an increase of more than $200,000,000 as compared with the previous year.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and we lost the amount of the capital stock tax.

Mr. HARRISON. That was $93,000,000, showing a net increase of approximately $100,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, if the predictions of the Senator from Mississippi had been correct that business was not going to increase and we would not be prosperous under the Republican administration, we would not have collected the $93,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. It was not my prediction, but the actuary's figures and the estimates which have proved correct, and yet, notwithstanding that, the Senator refuses to decrease the corporation tax.

Mr. SMOOT. There has been no such refusal. The committee reports a decrease of 1 per cent, which will amount to $82,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator now state that it ought to be the permanent policy of the Government to retain the stamp tax on capital-stock issues and bond issues and capital-stock transfers.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; so long as it is necessary for the Government to collect the amount of money that it is now collecting.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

Mr. SIMMONS and Mr. CARAWAY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not know the Senator from North Carolina had the floor. He did not want to yield to me a while ago, and I do not want to take him off the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wanted to say to the Senator from Utah that if I understood him correctly—and I think I did—he spoke of the enormous amount of transactions in stocks and bonds in New York.

Mr. SMOOT. I did.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator knows that this tax is not imposed upon any bond or stock transaction if the transaction is upon the basis of margin only. It does not apply unless there is an actual sale and delivery of the stock.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it applies to every certificate, no matter whether it is bought on margin, if a transfer is made.

Mr. SIMMONS. If there is an actual transfer, not a marginal transaction, or a purely speculative transaction, that is true; but the Senator's statement a little while ago was calculated to convey the impression to the Senate that in the case of a purely speculative transaction on the stock market of New York, where so many shares of stock are sold to-day with no purpose whatsoever to deliver but the whole transaction is to be settled upon the basis of margin, then they would pay the tax.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, where a person sells on the market there is no transfer of stock until the time comes when he has got to sell if he can not put up money to meet a further demand. Then the stock is sold, and he loses all that he put up. That applies if a person sells short.

Mr. SIMMONS. If he actually has to deliver the stock, then this tax is paid.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator if the great volume and bulk of transactions of this character that take place upon the stock exchanges of the big cities, New York, for example, are not merely paper transactions based upon and finally settled and wiped out of existence by the payment of margins; that is to say, by the payment of the difference between the price that obtained when the transaction was inaugurated and the price at which the stock was finally disposed of?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are some sales made such as those to which the Senator has referred, but wherever a dividend-paying stock is involved—and most of the stocks upon the stock exchange are dividend paying, although some of them are not—they are transferred so that the man holding the certificate may receive the dividend. It makes no difference if they are not dividend-paying stocks, because then there need be no transfer of stock and no tax paid.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask a question there?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wish to be thoroughly informed about this situation. Does this hamper gambling on the stock exchanges?

Mr. SMOOT. It makes them pay the tax.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does it put a burden on gambling?

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator does not expect it to be adopted in the Senate, does he?

Mr. SMOOT. I am going to try to have it adopted.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator remember the vote taken a while ago? If so, he is full of temerity if he thinks the Senate is going to do anything to the gamblers.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not temerity I have, but hope.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not propose to go into that. I was simply asking the Senator a question. He undoubtedly had conveyed the impression on my mind, and I presume on the minds of other Senators, that this tax would apply to every one of the great volume of transactions that take place in stocks upon the exchanges of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah had no such thought in his mind.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, it is all right; I merely wanted to correct the Senator if he had such thought as that.

Mr. SMOOT. I had no such thought.

Mr. SIMMONS. Because I know, as a matter of fact, that a large part of the enormous transactions that the Senator spoke of upon the stock market never pay this tax because they are not actual transactions; they are fictitious in the sense that they are purely speculative and paper transactions.

Mr. SMOOT. There is never a purchase of stock made upon the stock exchange, unless it be a short sale, but what the stock certificate is either held by the banker as collateral or held by the firm that sold the stock.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Arkansas will permit me, I should like to say to him that this tax does not apply unless there is an actual transaction and an actual delivery of the stock.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator a while ago heard the claim made that all these transactions were legitimate and necessary for business.

Mr. SIMMONS. This is entirely a different proposition.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the very thing we were talking about then.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, no.

I wish to correct the Senator when he says I did not yield to him while the Senator from Mississippi was speaking. It was the Senator from Mississippi who did not yield to him.

Mr. CARAWAY. All right; it is not worth arguing about.

Mr. SIMMONS. I try to be courteous to the Senator and always shall try to be courteous to him, because I have a great admiration for him, but I do not like him to charge me with any discourtesy, because I mean none toward him.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I am particularly anxious to know how those who a while ago voted against the farmer and for the gamblers on the exchanges are now going to vote. I am curious to know whether they will switch in favor of the corporations and against the gamblers. I want to find out whether the corporations have more friends in the Senate than have the farmers, because the farmers lost a while ago overwhelmingly when they wanted some protection against gamblers. Now the corporations want to be permitted to have this remedy, and we want to know just how much stronger, how much more influential, the corporations are than are the farmers. The gamblers beat the farmers two to one a while ago. Now, I want to find out whether the corporations can beat the gamblers or the gamblers can beat the corporations. Or whether their interest are joint. This is going to be an informative afternoon, Mr. President. Some of us may understand where the real influence of the Senate lies. We are going to settle some things to-day whether we settle them right or not. I think we are going to settle them wrong. As I have said, the gamblers beat the farmers a while ago two to one, and I am inclined to imagine now it is going to be a close shave as to whether the corporations are going to beat the gamblers or the gamblers are to beat the corporations. If you want to free, from all kinds of restrictions, the gambling interests of this country, God bless your soul, let us take off this tax, too. Let us say to them, that where their interests clash everybody else must yield. The farmers lost; everybody knew they would; and yet some talked as if they did not understand what we were doing. We knew what we were doing then, and everybody here knows what we are doing now, and if the farmers can not beat the gamblers now we will sit back and see the corporations and the gamblers "take a shy" at one another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. COUZENS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRUCE. I ask what the amendment is? I happened to be out of the Chamber at the time it was stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is the committee amendment, on page 205, beginning in line 15. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SMOOT. One or two Senators have asked me as to just what the question is on which we are about to vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee, the amendment being on page 205, beginning in line 15. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who happens not to be in his seat. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]; and

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] are necessarily absent on business of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—48

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is one other amendment to be offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. It is not a committee amendment. In order that it may be offered now, I ask unanimous consent that that amendment offered by the Senator on capital-stock issues be taken up at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I send forward an amendment. I offer only the part not stricken out—just the first few lines of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 206, after line 2, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. TAX ON ISSUE OF CAPITAL STOCK.

Subdivision 2 of Schedule A of Title VIII of the revenue act of 1926 is repealed, to take effect on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this particular provision of the law was not changed by the House at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Nor by the Senate committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know why. I can not imagine why it was not.

In the Senate in 1926, when the last revenue bill was up, upon a motion that was made to strike out the capital-stock issues tax, the vote was 31 to 32. It was defeated at that time by one vote; and I notice in the roll call that at that time many Senators even on the other side of the aisle voted to repeal this tax.

In reading through the list, I notice that Mr. Cameron (not now with us), Mr. FRAZIER, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. LENROOT, Mr. MCMASTER, Mr. MOSES, Mr. NORBECK, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. NYE, Mr. ODDIE, and Mr. SHIPSTEAD at that time voted to repeal the tax on capital-stock issues.

Mr. President, this was a war tax. It now raises $10,000,000 annually. Whenever any corporation is organized, no matter how small or how large, when the stock is issued stamps have to be placed on it. Great confusion ensues in making the necessary reports. Many instances come to us where penalties are sought to be imposed against those people because of the negligence in not putting on the stamps evidencing the payment of this small tax. It is not large; and it does seem to the minority members of the committee that this capital-stock issues tax should be taken off and repealed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what the Senator from Mississippi says is absolutely correct; but a majority of the committee feel that there is no need of losing the $10,000,000 that is collected by means of this tax of 5 cents on each $100 valuation of certificates of stock originally issued.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina will be rejected.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, how much revenue does this tax bring in now?

Mr. SMOOT. Ten million dollars.

Mr. DILL. And the amendment will abolish that?

Mr. SMOOT. It will.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I shall take only a very few minutes upon this amendment.

The House did not act upon this tax this time, but the Senate has acted upon it in recent years. It is a tax upon the original issues of stocks and bonds of a corporation.

A corporation issues stock certificates, and most corporations find it expedient and necessary to issue bonds. It is, therefore, a necessary expense in the organization of a corporation, the necessary legal formation of a corporation, stock certificates, at least, have to be issued; and often in order to get the money necessary to finance its operations and development bonds are issued.

If there is any tax in this bill that is a tax upon business, that is that tax, for the simple reason that the business can not be inaugurated without the issuance of the stock certificates, which I say ought not to be taxed.

That is the only instance I know of where we have a direct tax upon what is necessary to be done by an institution that proposes to enter into business. We know that nearly all the large business of the United States is done through the corporate form, and we all know that they have to conform to the laws of the States in which they are incorporated, and the laws of the States provide for the creation of corporations and the issuance of stock. It is, therefore, a tax imposed upon the entrance into business of these great concerns that are now conducting more than half the business of the American people. It is a burden upon business, pure and simple.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as on the former vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. SACKETT (when his name was called). I have a pair on this vote with my colleague [Mr. BARKLEY], who is absent. Therefore I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON].

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] are necessarily detained upon the committee investigating campaign expenditures.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is necessarily absent, and if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. FESS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. I understand that if present he would vote "yea," and if I were permitted to vote I would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—34

Ashurst	Glass	Overman	Swanson
Bayard	Harris	Pittman	Thomas
Black	Harrison	Ransdell	Tydings
Blease	Hawes	Sheppard	Tyson
Broussard	Heyden	Shipstead	Wagner
Copeland	Heflin	Simmons	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	Locher	Smith	Walsh, Mont.
George	Mayfield	Steck
Gerry	Neely	Stephens

NAYS—42

Bingham	Dill	Keyes	Pine
Blaine	Edge	La Follette	Reed, Pa.
Borah	Frazier	McLean	Schall
Brookhart	Goff	McNary	Shortridge
Bruce	Gooding	Metcalf	Smoot
Capper	Gould	Moses	Vandenberg
Couzens	Greene	Norbeck	Warren
Curtis	Hale	Norris	Waterman
Cutting	Johnson	Nye	Watson
Dale	Jones	Oddie
Deneen	Kendrick	Phipps

NOT VOTING—18

Barkley	Fess	McMaster	Steiwer
Bratton	Gillett	Reed, Mo.	Trammell
Caraway	Howell	Robinson, Ark.	Wheeler
du Pont	King	Robinson, Ind.
Edwards	McKellar	Sackett

So Mr. SIMMONS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is one other amendment I wish to offer this evening, and I do not think it will lead to any discussion at all. I think every member of the committee, both the minority and majority, have agreed to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 202, in lieu of the matter proposed by the committee to be inserted in lines 19 to 21, insert the following:

(a) No refund shall be made of any amount paid by or collected from any manufacturer, producer, or importer in respect of the tax imposed by subdivision (3) of section 600 of the revenue act of 1924, or subdivision (3) of section 900 of the revenue act of 1921 or of the revenue act of 1918, unless either—

(1) Pursuant to a judgment of a court in an action duly begun prior to February 28, 1928; or

(2) It is established to the satisfaction of the commissioner that such amount was not added separately on the invoice to the purchaser, or, if so added, has been returned to the purchaser; or

(3) The commissioner certifies to the proper disbursing officer that such manufacturer, producer, or importer has filed with the commissioner, under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, a bond in such sum and with such sureties as the commissioner deems necessary, conditioned upon the immediate payment to the United States of such portion of the amount refunded as is not distributed by such manufacturer, producer, or importer within six months after the date of the payment of the refund to the purchasers of the articles in respect of which the refund is made, as evidenced by the affidavits (in such form and containing such statements as the commissioner may prescribe) of such purchasers, and that such bond, in the case of a claim allowed after February 28, 1927, was filed before the allowance of the claim by the commissioner.

(b) The second proviso under the heading "Internal Revenue" in section 1 of the first deficiency act, fiscal year 1928, and the second proviso of the fourth paragraph under the heading "Internal Revenue Service," in section 1 of the Treasury and Post Office appropriation act for the fiscal year 1929, are repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY BIRDS

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a newspaper article entitled "America declares sympathy with migratory-bird needs."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICA DECLARES SYMPATHY WITH MIGRATORY-BIRD NEEDS

Interest in the welfare of migratory birds is shown by the public in the chorus of approval that comes from the country following the passage by the Senate of the Norbeck bill providing for Federal sanctuaries. Although the issue of the rights of individual States has been raised, the general reply is that this is a national obligation, and, so far as Canada is concerned, an international matter.

"The bill sponsored by the South Dakota Senator may have its faults," says the Charleston Evening Post, "especially since it speaks of shooting grounds within the refuges in some cases and sizable squads of game wardens also, but its purpose is a lofty one. In some States, to be sure, the question of bird havens is going ahead speedily, and this is commendable, but not so general nor so promising as to preclude those who make the laws from agreeing on a sensible course of action by the Government."

"If the principle of Federal control over migratory birds is sound—and the United States Supreme Court holds that it is sound—the Government owes the birds all due protection," declares the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, while the Manchester Union states: "Bird protection is an international problem of great importance. Many birds journey vast distances in migration, and they thus impose upon the various countries they traverse a joint responsibility for their welfare. It is useless to give migratory birds protection in one country if they are doomed to indiscriminate slaughter in an adjoining land. A good beginning toward the preservation of migratory birds in North America was made by the migratory-bird treaty between the United States and Great Britain."

"Conceding the sanctuaries are vital to the perpetuation of our birds—and there are few who dispute it," says the Newark Evening News, "we are not doing our share, nor playing fair with our treaty partner, unless we provide them within our borders. And the longer the delay the more serious will be the effect on one of the Nation's most valuable natural resources." The Springfield Daily News states: "Individual States may protect birds within their boundaries. But birds are interstate animals. The State which protects migratory game birds has accomplished nothing for itself with birds, if the birds are killed while crossing some other State to reach the protected territory. Local self-government does not accomplish the needed result, and so the Federal Government must step in."

"It is the measure that many conflicting interests and conservationists from every part of the country agreed on," according to the Milwaukee Journal, which offers the further comment, in reply to certain criticism: "Many will agree that Federal game sanctuaries should not be killing grounds for anybody's benefit. They will insist that they shall not be opened to public shooting. They will object also to locating private hunting grounds just outside these preserves. Yet any State in which a Federal game preserve is made could close the immediate surrounding territory to hunting. Should birds get no resting grounds or sanctuaries because people may gather around their edges to shoot? * * * We can not leave migratory-bird protection to the States. They never have acted, and perhaps never will, under any plan that really will give protection to creatures that cross the country twice a year."

"This measure," in the opinion of the Oklahoma City Times, "provides a protection that can be supplied in no other way. There should be refuges for all these feathered wanderers, but it is particularly important that the migratory wild fowl be thus shielded on the long journey from Canada to the Gulf. Lakes and marshes where the birds can rest and feed unmolested mean much more than bag limits and closed seasons. Canada, which under the provisions of an international trqeaty helps the United States in this program of protection, has 91 such refuges, and America but 1. Yet this Nation has more hunters than the Dominion, and more of the long route leads through our land. This measure of protection has been too long delayed."

"It has been uphill work," observes the New York Times, "to get our 48 States to cooperate. The Norbeck bill does not interfere with the operation of game laws in the States which apply to migratory birds 'in so far as they do not permit what is forbidden by Federal law.'" Referring to the dispute as to whether the cost of the system should be defrayed by a tax on hunters or by appropriation, the Times holds that "only by yielding to the argument that money ought to be voted out of the Treasury was Mr. NORBECK able to save his bill."

Recalling that "repeated efforts to bring about cooperation between our individual States and Canada have resulted in but little success," the Kalamazoo Gazette remarks that "it is hardly reasonable to condemn, as another example of paternalistic bureaucracy, a constructive program which can be performed only by direct Federal action." The Gazette presents as its view of the whole situation: "It so happens that Federal legislation is about the only promising course to adopt in the treatment of the problem. That problem, like the problem of aviation and radio control, is national in its scope."

The Albany Evening News considers the disputed provisions of the Senate bill "of comparatively little importance," as the "main thing is that these sanctuaries should be provided." The Evening News emphasizes the point that "without birds life would be not only dreary but almost impossible, for birds fight insect pests and contribute in no small measure to the welfare of man."

The Santa Barbara Daily News says of the California situation: "If we would save the remnants of this wild life, we must take new measures and provide game refuges, and in addition check, if we can, the destruction of the birds. Some progress has been made along this line, but the real work lies in front of us."

FARMERS' MARKET

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Times of May 3, 1928.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SERIOUS BUNGLING OVER A NEW FARMERS' MARKET

In no other city in the United States would it have been possible for a situation so serious as that confronting Washington over the establishment of a farmers' market, which has heretofore supplied the bulk of country produce for this city.

What the effect of this deplorable situation is going to be in food distribution and in food prices until a permanent and satisfactory solution is found nobody can foresee. District authorities may be able to meet the exigencies in a way to lessen the chances of economic losses, but nothing they can do will give the encouragement that is vitally necessary for an increased production of vegetables, fruits, etc., near Washington.

That encouragement will come only with a well-equipped farmers' market, where near-by farmers can put their goods on exhibition for purchasers and where easy contact can be arranged between sellers and purchasers.

The sheds of the old farmers' market were taken down more than two months ago under rush orders from Federal officials, who stated that they expected to begin at once the erection of the new Internal Revenue Building there. The farmers who occupied places in the sheds were told they would be provided for in the streets along the south sidewalks of B Street from Seventh to Fourteenth Streets.

The Federal Government, to which District authorities have yielded from the beginning, has not started the new building. Instead of the farmers still having the space they formerly occupied, the Federal authorities have rented the vacant places to parking-space promoters, who are charging farmers for parking long enough to dispose of supplies.

Most farmers are now being squatted along B Street. In two more months home-grown produce will be ready in large quantities and hundreds of farmers, with their trucks, will seek places to sell their goods. How they will all be accommodated in the streets no official now knows.

In the meantime, Congress haggles over bills for a new location for a market, and the outlook is that there will be no legislation. One Senator proposes a commission to study the matter. At the best, a new market can not be made ready for two years.

The District Commissioners are inactive. They have put the matter up to Congress, before committees of which there has been interminable strife and division. Public welfare has been entirely overlooked.

The sufferers from this unnecessary condition of affairs will be the farmers and the consumers. The beneficiaries will be commission merchants and hucksters.

The great majority of truck farmers around Washington desire to market their vegetables and other supplies in direct manner. They want to save the commissions they must pay middlemen. With a farmers' market in operation there is sharp competition between farmers and commission merchants. The consumers of Washington benefit by this competition.

Eliminate the farmers from direct contact with consumers and merchants and there looms up a dangerous monopoly on the food supplies of Washington. Discourage the farmers, lessen production, and there are higher prices for Washington people.

The situation calls for wise and prompt action by Congress or the District Commissioners.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BORAH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

ARBITRATION WITH ITALY

In executive session this day the following treaty was ratified and, on motion of Mr. BORAH, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
May 1, 1928.

The Senate:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a treaty of arbitration concluded between the United States and Italy at Washington on April 18, 1928.

Respectfully submitted.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 30, 1928.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a treaty of arbitration between the United States and Italy, concluded at Washington on April 18, 1928.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

The President of the United States of America and His Majesty the King of Italy

Determined to prevent so far as in their power lies any interruption in the peaceful relations that happily have always existed between the two nations;

Desirous of reaffirming their adherence to the policy of submitting to impartial decision all justiciable controversies that may arise between them; and

Eager by their example not only to demonstrate their condemnation of war as an instrument of national policy in their mutual relations, but also to hasten the time when the perfection of international arrangements for the pacific settlement of international disputes shall have eliminated forever the possibility of war among any of the Powers of the world;

Have decided to conclude a new treaty of arbitration enlarging the scope and obligations of the arbitration convention signed at Washington on March 28, 1908, which expired by limitation on January 22, 1924, and for that purpose they have appointed as their respective Plenipotentiaries

The President of the United States of America, Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State of the United States, and who, having communicated to one another their full powers found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

All differences relating to international matters in which the High Contracting Parties are concerned by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other under treaty or otherwise, which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy, which have not been adjusted as a result of reference to the Permanent International Commission constituted pursuant to the treaty signed at Washington May 5, 1914, between Italy and the United States and still in force, and which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity, shall be submitted to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague by the Convention of October 18, 1907, or to some other competent tribunal, as shall be decided in each case by special agreement, which special agreement shall provide for the organization of such tribunal if necessary, define its powers, state the question or questions at issue, and settle the terms of reference.

The special agreement in each case shall be made on the part of the United States of America by the President of the United States of America by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and on the part of the Kingdom of Italy in accordance with the constitutional laws of that Kingdom.

ARTICLE II.

The provisions of this treaty shall not be invoked in respect of any dispute the subject matter of which

(a) is within the domestic jurisdiction of either of the High Contracting Parties,

(b) involves the interests of third Parties,

(c) depends upon or involves the maintenance of the traditional attitude of the United States concerning American questions, commonly described as the Monroe Doctrine,

(d) depends upon or involves the observance of the obligations of Italy in accordance with the Covenant of the League of Nations.

ARTICLE III.

The present treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof and by the Kingdom of Italy in accordance with its constitutional laws.

The ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible, and the treaty shall take effect on the date of the exchange of the ratifications. It shall thereafter remain in force continuously unless and until terminated by one year's written notice given by either High Contracting Party to the other.

In faith thereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this treaty in duplicate in the English and Italian languages, both texts having equal force, and hereunto affix their seals.

ARBITRATION WITH GERMANY

In executive session this day the following treaty was ratified and, on motion of Mr. BORAH, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 7, 1928.

To the Senate:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a treaty of arbitration between the United States and Germany, signed at Washington on May 5, 1928.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 7, 1928.

The PRESIDENT:

With a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, if the President approve thereof, the undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to submit herewith a treaty of arbitration between the United States and Germany, signed at Washington on May 5, 1928.

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

The President of the United States of America and the President of the German Reich

Determined to prevent so far as in their power lies any interruption in the peaceful relations now happily existing between the two nations;

The President of the United States of America, Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State of the United States, and

The President of the German Reich, Herr Friedrich von Prittwitz und Gaffron, German Ambassador to the United States of America:

Who, having communicated to one another their full powers found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

All differences relating to international matters in which the High Contracting Parties are concerned by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other under treaty or otherwise, which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy, which have not been adjusted as a result of reference to an appropriate commission of conciliation, and which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity, shall be submitted to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague by the Convention of October 18, 1907, or to some other competent tribunal, as shall be decided in each case by special agreement, which special agreement shall provide for the organization of such tribunal if necessary, define its powers, state the question or questions at issue, and settle the terms of reference.

The special agreement in each case shall be made on the part of the United States of America by the President of the United States of America by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and on the part of Germany in accordance with its constitutional laws.

CONCILIATION WITH GERMANY

In executive session this day the following treaty was ratified and, on motion of Mr. BORAH, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 7, 1928.

To the Senate:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a treaty of conciliation between the United States and Germany, signed at Washington on May 5, 1928.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 7, 1928.

The PRESIDENT:

With a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, if the President approve thereof, the undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to submit herewith a treaty of conciliation between the United States and Germany, signed at Washington on May 5, 1928.

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

The President of the United States of America and the President of the German Reich, being desirous to strengthen the bonds of amity that bind them together and also to advance the cause of general peace, have resolved to enter into a treaty for that purpose, and to that end have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State of the United States of America; and

The President of the German Reich, Herr Friedrich von Prittwitz und Gaffron, German Ambassador to the United States of America.

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in proper form, have agreed upon and concluded the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

Any disputes arising between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Germany, of whatever nature they may be, shall, when ordinary diplomatic proceedings have failed and the High Contracting Parties do not have recourse to adjudication by a competent tribunal, be submitted for investigation and report to a permanent International Commission constituted in the manner prescribed in the next succeeding Article; the High Contracting Parties agree not to declare war or begin hostilities during such investigation and before the report is submitted.

ARTICLE II.

The International Commission shall be composed of five members, to be appointed as follows: One member shall be chosen from each country, by the Government thereof; one member shall be chosen by each Government from some third country; the fifth member shall be chosen by common agreement between the two Governments, it being understood that he shall not be a citizen of either country. The expenses of the Commission shall be paid by the two Governments in equal proportions.

The International Commission shall be appointed within six months after the exchange of ratifications of this treaty; and vacancies shall be filled according to the manner of the original appointment.

ARTICLE III.

In case the High Contracting Parties shall have failed to adjust a dispute by diplomatic methods, and they do not have recourse to adjudication by a competent tribunal, they shall at once refer it to the International Commission for investigation and report. The International Commission may, however, spontaneously by unanimous agreement offer its services to that effect, and in such case it shall notify both Governments and request their cooperation in the investigation.

The High Contracting Parties agree to furnish the Permanent International Commission with all the means and facilities required for its investigation and report.

The report of the Commission shall be completed within one year after the date on which it shall declare its investigation to have begun, unless the High Contracting Parties shall shorten or extend the time by mutual agreement. The report shall be prepared in triplicate; one copy shall be presented to each Government, and the third retained by the Commission for its files.

The High Contracting Parties reserve the right to act independently on the subject matter of the dispute after the report of the Commission shall have been submitted.

ARTICLE IV.

The present treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by the President of the German Reich in accordance with German constitutional laws.

The ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible, and the treaty shall take effect on the date of the exchange of the ratifications. It shall thereafter remain in force continuously unless and until terminated by one year's written notice given by either High Contracting Party to the other.

In faith whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this treaty in duplicate in the English and German languages, both texts having equal force, and hereunto affix their seals.

Done at Washington the fifth day of May in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-eight.

EVENING SESSION

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., on the expiration of the recess.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its work to-night it shall take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. CURTIS. I now ask unanimous consent that we proceed to the call of the calendar for unobjected bills beginning at Order of Business No. 1013, Senate bill 4273, where we left off on Tuesday evening, and that after the call of the calendar is completed we then return to carry out the previous unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if I can get my bill, S. 3845, passed now, which I have undertaken to have passed a number of times in the Senate, I have no objection to that arrangement. I shall be glad to assist in every way that I can, but unless that is done I do not believe we are going to do very much business to-night.

Mr. CURTIS. Why can not the Senator consent to the proposal I have made? We will have accomplished something then if we get the unobjected bills off the calendar. It will not take more than half an hour probably.

Mr. HEFLIN. The other night when I could not attend the session, because I was worn and tired from the work of the day, the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] objected to this bill of mine after saying on the floor that he would probably support it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I withdraw my request.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] is not present in the Chamber. He will probably be here later. It will take a very short time to complete the call of the calendar for unobjected bills.

Mr. HEFLIN. But under the proposal made by the Senator from Kansas the call would begin just beyond my bill. We would have to go through the remainder of the calendar and then go back to the beginning and we would not reach my bill to-night.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let us begin at the Senator's bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; let us begin at my number now.

Mr. MOSES. In the absence of the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] some one will certainly protect him by making objection, so the Senator from Alabama is not advancing his bill; he is merely impeding the bills of everybody else.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I shall proceed. I do not propose to be treated in this fashion by a few people who are representing the cotton gamblers of the United States, who are trying to keep this system in effect, to continue this robbery scheme. If the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] wants to take up the cudgel, I bid him welcome to the fray. He has cotton mills running in his State.

Mr. MOSES. No; they are not running, I am sorry to say.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; there are a few mills there.

Mr. MOSES. They are there, but they are not running, I regret to state.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator wants now in the closing hours of this session to try to prevent the passage of my bill, I am going to undertake to organize the Senators from the cotton-growing States. I give them notice now to join with me to prevent the final adjournment of Congress by the 1st of June or July, and until this measure is passed. We are not going into another cotton-selling season with this system open and unprotected. I am fighting for the farmer.

I have never displayed any mean spirit toward any Senator in this body. I have never gotten up here and made objection to their meritorious measures and then when I was away requested another Senator representing the same interests to get up and object because I was not here. That is not the way to legislate. This is a meritorious measure, and I hope the Senator——

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state the inquiry.

Mr. MOSES. Under what unanimous-consent order are we now operating?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is operating under the unanimous-consent agreement that it shall proceed to the consideration of bills on the calendar, under Rule VIII.

Mr. DILL. Why do we not proceed under that rule, then?

Mr. MOSES. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then I move——

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator can not do that.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; I can, unless somebody makes a point of order, and if I have to speak until half-past 10 o'clock I might as well get started early.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a brief statement?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. My attention has been called to the fact that there are two bills of a similar nature on the calendar. I was unaware that there were two bills apparently relating to similar subject matter. One of the bills is S. 1093 and the penalties provided in that bill are very different from the penalties provided in Senate bill 3845, to which the Senator is referring.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is true.

Mr. BRUCE. The bill first mentioned relates only to cotton predictions, and the second bill related originally not only to cotton price predictions but corn and wheat and rye and barley.

Mr. HEFLIN. Those items have been stricken out, except cotton. What we are seeking to do is to increase the penalty. There ought to be a stiff penalty of $10,000 fine applicable to the man who will violate the law and make predictions anyhow. The Senator from Texas [Mr. MAYFIELD] got a bill through——

SEVERAL SENATORS. Regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that demand for a moment?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I will not withhold it for anybody. Unless objection is withdrawn, we are not going to transact any business here to-night.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Alabama just another question, continuing along the same line.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator can not do it unless and until we get a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cutting	Johnson	Reed, Pa.
Barkley	Dale	Jones	Sackett
Bayard	Deneen	Keyes	Sheppard
Bingham	Dill	King	Shortridge
Black	Edge	La Follette	Steiwer
Blaine	Fess	McMaster	Stephens
Blease	Fletcher	McNary	Swanson
Borah	Frazier	Mayfield	Thomas
Bratton	George	Moses	Tyson
Brookhart	Gillett	Neely	Vandenberg
Broussard	Glass	Norbeck	Wagner
Bruce	Hale	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Capper	Harris	Nye	Warren
Caraway	Harrison	Oddie	Waterman
Copeland	Heflin	Phipps	Watson
Curtis	Howell	Pittman	Wheeler

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

COTTON PRICE PREDICTIONS

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am willing to make this proposition. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has just expressed to me the opinion that he did not think the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] intended to object any further. In fact, last night I understood him to tell me across the Chamber that he would not object to-day. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], I think, probably put the Senator from California in that light by suggesting that he was absent and that he would have to object for him until he got here. I understood the Senator from California to tell me across the Chamber yesterday afternoon that he would not object to-day.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, a suggestion has just been made to me to the effect that we take up the Senator's bill in the morning at 12 o'clock. I do not think it will take long for its consideration and possibly its passage. I have heretofore objected for reasons which I did not have an opportunity to present. I wish to make a few observations upon the bill when it is under consideration. It has just been suggested to me that by unanimous consent we take up the bill to-morrow at 12 o'clock and limit the discussion, it might be, to 15 or 20 minutes, so that we may proceed to-night to dispose of matters which many Senators consider of prime importance.

It may well be that in the end I shall not object to the bill. I do not wish to be at all personal by direct words or by inference or by innuendo, but I merely say now to the Senator from Alabama that if he had been patient enough to listen to me the other evening, when at about 6 o'clock he asked for consideration of this bill, we would have had no controversy over the measure.

Therefore I am suggesting now to the Senator and to others who listen that we agree by unanimous consent to take up the bill to-morrow upon convening at 12 o'clock. I now feel that I shall consume only a very few moments in the discussion.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate meets to-morrow at 12 o'clock we take up for consideration Calendar No. 866, the bill (S. 3845) to prohibit predictions with respect to cotton prices, and that we vote on it at not later than 12.30 o'clock p. m. I shall want only a very brief time. I think the Senator from California will not have any objection when I can state another reason why the bill ought to pass.

Mr. CURTIS. Let us make it at not later than 12.20.

Mr. HEFLIN. To take up the bill at 12.20?

Mr. CURTIS. No; to take it up at 12 o'clock and vote not later than 12.20.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to speak about five minutes.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will speak about five minutes on the bill at that time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask whether or not a unanimous-consent agreement of that sort will interfere with the existing order?

Mr. CURTIS. It will not.

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I would not want to do that.

Mr. JOHNSON. So long as that is thoroughly understood, I, of course, have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule requires a quorum to be called when a time is sought to be set for a final vote.

Mr. HEFLIN. This is only a temporary matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Inasmuch, however, as a quorum has just been called and obtained, if there be no objection, the agreement is entered into.

Mr. JOHNSON. Pardon me; as I understand the ruling of the Chair, the agreement will not interfere with the existing order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. JOHNSON. Or with the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want it understood that if the point of no quorum should be made—and it should take up time, I would not want a vote on it. I want five minutes as the author of the bill, and as a member of the Agricultural Committee, to explain it.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from California will be here at 12 o'clock, there will be no question of a quorum raised, so far as I am concerned, and I hope no other Senator will raise the point until after the conclusion of the matter.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I shall be here, Deo volente.

Mr. CURTIS. I renew my request for unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

OVERSEA HIGHWAY BRIDGES FROM KEY WEST TO MAINLAND

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on Commerce. It is a purely local matter, and I feel authorized to ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida to submit the report which he indicates? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 256) authorizing the United States Bureau of Public Roads to make a survey of the uncompleted bridges of the Oversea Highway from Key West to the mainland, in the State of Florida, with a view of obtaining the cost of the construction of said bridges, and report their findings to Congress, and I submit a report (No. 1090) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Whereas Munroe County, in the State of Florida, has bonded for large sums for the purpose of constructing an oversea highway from Key West to the mainland; and

Whereas the State of Florida, out of the road fund, has spent large sums of money assisting Munroe County in the construction of said road; and

Whereas Dade County has completed her part of the road, which is the main highway from Canada to Key West, known as United States Highway No. 1; and

Whereas this road is now completed except the construction of several bridges: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the United States Bureau of Public Roads is hereby authorized and directed to make a survey with a view of ascertaining the cost of the construction of said bridges and report the findings to the Congress at the earliest possible moment.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the first bill in order on the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement.

CLAIMS OF INDIAN TRIBES AND BANDS IN WASHINGTON

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4273) authorizing certain Indian tribes and bands, or any of them, residing in the State of Washington to present their claims to the Court of Claims, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims, with the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, as in other cases, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statutes of limitation, to hear, examine, and adjudicate and render judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims of the Okanogan, Methow, San Poells (or San Poil), Nespelem, Colville, and Lake Indian tribes or bands of the State of Washington, or any of said tribes or bands, against the United States arising under or growing out of the original Indian title, claim, or rights of the said Indian tribes and bands, or any of said tribes or bands (with whom no treaty has been made), in, to, or upon the whole or any part of the lands and their appurtenances in the State of Washington embraced within the following general descriptions, to wit: Commencing at the intersection of the west bank of the Okanogan River with the international boundary line between the Province of British Columbia, Canada, and the State of Washington, thence west along said line to its intersection with the summit of the main ridge of the Cascade Mountains; thence in a southerly direction along the summit of said main ridge of the Cascade Mountains to a point where the northern tributaries of Lake Chelan and the southern tributaries of the Methow River have their rise; thence southeasterly on the divide between the waters of Lake Chelan and the Methow River to the Columbia River; thence, crossing the Columbia River in a true-line course east, to a point whose longitude is 119° 10′; thence in a true south course to the Government survey township line between townships 24 and 25 north; thence east along said township line to Hawk Creek, in Lincoln County, Wash.; thence down said Hawk Creek to its intersection with the Columbia River; thence westwardly along the south bank of the Columbia River to a point opposite the mouth of the Okanogan River; thence north across the Columbia River and up the west bank of the Okanogan River to the place of beginning; also, commencing on the north bank of the Spokane River at its junction with the Columbia River, thence in a northeasterly direction along the summit of the ridge separating the drainage basin of the Spokane River from that of the Columbia River and its tributary, the Colville River, to the main ridge of the Calispell Mountains; thence in a northerly direction along the summit of the main ridge of said Calispell Mountains, extended, to the international boundary line between said Province of British Columbia, Canada, and the State of Washington; thence west along said line to the east bank of the Columbia River; thence in a general southerly direction along said east bank of the Columbia River to the said mouth of the Spokane River; also, commencing at a point on the west bank of the Columbia River opposite the mouth of the Spokane River; thence in a general northerly direction to and along the summit of the main ridge dividing the waters of the San Poil River from those of the Columbia and Kettle Rivers, and along the summit of said ridge extended northerly to the said international boundary line between the Province of British Columbia and the State of Washington; thence west along said international boundary line to the summit of the main ridge separating the waters of the Okanogan River from those of the upper Kettle River; thence in a general southerly direction to and along the summit of the divide between the waters of said Okanogan River and those of Nespelem Creek to the north bank of the Columbia River; thence in a general easterly direction along the north bank of the Columbia River to a point opposite the mouth of the Spokane River, the place of beginning; which said lands or rights therein or thereto are claimed to have been taken away from said Indian tribes and bands, or some of them, by the United States, recovery therefor in no event to exceed $1.25 per acre; together with all other claims of said tribes or bands of Indians, or any of said tribes or bands, arising under or growing out of fishing rights and privileges held and enjoyed by said tribes and bands, or any of them, in the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries; or arising or growing out of hunting rights and privileges held and enjoyed by said tribes and bands, or any of them, in common with other Indians in the "common hunting grounds" east of the Rocky Mountains as reserved by and described in the treaty with Blackfoot Indians, October 17, 1855 (11 Stat. L. 657 to 662), and which are claimed to have been taken away from said tribes and bands, or any of them, by the United States without any treaty or agreement with such Indian claimants therefor and without compensation to them.

SEC. 2. Any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit or suits be instituted or petition, subject to amendment, be filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within five years from the date of the approval of this act, and such suit or suits shall make the said Okanogan, Methow, San Poells (or San Poil), Nespelem, Colville, and Lake Indian tribes or bands of Washington, or any of said tribes or bands, party or parties, plaintiff, and the United States party defendant. The petition shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with the Indians approved in accordance with existing law; and said contract shall be executed in their behalf by a committee or committees selected by said Indians as provided by existing law. Official letters, papers, documents and records, maps, or certified copies thereof may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said Indians to such treaties, papers, maps, correspondence, or reports as they may require in the prosecution of any suit or suits instituted under this act.

SEC. 3. In said suit or suits the court shall also hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate any claims which the United States may have against the said Indian tribes and bands, or any of them, but any payment or payments which have been made by the United States upon any such claim or claims shall not operate as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suit or suits, as may gratuities, if any, paid to or expended for such Indian tribes and bands, or any of them.

SEC. 4. Any other tribes or bands of Indians the court may deem necessary to a final determination of any suit or suits brought hereunder may be joined therein as the court may order: Provided, That upon final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery, by any one of said tribes or bands, and in no event to exceed the sum of $25,000 for any one of said tribes or bands of Indians, together with all necessary and proper expenses incurred in the preparation and prosecution of such suit or suits to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed as herein provided by the said tribes or bands of Indians, or any of said tribes or bands, and the same shall be included in the decree, and shall be paid out of any sum or sums adjudged to be due said tribes or bands, or any of them, and the balance of such sum or sums shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States, where it shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNEXATION OF ISLANDS OF THE SAMOAN GROUP

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110) to provide for annexing certain islands of the Samoan group to the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "said," to strike out the words "cession is" and to insert "cessions are"; and on page 2, line 1, after the word "confirmed," to strike out "and that the said islands of eastern Samoa be, and they are hereby, annexed as a part of the territory of the United States, and are subject to the sovereign dominion of" and to insert "as of April 10, 1900, and July 16, 1904, respectively," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Whereas certain chiefs of the islands of Tutuila and Manua and certain other islands of the Samoan group lying between the thirteenth and fifteenth degrees of latitude south of the Equator and between the one hundred and sixty-seventh and one hundred and seventy-first degrees of longitude west of Greenwich, herein referred to as the islands of eastern Samoa, having in due form agreed to cede absolutely and without reserve to the United States of America all rights of sovereignty of whatsoever kind in and over these islands of the Samoan group by their acts dated April 10, 1900, and July 16, 1904: Therefore be it Resolved, etc., That (a) said cessions are accepted, ratified, and confirmed as of April 10, 1900, and July 16, 1904, respectively.

(b) The existing laws of the United States relative to public lands shall not apply to such lands in the said islands of eastern Samoa; but the Congress of the United States shall enact special laws for their management and disposition: Provided, That all revenue from or proceeds of the same, except as regards such part thereof as may be used or occupied for the civil, military, or naval purposes of the United States or may be assigned for the use of the local government, shall be used solely for the benefit of the inhabitants of the said islands of eastern Samoa for educational and other public purposes.

(c) Until Congress shall provide for the government of such islands, all civil, judicial, and military powers shall be vested in such person or persons and shall be exercised in such manner as the President of the United States shall direct; and the President shall have power to remove said officers and fill the vacancies so occasioned.

(d) The President shall appoint six commissioners, two of whom shall be Members of the Senate, two of whom shall be Members of the House of Representatives, and two of whom shall be chiefs of the said islands of eastern Samoa, who shall, as soon as reasonably practicable, recommend to Congress such legislation concerning the islands of eastern Samoa as they shall deem necessary or proper.

(e) The sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to be immediately available, to be expended at the discretion of the President of the United States of America, for the purpose of carrying this joint resolution into effect.

Mr. KING. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] whether or not this joint resolution is unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. In its present form it is unanimously reported by the committee and is also favored by the Navy Department, which objected to the joint resolution in its original form.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut briefly explain the joint resolution?

Mr. BINGHAM. Briefly, I will state that these islands were ceded to the United States by certain Samoan chiefs, some in 1900 and others in 1904. Congress has never done the chiefs the courtesy of accepting the cessions, although by an Executive order the Navy has taken charge of the islands for all these years. The chiefs feel that in courtesy to them and to their cessions the cessions should be ratified, and the joint resolution merely puts the approval of Congress on the existing order. It also creates a commission, which the President is to appoint, consisting of two Senators, two Representatives, and two Samoan chiefs, to study the situation and to recommend legislation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, does the bill provide any amelioration of the harsh naval government now in existence in the islands?

Mr. BINGHAM. That will follow the official study by the commission to be appointed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution to provide for accepting, ratifying, and confirming the cessions of certain islands of the Samoan group to the United States, and for other purposes."

MARKING OF PLATINUM

The bill (S. 1251) to regulate the marking of platinum imported into the United States or transported in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "National platinum marking act, 1927."

SEC. 2. In this act, unless the context otherwise requires—

(1) The term "article" means any article of merchandise, and includes any portion of such article, whether a distinct part thereof or not (including every part thereof whether or not separable and also including material for manufacture).

(2) The terms "platinum," "iridium," "palladium," "ruthenium," "rhodium," and/or "osmium" include any alloy or alloys of any one or more of said metals.

(3) The term "mark" means any mark, sign, device, imprint, stamp, or brand applied to any article, or to any tag, card, paper, label, box, carton, container, holder, package, cover, or wrapping attached to, used in conjunction with, or inclosing such article, or any bill, bill of sale, invoice, statement, letter, circular, advertisement, notice, memorandum, or other writing or printing.

(4) The terms "apply" and "applied" include any method or means of application or attachment to, or of use on, or in connection with, or in relation to, an article, whether such application, attachment, or use is to, on, by, in, or with—

(A) The article itself; or

(B) Anything attached to the article; or

(C) Anything to which the article is attached; or

(D) Anything in or on which the article is; or

(E) Anything so used or placed as to lead to a reasonable belief that the mark on that thing is meant to be taken as a mark on the article itself.

(5) The term "quality mark" means any mark as herein defined indicating, describing, identifying or referring to or appearing or seeming or purporting to indicate, describe, identify, or refer to the partial or total presence or existence of, or the quality of, or the percentage of, or the purity of, or the number of parts of platinum, iridium, palladium, ruthenium, rhodium, and/or osmium in any article.

SEC. 3. (a) When an article is composed of mechanism, works, or movements and of a case or cover containing the mechanism, works, or movements, a quality mark applied to the article shall be deemed not to be, nor to be intended to be applied to the mechanism, works, or movements.

(b) The quality mark applied to the article shall be deemed not to apply to springs, winding bars, sleeves, crown cores, mechanical joints, pins, screws, rivets, dust bands, detachable movement rims, hat-pin stems, bracelet and necklace snap tongues. In addition, in the event that an article is marked under paragraph (5) of section 6, the quality mark applied to the article shall be demed not to apply to pin tongues, joints, catches, lapel button backs and the posts to which they are attached, scarf-pin stems, hat-pin sockets, shirt-stud backs, vest-button backs, and ear-screw backs: Provided, That such parts are made of the same quality of gold as is used in the balance of the article.

SEC. 4. If there is any quality mark printed, stamped, or branded on the article itself, there must also be printed, stamped, or branded on the said article itself the following mark, to wit: A trade-mark duly applied for or registered under the laws of the United States of the manufacturer of such article; except that if such manufacturer has sold or contracted to sell such article to a jobber, wholesaler, or retail dealer regularly engaged in the business of buying and selling similar articles, this provision shall be deemed to be complied with if there is so marked on the said article the trade-mark duly registered under the laws of the United States of such jobber, wholesaler, or retail dealer, respectively; and in such event there may also be marked on the said article itself numerals intended to identify the article, design, or pattern: Provided, however, That such numerals do not appear or purport to be a part of the quality mark: Provided further, That they are not calculated to mislead or deceive anyone into believing that they are partly of the quality mark.

SEC. 5. All quality marks applied to any article shall be equal in size and equally visible, legible, clear, and distinct and no quality mark which is false, deceptive, or misleading shall be applied to any article or to any descriptive device therefor. No more than one quality mark shall be applied to any article and such quality mark shall be applied to such article in only one place thereon except as elsewhere in this law specifically permitted.

(b) Wherever in this act provision is made for marking the number of parts or percentage of metals such number or percentage shall refer to weight and not to volume, thickness, or any other basis.

SEC. 6. There shall not be applied to any article any quality mark nor any colorable imitation thereof, nor any contraction thereof, nor any addition thereto, nor any words or letters, nor any mark purporting to be or resembling a quality mark, except as follows:

(1) An article consisting of at least nine hundred and eighty-five one-thousandths parts of platinum, iridium, palladium, ruthenium, rhodium, and/or osmium, where solder is not used and at least nine hundred and fifty one-thousandths parts of said same metal or metals where solder is used, may be marked "platinum": Provided, That the total of the aforementioned metals other than pure platinum shall amount to no more than fifty one-thousandths parts of the contents of the entire article.

(2) An article consisting of at least nine hundred and eighty-five one-thousandths parts platinum, iridium, palladium, ruthenium, rhodium, and/or osmium, where solder is not used and at least nine hundred and fifty one-thousandths parts of the said same metal or metals where solder is used: Provided, That at least seven hundred and fifty one-thousandths parts of said article are pure platinum, may be marked "platinum": Provided further, That immediately preceding the mark "platinum" there is marked the name or abbreviation as hereinafter provided, of either iridium, palladium, ruthenium, rhodium, and/or osmium, whichever of said metals predominates: And provided further, That such predominating other metal must be more than fifty one-thousandths parts of the entire article.

(3) An article consisting of at least nine hundred and eighty-five one-thousandths parts of platinum, iridium, palladium, ruthenium, rhodium, and/or osmium, where solder is not used and at least nine hundred and fifty one-thousandths parts of said same metals where solder is used: Provided, That more than five hundred one-thousandths parts of said article consists of pure platinum, may be marked with the word "platinum": Provided further, That said word is immediately preceded by a decimal fraction in one-thousandths showing the platinum content in proportion to the content of the entire article: And provided further, That said mark "platinum" be followed by the name or abbreviation as herein allowed, of such one or more of the following metals, to wit: Iridium, palladium, ruthenium, rhodium, and/or osmium, that may be present in the article in quantity of more than fifty one-thousandths parts of the entire article. The name of such other metal or metals other than platinum, however, shall each be immediately preceded by a decimal fraction in one-thousandths showing the content of such other metal or metals in proportion to the entire article—as, for example, 600 Plat., 350 Pall., or 500 Plat., 200 Pall., 150 Ruth., 100 Rhod.

(4) An article consisting of nine hundred and fifty one-thousandths parts of the following metals: Platinum, iridium, palladium, ruthenium, rhodium, and/or osmium, with less than five hundred one-thousandths parts of the entire article consisting of pure platinum, may be marked with the name iridium, palladium, ruthenium, rhodium, and/or osmium, whichever predominates in the said article, but in no event with the mark "platinum": Provided, however, That the quantity of such metal other than platinum so marked must be marked in decimal thousandths: And provided further, That the name of such metal other than platinum so used must be spelled out in full, irrespective of any other provisions of this act to the contrary.

(5) An article composed of platinum and gold which resembles, appears, or purports to be platinum may be marked with a karat mark and the platinum mark provided—

(A) The platinum in such article shall be at least nine hundred and eighty-five one-thousandths parts pure platinum; and

(B) The fineness of the gold in such article shall be correctly described by the karat mark of said gold; and

(C) The percentage of platinum in such article shall be no less than 5 per cent in weight of the total weight of the article; and

(D) The mark shall be so applied that the karat mark shall immediately precede the platinum mark, as, for example, "14 K & Plat.," "18 K & Plat.," as the case may be, it being expressly provided that in case the percentage of platinum exceeds the 5 per cent provided herein

the quality mark may also include a declaration of the percentage of platinum, as, for example, "18 K & 1/10th Plat." or "14 K & 1/8th Plat.," or as the case may be.

(6) An article composed of platinum and any other material or metal not resembling, appearing, or purporting to be platinum may be marked with the quality mark platinum: Provided, That all parts or portions of such article resembling or appearing or purporting to be platinum or reasonably purporting to be described as platinum by said quality mark shall be at least nine hundred and eighty-five one-thousandths parts pure platinum.

SEC. 7. Whenever provided for in this act, except as specifically excepted in paragraph 4 of section 6 hereof, the word "platinum" may be applied by spelling it out in full or by the abbreviation "Plat."; the word "iridium" may be applied by spelling it out in full or by the abbreviation "Irid."; the word "palladium" may be applied by spelling it out in full or by the abbreviation "Pall."; the word "ruthenium" may be applied by spelling it out in full or by the abbreviation "Ruth."; the word "rhodium" may be applied by spelling it out in full or by the abbreviation "Rhod."; and the word "osmium" may be applied by spelling it out in full or by the abbreviation "Osmi."

SEC. 8. Any person, partnership, corporation, or association, or any officer, director, employee, or agent thereof who shall import or cause to be imported into the United States, or deposit or cause to be deposited in the United States mails, or transport or cause to be transported from one State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or from the District of Columbia into any other State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or into the District of Columbia, or deliver or cause to be delivered to any carrier to be so transported, or sell or offer or expose for sale in any Territory or possession of the United States or in the District of Columbia, any article to which is applied any quality mark which does not conform to all the provisions of this act, or from which is omitted any mark required by the provisions of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, however, That it shall be a defense to any prosecution under this chapter for the defendant to prove that the said article was manufactured and marked with the intention of and for purposes of exportation from the United States, and that the said article was either actually exported from the United States to a foreign country within six months after date of manufacture thereof with the bona fide intention of being sold in the said country and of not being reimported or that it was delivered within six months after date of manufacture thereof to a person, firm, or corporation whose exclusive customary business is the exportation of such articles from the United States.

SEC. 9. In any action relating to the enforcement of any provision of this act a certificate duly issued by an assay office of the Treasury Department of the United States certifying the weight of any article, or any part thereof, or of the kind, weight, quality, fineness, or quantity of any ingredient thereof, shall be receivable in evidence as constituting prima facie proof of the matter or matters so certified.

SEC. 10. In any action relating to the enforcement of any provision of this act proof that an article has been marked in violation of the provisions of this act shall be deemed to be prima facie proof that such article was manufactured after this act became effective.

SEC. 11. This act shall become effective six months after its passage, and shall not apply to any article manufactured prior thereto.

SEC. 12. If any part of this act, or the application thereof to any particular situation, is held by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid on account of unconstitutionality, such adjudication shall not affect the remainder of this act or the application of such first-mentioned part of this act to any other situation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that bill. It is apparently very important.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, this is a bill which was reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. He was to have been present and to have explained it, but I have just learned that he is unavoidably detained from the Senate. The report of the committee, I will say to the Senator, describes accurately the situation with respect to the metal platinum in connection with its use in jewelry.

The purpose of the pending bill is to provide restrictions regarding the use of the platinum so as to prevent fraud. It is in keeping with the gold and silver legislation enacted by Congress in 1906, which legislation has created very high standards throughout the country in connection with the marking of jewelry.

In 1906 the Federal Government passed an act to protect the marking of gold and silver and creating adequate standards therefor. This is a bill to provide for the correct marking of platinum so as to bring it to the same high standard. The bill is indorsed by the retail jewelers' associations in practically all the States of the Union, as the Senator will see if he will read the report. I do not care to go into the whole question.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, there is one question that occurs to me and that is this: Of course, if fraudulent representations were made with respect to the character of the platinum—that is to say, if it was an alloy instead of being pure platinum—the person making such false representations would come under the denouncement of local statutes. The question in my mind is whether the Federal Government ought to prescribe the standard for platinum any more than it should prescribe the standard for lead or antimony, or any other metal. Of course, as to gold and silver, which are used as money, there is a different obligation resting upon the Government.

Mr. WATSON. Yes; but gold and silver have been standardized by governmental action for use in jewelry, and platinum is now used very generally in the manufacture of jewelry in connection with gold, as the Senator understands. The quality of the material makes very great difference in the jewelry that is manufactured, and while the average person can not detect the lack of purity in the platinum, yet if the platinum is pure it lasts a long time and is durable, and, on the other hand, if it is not pure it is not durable. That is my understanding of the situation.

Mr. COPELAND rose.

Mr. WATSON. Perhaps the Senator from New York knows more about it than I do.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to say that white gold and platinum look exactly alike, but the jewelers' associations of almost every State in the Union and all the local associations of high standing representing the highest-grade jewelers feel that this is a very necessary measure in order to protect the public against the imposition of fraudulent imitations.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, the point I am making is that, if Congress begins to prescribe the standard of purity of every article that goes into trade and commerce, pretty soon we will be asked to take over the control of all of the commodities that are carried in interstate commerce and Congress may have imposed upon it a burden the magnitude of which it is impossible now to comprehend. I shall not object to the bill but it does seem to me that it is very unwise legislation. We will be asked pretty soon to fix a standard of purity for everything, and the State statutes punishing for fraudulent representations will become nugatory and will cease to be enforced.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. A. CLATTERBUCK

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4619) for the relief of E. A. Clatterbuck, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, to E. A. Clatterbuck, of Warrenton, Va., the sum of $24.65, being the amount due him for housing in the post-office building at Warrenton, Va., 49.3 tons of coal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOTES OF THE PANAMA RAILROAD CO.

The bill (H. R. 11245) to cancel certain notes of the Panama Railroad Co. held by the Treasurer of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLAINE. In the absence of the chairman of the committee, who reported the bill, I suggest it go over.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the United States Government owns every share of stock of the Panama Railroad Co. This bill is merely to provide for the cancellation of a debt which the United States owes to itself.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The situation is not even so grave as that suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania. The obligation has been extinguished for many years; there has been made provision for the cancellation of the notes, and this is intended simply as a bookkeeping proposition.

Mr. BLAINE. In view of the explanation which has been made, I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows

Be it enacted, etc., That the Treasurer of the United States is authorized and directed to cancel and surrender to the Panama Railroad Co. the notes given by such company to the United States prior to March 4, 1911, with respect to which payment of interest and principal was discontinued by section 2 of the act approved March 4, 1911 (U. S. C., title 48, sec. 1333).

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CODIFICATION OF CANAL ZONE LAWS

The bill (H. R. 11475) to revise and codify the laws of the Canal Zone was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to have all of the laws now in force in the Canal Zone revised and codified, and when such revision and codification has been completed to report the same to Congress for its approval.

SEC. 2. In order to carry out the purpose of this act as early as practicable, the President is authorized to employ such persons skilled in the codification of laws as he may deem necessary and to fix their compensation; he may call upon the judge of the District Court of the Canal Zone and the district attorney thereof for such assistance as they can render, and the said judge and district attorney are hereby authorized to render such assistance as they can in the performance of such duties. The President is also further authorized to employ such members of the district bar of the Canal Zone and such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants as he may deem necessary for the proper and early completion of such work and to fix their compensation.

SEC. 3. As soon as a proper code of all the laws now in force in the Canal Zone shall have been prepared, the President is authorized to report the same to Congress with his recommendation; and the President is further authorized to report with such code such changes in the laws now in force in the Canal Zone as he deems necessary or wise for the proper administration of justice therein and the proper maintenance and operation of the Panama Canal.

SEC. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of not more than $25,000 to be used by the President for the payment of salaries of persons employed, for necessary travel and other expenses of such employees, going to and from the Canal Zone, and while in the Canal Zone, engaged in the performance of such duties, and for necessary printing, books, stationery, and other expenditures incidental to the performance of such work.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELECTORS OF PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT

The bill (H. R. 7373) providing for the meeting of electors of President and Vice President and for the issuance and transmission of the certificates of their selection and of the result of their determination, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FESS. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AUGUSTA CORNOG

The bill (S. 3931) for the relief of Augusta Cornog was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the United States Employees' Compensation Commission to extend to Augusta Cornog, a former employee of the United States Public Health Service, the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, compensation to commence from and after the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION

The bill (H. R. 11526) to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CREDIT FOR MILITARY SERVICE OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The bill (S. 860) allowing credit to postal and substitute postal employees for time served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That postal employees and substitute postal employees, in all branches of the Postal Service, who have served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during any war, expedition, or occupation by the armed forces of the United States shall receive credit for all time served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Crops during such war, expedition, or occupation, on the basis of one day's credit of eight hours in the Postal Service for each served in the military, marine, or naval service, and be promoted to the grade, and seniority within grade, as such day-for-day credit will entitle such postal employee or substitute postal employee to progress.

SEC. 2. This act shall apply to such postal employees and substitute postal employees who are in the Postal Service at the date of the passage of this act. No employee in the Postal Service shall be reduced in grade or salary as a result of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. All laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIPLOMATIC FRANKING PRIVILEGE

The bill (S. 3800) to carry out provisions of the Pan American Postal Convention concerning franking privileges for diplomatic officers in Pan American countries and the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That under such regulations as the Postmaster General shall prescribe correspondence of the members of the Diplomatic Corps of the countries of the Pan American Postal Union stationed in the United States may be reciprocally transmitted in the domestic mails free of postage and be entitled to free registration, but without any right to indemnity in case of loss. The same privilege shall be accorded consuls of such countries stationed in the United States, and vice consuls when they are discharging the functions of such consuls, for the exchange of official correspondence among themselves and for that which they direct to the Government of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE AIR MAIL

The bill (H. R. 8337) to amend the air mail act of February 2, 1925, as amended by the act of June 3, 1926, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the air mail act of February 2, 1925 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 463), as amended by the act of June 3, 1926, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the rates of postage on air mail shall not be less than 5 cents for each ounce or fraction thereof."

SEC. 2. That after section 5 of said act (U. S. C., title 39, section 465) a new section shall be added as follows:

"SEC. 6. That the Postmaster General may by negotiation with an air-mail contractor who has satisfactorily operated under the authority of this act for a period of two years or more, arrange, with the consent of the surety for the contractor and the continuation of the obligation of the surety during the existence or life of the certificate provided for hereinafter, for the surrender of the contract and the substitution therefor of an air-mail route certificate, which shall be issued by the Postmaster General in the name of such air-mail contractor, and which shall provide that the holder shall have the right of carriage of air mail over the route set out in the certificate so long as he complies with such rules, regulations, and orders as shall from time to time be issued by the Postmaster General for meeting the needs of the Postal Service and adjusting air-mail operations to the advances in the art of flying: Provided, That such certificate shall be for a period not exceeding 10 years from the beginning of carrying mail under the contract. Said certificate may be canceled at any time for willful neglect on the part of the holder to carry out such rules, regulations, or orders; notice of such intended cancellation to be given in writing by the Postmaster General and 60 days provided to the holder in which to answer such written notice of the Postmaster General. The rate of compensation to the holder of such an air-mail route certificate shall be determined by periodical negotiation between the certificate holder and the Postmaster General, but shall never exceed the rate of compensation provided for in the original contract of the air-mail route certificate holder."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALLOWANCES TO FOURTH-CLASS POSTMASTERS

The bill (H. R. 7900) granting allowances for rent, fuel, light, and equipment to postmasters of the fourth class, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after July 1, 1928, postmasters of the fourth class shall be paid as allowances for rent, fuel, light, and equipment an amount equal to 15 per cent of the compensation earned in each quarter, such allowances to be paid at the end of each quarter at the same time and in the same manner as their regular compensation.

The bill was reported to the the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SICK LEAVE TO POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The bill (H. R. 12383) to amend section 11 of an act approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1064, U. S. C., title 39), granting sick leave to employees in the Postal Service, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 11 of the act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1064, U. S. C., title 39, sec. 823), is amended to read as follows:

"Employees in the Postal Service shall be granted 15 days' leave of absence with pay exclusive of Sundays and holidays, each fiscal year, and sick leave with pay at the rate of 10 days a year, exclusive of Sundays and holidays, to be cumulative, but no sick leave with pay in excess of six months shall be granted during any one fiscal year. Sick leave shall be granted only upon satisfactory evidence of illness in accordance with the regulations to be prescribed by the Postmaster General."

SEC. 2. This act shall become effective July 1, 1928.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIFFERENTIAL PAY FOR NIGHT WORK IN POSTAL SERVICE

The bill (H. R. 5681) to provide a differential in pay for night work in the Postal Service was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after July 1, 1928, supervisory employees, special clerks, clerks, substitute clerks, watchmen, messengers, laborers, and employees of the motor-vehicle service in first and second class post offices; carriers and substitute carriers in the City Delivery Service; and railway postal clerks, substitute railway postal clerks, and laborers in the Railway Mail Service, who are required to perform night work, shall be paid extra for such work at the rate of 10 per cent of their hourly pay per hour: Provided, That night work is defined as any work done between the hours of 6 o'clock postmeridian and 6 o'clock antemeridian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GUSTAVE HOFFMAN

The bill (S. 3912) for the relief of Gustave Hoffman, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Gustave Hoffman, formerly a letter carrier in the Postal Service at St. Paul, Minn., the sum of $5,300, representing pay at the rate of $100 a month from May 2, 1917, the date he was discharged from the Postal Service on charges of disloyalty to the United States, to October 2, 1921, the date of his exoneration from such charges.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, we are going pretty fast. I notice that the bill is unaccompanied by any report. May we not have an explanation of it?

Mr. MOSES. I had supposed that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], who introduced the bill and who is much interested in it, would be present this evening, but I can state exactly to the Senate what this measure means, although I think the language of the bill sets forth its purpose.

The beneficiary of the bill was in the Postal Service and had been in the Postal Service for almost a sufficiently long period to entitle him to retire and secure the benefits of the retirement law. During the World War, however, because of his name more than anything else, he was accused of having made disloyal statements in spite of the fact that his only son was then serving in the Army and was killed in action. Later the man was dismissed from the service without any hearing whatever. Some friends of his persisted in pressing his case, however, and a full investigation was made by the inspectors of the Post Office Department and also by the Department of Justice. The man was completely exonerated of the charges that had been made against him. By that time, however, he was too old to be reinstated in the service under the law affecting the Postal Service, and nothing has been done for his relief from that injustice.

The Senator from Minnesota offered a very detailed statement of the case before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and the Post Office Department itself in a communication to the chairman of the committee expressed its entire acquiescence in the statement of facts which I have just made and expressed its entire willingness that this bill should become a law, and that in view of the fact, Mr. President, that the Post Office Department is probably the most rigorous of all the departments of the Government in resisting legislation of this character.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I desire to say, on behalf of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], that he would have been here to-night if we had not had an agreement to take up other bills instead of this. That accounts for his absence.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHORTER WORKDAY ON SATURDAY FOR POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The bill (S. 3281) to provide a shorter workday on Saturday for postal employees was considered as in the Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter when the needs of the service require supervisory employees, special clerks, clerks, and laborers in first and second class post offices, and employees of the motor-vehicle service, and carriers in the City Delivery Service and in the village delivery service, and employees of the Railway Mail Service to perform service in excess of four hours on Saturdays they shall be allowed compensatory time for such service on one day within five working-days next succeeding the Saturday on which the excess service was performed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NONMAILABLE MATTER

The bill (S. 3127) to amend section 217, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 217, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, be amended to read as follows:

"All kinds of poison, and all articles and compositions containing poison, and all poisonous animals, insects, and reptiles, and explosives of all kinds, and inflammable materials, and infernal machines, and mechanical, chemical, or other devices or compositions which may ignite or explode, and all disease germs or scabs, and all other natural or artificial articles, compositions, or material, of whatever kind, which may kill or in anywise hurt, harm, or injure another, or damage, deface, or otherwise injure the mails or other property, whether sealed as first-class matter or not, are hereby declared to be nonmailable matter and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or station thereof, nor by any letter carrier; but the Postmaster General may permit the transmission in the mails, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe as to preparation and packing, of any articles hereinbefore described which are not outwardly or of their own force dangerous or injurious to life, health, or property: Provided, That the transmission in the mails of poisonous drugs and medicines may be limited by the Postmaster General to shipments of such articles from the manufacturer thereof or dealer therein to licensed physicians, surgeons, dentists, pharmacists, druggists, and veterinarians, under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe: Provided further, That all spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind are hereby declared to be nonmailable and shall not be deposited in or carried through the mails. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail, according to the direction thereon or at any place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, unless in accordance with the rules and regulations hereby authorized to be prescribed by the Postmaster General, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail, according to the direction thereon or at any place to which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, whether transmitted in accordance with the rules and regulations authorized to be prescribed by the Postmaster General or not, with the design, intent, or purpose to kill or in any wise hurt, harm, or injure another, or damage, deface, or otherwise injure the mails or other property, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 20 years, or both."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOSES subsequently said: Mr. President, in connection with the vote just taken for the passage of Senate Bill 3127, my attention has been called by a colleague upon the floor to what is either a misprint in the bill or a palpable error in the language intended to carry out the purpose expressed in the bill. Inasmuch as it is not possible hastily now to formulate an amendment to take care of the error, I ask unanimous consent that we may reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and that it be restored to its place on the Calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

QUALIFICATIONS OF ACTING POSTMASTERS

The bill (S. 3328) to amend title 39, the Postal Service, Chapter II, section 32, the Code of Laws of the United States of America in force December 6, 1926 (vol. 44, Pt. I, U. S. Stat. L.), was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, in what way does this bill amend the postal laws?

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I have an amendment that I wish to offer to this bill. It simply makes a change requiring acting postmasters to have the same qualifications as the regular postmasters. The Postmaster General, in his report, says there are a great many places where there are post offices in lumber camps, at coal mines or oil fields, and other similar business places, where it would undoubtedly be necessary to continue post offices, and he says under those circumstances he can not indorse the bill. This amendment covers the objections stated by the Postmaster General.

I send the amendment to the desk, and ask to have it stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was, on page 2, line 11, to add the following:

Provided, That this act shall not apply to post offices in lumber camps, at coal mines, or oil fields, and other similar business places.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That title 39, the Postal Service, Chapter II, section 32, the Code of Laws of the United States of America in force December 6, 1926 (vol. 44, Pt. I, U. S. Stat. L.), be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting between the words "postmaster" and "shall," on line 1 thereof, the following: "and acting postmaster or acting postmaster"; and that the said section be, and the same is hereby, further amended by adding at the end, on line 3 thereof, the following: "and shall have so resided for a period of not less than one year and shall be a qualified voter of the State in which he is appointed," so that said section when so amended shall read as follows:

"Every postmaster and acting postmaster or acting postmaster shall reside within the delivery of the office to which he is appointed or within the town or city where the same is situated, and shall have so resided for a period of not less than one year, and shall be a qualified voter of the State in which he is appointed: Provided, That this act shall not apply to post offices in lumber camps, at coal mines or oil fields, and other similar business places."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator that at or near coal mines there might be cities of ten or twelve or fifteen thousand people.

Mr. BLEASE. That would be in the discretion of the Postmaster General, Mr. President. Of course, we have to leave some things to the discretion of the department.

Mr. JONES. Is that in the discretion of the Postmaster General? I should like to hear the amendment read again.

Mr. BLEASE. If the Senator will look at the Postmaster General's letter he will see that I used his exact words in the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be restated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 11, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall not apply to post offices in lumber camps, at coal mines or oil fields, and other similar places.

Mr. JONES. There is no discretion there in the Postmaster General.

Mr. BLEASE. It says "and other similar places."

Mr. JONES. It says "Provided, That this act shall not apply," and so forth. The Postmaster General can not waive it if there is a town of 5,000 people near a coal mine.

Mr. HEFLIN. But it says "at the coal mine."

Mr. JONES. That would be at the coal mine.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not think so.

Mr. JONES. You can find towns at coal mines up here in Pennsylvania that have a population of 10,000.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, as I understand, this simply makes the requirements for an acting postmaster the same as those for a postmaster. That changes the law. Places of this kind and character are excluded from that.

Mr. JONES. What is meant by requiring the qualifications of an acting postmaster to be the same as those of a postmaster?

Mr. SWANSON. Frequently a man is appointed to act as postmaster who is not a resident. Sometimes he is taken from one State and brought to another. I have heard that complaint made, that a man is sent from outside the State to be acting postmaster until they can name a postmaster. This bill simply requires, as I understand from hearing it read, that an acting postmaster must have the qualifications of a postmaster, except at these temporary places.

Mr. JONES. What are the qualifications of a postmaster that are required?

Mr. NEELY. That he shall vote the straight Republican ticket of the district.

Mr. JONES. That is a mighty good requirement. I am glad to know that.

Mr. NORRIS. Why do you waive that in the proximity of a mine?

Mr. JONES. I think this bill had better go over until we have an opportunity to examine it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I will state that the Post Office Committee reported this bill favorably. They looked into it very carefully, and I should like to have it passed. If it is not passed—I am not making any threats—but to-morrow morning I shall say why I introduced it, and I shall say some things that will not be very complimentary to some Republicans.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to say, as one member of the Post Office Committee, that I took occasion to call attention to the fact that there are cases where it is practicaly impossible to find some one to act as postmaster temporarily who does reside within the delivery of that particular office.

Mr. BLEASE. I excepted those.

Mr. PHIPPS. I shall be very glad if the Senator will join me in considering that situation, and see if we can prepare an amendment that would, I believe, improve his bill. On principle I am in favor of it; but I can conceive of exceptional cases where it would be a disadvantage to have such a law on the statute books.

Mr. BLEASE. I know the reason why this bill is being objected to, Mr. President; and I know, furthermore, that the Postmaster General transported a man from Georgia to South Carolina to make him an acting postmaster, and they are trying to uphold his hands. To-morrow morning, in a proper way, I shall explain this situation to the Senate.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator not to be too precipitate? I should like to take up the matter with him, and I happen to have an important conference on to-morrow morning. Within the next day or two, before the end of the week, I shall be able to take up the subject with the Senator.

Mr. BLEASE. I assure the Senator from Colorado that I am not going to say a word about him.

Mr. PHIPPS. I am not thinking about that. The Senator can say anything he chooses.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I insist that the Senator from South Carolina tell his story, whatever it may be. The fact that he has aroused so much apprehension on the other side of the aisle makes me particularly anxious to know about it. If there is a worse condition existing in the post office régime than the Senator from South Carolina indicated here a few days ago, when he said that post offices or postmasterships were being sold wholesale in South Carolina, and that he could prove it, and that he had informed the Postmaster General and the Attorney General of the fact—if he knows anything worse than that, and I am led to believe that he does, I want him to tell it.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I received a letter to-day stating the actual amount that was paid for a post office in South Carolina, and an affidavit along with it.

Mr. BLEASE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask to recur to Senate bill 3328. I have added an amendment suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], which I think will be satisfactory to all parties.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senate will recur to Senate bill 3328. Does the Senator withdraw his other amendment?

Mr. BLEASE. No; I have just added a few words to it which were suggested by the Senator from Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment, as modified, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall not apply to post offices of the fourth class in lumber camps, at coal mines, or oil fields, and other similar business places.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, that is entirely agreeable to me; but I hope that the acceptance of this amendment and the passage of the measure will not lead the Senator from South Carolina to withhold the disclosures that he has promised to make, because I want to say that I am in sympathy with a good many of his views with reference to the conditions in the South that he has pointed out.

Mr. BLEASE. I shall be glad to do it, and ask for an investigation.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONDEMNATION OF LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 4124) to provide for notice to owners of land assessed for benefits by the verdict of condemnation juries in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 2, line 12, after the word "Columbia," to strike out the period and "unless the person or persons whose land is assessed for benefits as aforesaid shall file objections to the verdict of the jury within 30 days after the date of the publication herein provided for, the court shall ratify and confirm the verdict of the jury," and insert "showing the amount assessed against each such piece or parcel of land and stating the time within which interested parties may file with the court any objections or exceptions they may have to the verdict," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That where in any condemnation proceedings instituted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15, or in accordance with the provisions of chapter 55 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, the jury of condemnation shall assess benefits against any land or parcel of land no part of which was taken by the condemnation proceedings, and the owner of the land or parcel of land so assessed for benefits was not served with notice of the condemnation proceedings, notice of such assessment for benefits shall be given by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia by registered letter, mailed to the last known address of the person listed on the records of the assessor of the District of Columbia as the owner of the land or parcel of land so assessed, and, in addition thereto, the court shall give public notice of the land or parcels of land assessed for benefits, no part of which was taken by the condemnation proceedings, by advertisement once in each of three daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia, showing the amount assessed against each such piece or parcel of land and stating the time within which interested parties may file with the court any objections or exceptions they may have to the verdict. The mailing by registered letter and the notice by publication herein provided for shall be sufficient notice to the owner of any land or parcel of land assessed for benefits as aforesaid. Nothing herein contained shall be considered to abrogate or nullify the option conferred upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia by the act of Congress approved May 28, 1926, entitled "An act to provide for the condemnation of land for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of streets, avenues, roads, or highways in accordance with the plan of the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLEASE. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

USE OF MAILS FOR CARRYING LOTTERY PARAPHERNALIA, ETC.

The bill (S. 2751) to amend section 213, act of March 4, 1909 (Criminal Code, title 18, sec. 336, U. S. C.), affixing penalties for use of mails in connection with fraudulent devices and lottery paraphernalia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, it so happens that by reason of a confusion in the preparation of the copy for the printer for this measure, it comes to the Senate in a printed form which is very far from the purpose of the committee and very far from carrying out the purposes of the measure itself.

I think the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] who was the author of the original bill, which was reported with amendments, has the correct copy with him; and if he will offer that as an amendment, striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting the corrected copy which he has in his hands, I think we can then deal with it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have here the revised copy prepared by the department. The bill itself was recommended by the department. It merely adds language strengthening and making more effective the enforcement of the statute relating to the use of the mails for lottery paraphernalia and fraudulent devices.

Mr. MOSES. And, further, in the printed report which accompanies the bill I think a full explanation of its purpose will be found.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert the following:

That section 213, act of March 4, 1909 (Criminal Code, title 18, sec. 336, U. S. C.), be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 213. No letter, package, postal card, or circular concerning any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or concerning any article, device, or thing so constructed as to have for its principal and primary use the risk of money or property by lot or chance, or concerning any unfair, dishonest, or cheating gambling article, device, or thing; and no lottery ticket or part thereof, or paper, certificate, or instrument purporting to be or to represent a ticket, chance, share, or interest in or dependent upon the event of a lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance; and no article, device, or thing so constructed as to have for its principal and primary use the risk of money or property by lot or chance, or matter relating thereto; and no unfair, dishonest, or cheating gambling article, device, or thing; and no check, draft, bill, money, postal note, or money order for the purchase of any ticket or part thereof, or of any share or chance in any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme; and no newspaper, circular, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance, or containing any list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of any such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme, whether said list contains any part or all of such prizes, or containing any advertisement of any article, device, or thing so constructed as to have for its principal and primary use the risk of money or property by lot or chance, or containing any advertisement of any unfair, dishonest, or cheating gambling article, device, or thing, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both; and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than five years. Any person violating any provision of this section may be tried and punished either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed, or to which it was carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to say a word with respect to the substitute bill that has just been read.

This bill deals with a subject that has had the very serious consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary. Protracted hearings were held. The matter was under consideration in at least two or three sessions, and the committee finally worked out an act which was passed by the Congress which we thought met the situation.

I have not had an opportunity to look at the substitute that has been offered; but the bill that is before me has in it the infirmities which we sought, at least, to overcome by the bill which had the approval of the Judiciary Committee. The late chairman of the committee, Senator Cummins, was very deeply interested in this matter, and he and I spent some tiresome hours over the problem presented by it. Under these circumstances I think we ought not hurriedly to pass this substitute measure.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I am entirely willing that the matter shall go over for the present, in order that the Senator from Montana may examine the substitute which has just been offered by the Senator from Texas.

I am fully aware that the bill which the Senator from Montana has before him is replete with errors, and ought not to be considered here for a minute, due wholly to printer's errors, in which a current of responsibility is to be found, and I will not attempt to fix it anywhere. Then, if I may suggest to the Senator from Montana that at some time presently he and the Senator from Texas and I may have an opportunity to talk about the substitute measure as presented, I am entirely willing that it shall go over for the minute.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the matter may go over, I shall be very glad to join with the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is entirely satisfactory to me, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, that raises a question in my mind as to whether these bills ought to go to the Judiciary Committee. Order of Business 1031, Senate bill 3127, refers to an act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States. That does not belong in the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads at all.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, these measures, of course, deal with matters which are exclusively in the hands of the Post Office Department, and I suppose for that reason they were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I want to assure the Senator from Florida that neither the chairman nor any member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads seeks to have legislation referred to that committee, because there is enough of it there automatically.

Mr. FLETCHER. I realize that; but the case that was brought up by the Senator from Montana shows that there ought to be some uniformity about it, because they have had the same measure before the Judiciary Committee.

A. M. THOMAS

The bill (S. 3525) for the relief of A. M. Thomas was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to A. M. Thomas, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $302.40, representing the amount paid by him as surety on the forfeited bail bond of Louis Ship-she, who was subsequently rearrested and produced in court through the efforts of A. M. Thomas.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

D. GEORGE SHORTEN

The bill (H. R. 11960) for the relief of D. George Shorten was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3902) to provide books and educational supplies free of charge to pupils of the public schools of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MILITARY AND NAVAL PAY AND ALLOWANCES

The bill (S. 3692) to amend the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922, as amended, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], the author of the bill, that we either have the bill read or that he explain it. It seems to be a very comprehensive measure.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I think I can in a very few words explain this bill. First I observe that it is in the interest of the chief gunners, the chief boatswains, chief machinists, chief carpenters, chief pharmacists, and chief pay clerks in the Navy. The bill was drafted, indeed, by the Navy Department. It has the unqualified approval of the Secretary of the Navy, and I am happy to add it has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The bill affects these enlisted men. Under the law they enlist, and if they serve faithfully for 10 years they become what is termed, in the nomenclature of the Navy, warrant officers. If they continue to serve 6 years faithfully and efficiently, and pass an examination, they become what are termed commissioned warrant officers.

These men, I repeat, are volunteers. They are men who come up from the ranks. They have not had the advantages of our Naval Academy, but they become experts in their several lines of duty aboard naval vessels. Without them no Sampson, or Schley, or Sims, or any other admiral, could successfully navigate one of our naval vessels. Upon them rests victory or defeat, successful voyage or disaster. I would love to take the time to pay just tribute to this type of our loyal servants in the Navy, but if Senators are interested, and will turn to the hearings, they will there read the eloquent and the true tribute paid to them by Admiral Sims.

What is the scope or purpose of this bill? It is this, to put it briefly, of course, necessarily. By the act of 1916 this class of our loyal and efficient servants were put on a parity of salary with ensigns, junior lieutenants, and lieutenants of the same length of service—that is to say, after 10 years—followed by examination, they were then to be put on a parity of salary with the graduates from our academy, in the respective ranks of ensigns, junior lieutenants, and lieutenants. But inadvertently by the act of 1922 this parity designed by the act of 1916 was destroyed, so that the salaries of these men remain stationary, and do not increase correspondingly or concurrently with the increases of salaries of ensigns, junior lieutenants, and lieutenants.

Mr. WATSON. What is the difference in salary?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Specifically, the salaries of the different grades, I do not carry them in my mind; but the bill in its total sum amounts to something over $200,000 a year.

Mr. WARREN. From its title, the bill seems also to apply to the Army, the Marine Corps, the Coast Guard, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Public Health Service. Perhaps the Senator who has so eloquently portrayed the character of the service of the men in the Navy will explain as to the other services also.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The bill amends the act approved June 10, 1922, as amended; but it relates to and affects those I have named, not those in other lines of service.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am very sorry to ask that the bill shall go over, but I have an amendment which I desire to offer dealing with the Director of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. I did not know this bill was on the calendar until it was called. I will have the amendment in shape so that when the bill is reached again it may be offered.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I ask the Senators who have listened that before the matter comes up again they will acquaint themselves with the real purpose of this bill, so that it may pass. I know of no other bill which appeals more strongly to me than this one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's five minutes have expired.

Mr. WARREN. I have not undertaken to find fault with the measure, but it seems to me that there should be such an explanation in regard to the Army and these other branches as has been given in regard to the Navy, as to an effort to arrange as to compensation, rank, and so forth.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I intended to proceed to explain the full scope of the bill, but, of course——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired, and the bill will go over.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, in my time, will the Senator explain to us how this can inure to the benefit of warrant officers of the Army?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The bill goes over, and there is no use to multiply words now.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Very good. I am going to find that out, or this bill is not going to pass.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I assure the Senator he will find it out, and if I am a true prophet the bill will pass.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then, the bill will pass carrying similar benefits for warrant officers of the Army.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have no objection.

CONDEMNATION JURIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar 1033, Senate bill 4124, to provide for notice to owners of land assessed for benefits by the verdict of condemnation juries in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. I understand that the Senator from South Carolina withdraws his objection. I trust that we may act upon this bill now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where in any condemnation proceedings instituted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in accordance with the provisions of subchaper 1 of chapter 15, or in accordance with the provisions of chapter 55 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, the jury of condemnation shall assess benefits against any land or parcel of land no part of which was taken by the condemnation proceedings, and the owner of the land or parcel of land so assessed for benefits was not served with notice of the condemnation proceedings, notice of such assessment for benefits shall be given by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia by registered letter, mailed to the last known address of the person listed on the records of the assessor of the District of Columbia as the owner of the land or parcel of land so assessed, and, in addition thereto, the court shall give public notice of the land or parcels of land assessed for benefits, no part of which was taken by the condemnation proceedings, by advertisement once in each of three daily newspapers published in the District of Columbia, showing the amount assessed against each such piece or parcel of land and stating the time within which interested parties may file with the court any objections or exceptions they may have to the verdict. The mailing by registered letter and the notice by publication herein provided for shall be sufficient notice to the owner of any land or parcel of land assessed for benefits as aforesaid. Nothing herein contained shall be considered to abrogate or nullify the option conferred upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia by the act of Congress approved May 28, 1926, entitled "An act to provide for the condemnation of land for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of streets, avenues, roads, or highways in accordance with the plan of the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSCONTINENTAL POST ROAD

The bill (S. 1900) to provide for the construction of a post road and military highway from a point on or near the Atlantic coast to a point on or near the Pacific coast, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this is a very important measure, offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] at the request of our dear friend the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], who unfortunately is detained from the Senate on account of illness. The bill has very great merit, but there are a number of amendments which have been suggested to me by Senators, and if it meets with the approval of the Senator from New Hampshire, I ask that it may go over until we may have further time to discuss it.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Utah is quite correct that I introduced the bill in behalf of the Senator from Delaware. May I ask the Senator from Utah if it will be possible within a reasonable time, and certainly prior to the expiration of this session of Congress, for him to formulate the amendments so that I can discuss them with him?

Mr. KING. I shall be very glad to prepare them immediately. Some have been suggested, and I shall prepare them at once.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over temporarily.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3890) to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ENGINEER FIELD CLERKS, AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES

The bill (S. 3210) providing for the men who served with the American Expeditionary Forces in Europe as engineer field clerks the status of Army field clerk and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps of the United States Army, when honorably discharged, was announced as next in order, having been reported adversely from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KING. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The bill (H. R. 8778) for the relief of William W. Woodruff was announced as next in order, having been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs adversely.

Mr. KING. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

GILES GORDON

The bill (H. R. 3467) for the relief of Giles Gordon was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACQUISITION OF LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 4126) authorizing the National Capital Park and Planning Commission to acquire rights in land, and to lease land or existing buildings for limited periods in certain instances, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 2, line 3, after the word "grantor," to insert the words "Provided, That such reservation of rights shall not continue beyond the life or lives of the grantor or grantors of the fee: Provided further, That"; on page 2, line 11, to strike out the word "limited"; on page 2 to strike out lines 23 to line 3, page 3, as follows:

SEC. 2. Said commission may authorize the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital to lease, for limited periods pending need for their immediate use in other ways by the public, and on such terms as it shall determine, land or any existing building or structure on land acquired for park purposes.

And on page 3 to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. The Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital is authorized, subject to the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, to lease, for a term not exceeding five years, and to renew such lease for an additional term not exceeding five years, pending need for their immediate use in other ways by the public, and on such terms as the director shall determine, land or any existing building or structure on land acquired for park, parkway, or playground purposes.

So as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the authority of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, established by the act approved April 30, 1926 (Stat. L., vol. 44, p. 374), is hereby enlarged as follows:

Said commission is hereby authorized to acquire, for and in behalf of the United States of America, by gift, devise, purchase, or condemnation, in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 6, 1924 (Stat. L., vol. 43, p. 463), as amended by the act of April 30, 1926 (Stat. L., vol. 44, p. 374), (1) fee title to land subject to limited rights reserved to the grantor: Provided, That such reservation of rights shall not continue beyond the life or lives of the grantor or grantors of the fee: Provided further, That in the opinion of said commission the permanent public park purposes for which control over said land is needed are not essentially impaired by said reserved rights and that there is a substantial saving in cost by acquiring said land subject to said limited rights as compared with the cost of acquiring unencumbered title thereto; (2) permanent rights in land adjoining park property sufficient to prevent the use of said land in certain specified ways which would essentially impair the value of the park property for its purposes: Provided, That in the opinion of said commission the protection and maintenance of the essential public values of said park can thus be secured more economically than by acquiring said land in fee or by other available means: Provided further, That all contracts for acquisition of land subject to such limited rights reserved to the grantor and for acquisition of such limited permanent rights in land shall be subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

SEC. 2. The Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital is authorized, subject to the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, to lease, for a term not exceeding five years, and to renew such lease for an additional term not exceeding five years, pending need for their immediate use in other ways by the public, and on such terms as the director shall determine, land or any existing building or structure on land acquired for park, parkway, or playground purposes.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I did not want to object to the consideration of the amendments or their adoption, but I would like to have the bill go over, because I desire to present amendments to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CAPT. GEORGE R. ARMSTRONG

The bill (H. R. 4664) for the relief of Capt. George R. Armstrong, United States Army, retired, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "that," to insert the words "in recognition of the active service of Capt. George R. Armstrong, United States Army, retired, for more than 10 years after his retirement, and of his extraordinary service and gallantry in protection of the United States mint in the San Francisco fire of 1906"; and on line 8, after the word "appoint," to insert the word "said"; and on the same line, to strike out the words "captain, United States Army, retired," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in recognition of the active service of Capt. George R. Armstrong, United States Army, retired, for more than 10 years after his retirement, and of his extraordinary service and gallantry in protection of the United States mint in the San Francisco fire of 1906, the President be authorized to appoint said George R. Armstrong a lieutenant colonel on the retired list of the United States Army, effective from the date of the approval of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ENGINEER FIELD CLERKS, AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, Senate bill 3210 was indefinitely postponed, but I would like to have that action reconsidered, and that the bill be allowed to remain on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be reinstated on the calendar.

CHARLIE R. PATE

The bill (H. R. 4652) for the relief of Charlie R. Pate, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALARY INCREASES FOR TEACHERS

The bill (S. 3827) to exempt employees of the public-school system of the District of Columbia from the $2,000 salary limitation provision of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act, approved May 10, 1916, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. Let the bill go over.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, was objection made?

Mr. PHIPPS. I desire to get a little information about the bill. I have not had time to study it. I will be very glad to have an explanation, if it is not too lengthy.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I notice that the bill proposes to raise the salary limitation for teachers who get $2,000 a year. I have no objection to that. I want to take this opportunity, however, to say a few words and make some observations regarding the pending salary bill now before the Civil Service Committee. That bill proposes to increase the salaries of those who are getting high salaries already, much more than it will increase the salaries of the low-paid employees. The bill was originally introduced in the House of Representatives to give the poorly paid employees of the Government a decent living wage. It has been manipulated until to-day it is primarily for the purpose of increasing the salaries of those who already get good salaries.

I want to say now that if that bill comes into the Senate in the form in which it passed the House it will have a long, hard struggle getting through, unless it is amended to take care of the people whom it was introduced to take care of, namely, those getting less than $1,200 a year. The bill was introduced in the Senate providing for a new grade at $9,000 a year, and virtually proposes to leave those who are getting $900 and $1,000 a year at salaries of less than $100 a month. Under the guise of trying to help the poorly paid employees, that bill is being turned into a bill to increase primarily the salaries of those already receiving good wages. If that bill continues in that form, I do not see any reason why it should pass at all.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, I would like to say to the Senator from Washington that I had to forego the great pleasure of going to New York to-day to confer with Governor Smith because the Civil Service Committee has under consideration the bill to which he refers. We gave the greater part of the day to it, and we are going to give the greater part of a couple of more days to it, and possibly when the Senator sees the bill the next time he will not recognize it.

Mr. DILL. I hope I shall not recognize it for the reason that the bill will give decent increases to the poorly paid employees.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I made objection to the consideration of Senate bill 3827 merely because I had not had time to read the report. Since I objected I have read the report, and I now recognize the bill and its purposes, with which I am familiar, and I desire to withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 6 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved May 10, 1916, as amended, shall not apply to employees of the night schools, vacation schools, and Americanization schools of the public-school system of the District of Columbia conducted under and within appropriations made by Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUFFALO PASTURE IN SOUTH DAKOTA

The bill (S. 4022) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to lease land in Stanley County, S. Dak., to Henry A. O'Neil for a buffalo pasture, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from entry and to lease to Henry A. O'Neil, of Fort Pierre, S. Dak., for a period of 10 years, at an annual rental of not less than $75, under rules and regulations to be by him prescribed, the following described public lands in the county of Stanley and State of South Dakota: Sections 26 and 27, the north half southeast quarter, and the north half section 34, the north half northeast quarter, the north half northwest quarter, and the north half southwest quarter of section 35, and lot 4, and the south half northwest quarter and the west half southwest quarter of section 25, all in township 6 north, range 30 east, Black Hills meridian; said lands to be used exclusively for the pasturing of native buffalo, and for no other purpose: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may at any time cancel any lease which may hereafter be made under the provisions hereof and restore said land to the public domain: Provided further, That the lease authorized hereunder may be assigned with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALLIE E. M'QUEEN AND JANIE M'QUEEN PARKER

The bill (H. R. 9789) for the relief of Sallie E. McQueen and Janie McQueen Parker, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue a patent to Sallie E. McQueen and Janie McQueen Parker for the west 80 acres of fractional section 1, township 18 north, range 18 east, St. Stephens meridian, lying south of the Coosa River in Elmore County, Ala., upon payment therefor at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF LANDS IN CLARKE COUNTY, MISS.

The bill (H. R. 12049) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell to W. H. Walker, Ruth T. Walker, and Queen E. Walker, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre, the southeast one-fourth section 34, township 2 north, range 14 east, Choctaw meridian, Clarke County, Miss., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell the lands described as the southeast quarter section 34, township 2 north, range 14 east, Choctaw meridian, Clarke County, Miss., to W. H. Walker, Ruth T. Walker, and Queen E. Walker, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD ENTRY OF ENGLEHARD SPERSTAD

The bill (H. R. 332) validating the homestead entry of Englehard Sperstad for certain public land in Alaska was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the entry hereinafter described be, and the same is hereby, validated and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue patent thereon upon the submission of satisfactory proof of compliance with the provisions of the act of June 6, 1912 (37 Stat. 123): Homestead entry, Anchorage, Alaska, No. 06094, made by Englehard Sperstad on January 28, 1924, for the southeast quarter of section 36, township 13 north, range 4 west of the Seward meridian, and in lieu of that tract the Territory of Alaska shall have the right to select equal area of public land of the character subject to selection under its school-land grant.

The bill was reported to Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ETHEL L. SAUNDERS

The bill (H. R. 11716) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents to Ethel L. Saunders, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue a patent to Ethel L. Saunders, of St. Cloud, Fla., for lot 3 of section 10, and lot 3 of section 11, township 26 south, range 31 east, Tallahassee meridian, a part of the lands embraced in homestead application (Gainesville 017626), filed June 18, 1924. The Secretary of the Interior is also authorized and directed, upon payment of $1.25 per acre, to issue a patent to said Ethel L. Saunders for lot 5 of section 11, township 26 south, range 31 east, also claimed by said Ethel L. Saunders under a settlement antedating the survey of the lands.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT OF LAND TO NEW MEXICO

The bill (S. 2572) granting certain land in the town of Hot Springs, N. Mex., to the State of New Mexico was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, my colleague and I have conferred upon the measure and for the time being ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

ROSWELL LAND DISTRICT, NEW MEXICO

The bill (S. 3136) creating the Roswell land district, establishing a land office at Roswell, N. Mex., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, on Tuesday evening, when we were considering the calendar, I proposed Senate bill 3136 as an amendment to a bill of the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], Senate bill 1794. The amendment was proposed on behalf of my colleague and myself. In connection with it I made an error in a statement of fact, which I desire to correct. I stated at that time that the Department of the Interior favored that amendment.

I gained my impression from a conversation I had with my colleague. It develops that the field representative made a favorable report, but the department itself made an unfavorable report, on the substance of the amendment. I simply want to correct my misstatement of fact, since it has been called to my attention.

LEASING OF PUBLIC LANDS FOR AVIATION

The bill (H. R. 11990) to authorize the leasing of public lands for aviation, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion and under such regulations as he may prescribe, to lease for use as a public airport any contiguous public lands, unreserved and unappropriated, not to exceed 640 acres in area, subject to valid rights in such lands under the public land laws.

SEC. 2. Any lease under this act shall be for a period not to exceed 20 years, subject to renewal for like periods upon agreement of the Secretary of the Interior and the lessee. Any such lease shall be subject to the following conditions:

(a) That an annual rental of such sum as the Secretary of the Interior may fix for the use of the lands shall be paid to the United States.

(b) That the lessee shall maintain the lands in such condition, and provide for the furnishing of such facilities, service, fuel, and other supplies, as are necessary to make the lands available for public use as an airport of a rating which may be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce.

(c) That the lessee shall make reasonable regulations to govern the use of the airport, but such regulations shall take effect only upon approval by the Secretary of Commerce.

(d) That all departments and agencies of the United States operating aircraft (1) shall have free and unrestricted use of the airport, and (2) with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, shall have the right to erect and install therein such structures and improvements as the heads of such departments and agencies deem advisable, including facilities for maintaining supplies of fuel, oil, and other materials for operating aircraft.

(e) That whenever the President may deem it necessary for military purposes, the Secretary of War may assume full control of the airport.

SEC. 3. With the consent of the lessee, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cancel any lease of public lands for use as public aviation fields or airports, made under law in force upon the date of the approval of this act, and to lease such lands to the lessee upon the conditions prescribed by this act.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion and under such rules as he may prescribe, to grant permission for the establishment of beacon lights and other air-navigation facilities, except terminal airports, upon tracts of unreserved and unappropriated public lands of the United States of appropriate size, and may withdraw the lands for such purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read "An act to authorize the leasing of public lands for use as public aviation fields."

ABSAROKA AND GALLATIN NATIONAL FORESTS

The bill (H. R. 15) authorizing an appropriation to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of the act of May 26, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 655), to make additions to the Absaroka and Gallatin National Forests, and to improve and extend the winter-feed facilities of the elk, antelope, and other game animals of Yellowstone National Park and adjacent land was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $150,000, which sum shall continue available until expended, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of the act of May 26, 1926 (44 Stats. L. 655), entitled "An act to make additions to the Absaroka and Gallatin National Forests and the Yellowstone National Park, and to improve and extend the winter-feed facilities of the elk, antelope, and other game animals of Yellowstone National Park and adjacent land, and for other purposes": Provided, That the total expenditures from this appropriation shall not exceed the combined total of the sums contributed by private or other agencies under the provisions of clause (a) of section 1 of said act, and the appraised values of land donated or bequeathed under the provisions of clause (b) of section 1 of said act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS AND NATIONAL MONUMENTS

The bill (S. 4173) to transfer jurisdiction over certain national military parks and national monuments from the War Department to the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the administrative jurisdiction and control over the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, Shiloh National Military Park, Gettysburg National Military Park, Vicksburg National Military Park, Guilford Courthouse National Military Park, Moores Creek National Military Park, the national park and memorial at Fort McHenry, Md., Antietam Battle Field, Big Hole Battle Field National Monument, Fort Pulaski National Monument, Fort Marion National Monument, Fort Matanzas National Monument, White Plains Battle Field Monument, Chalmette Monument, the Meriwether Lewis National Monument, the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania County Battle Fields Memorial National Military Park as authorized in act of Congress approved February 14, 1927, the Petersburg National Military Park as authorized in act of Congress approved July 3, 1926, the Stones River National Military Park as authorized in act of Congress approved March 3, 1927, and Lincoln Farm, together with the approach roads thereto, be, and the same are hereby, transferred from the War Department to the Department of the Interior.

SEC. 2. That such civilian employees of the War Department as may be engaged in work relating solely to the parks, monuments, and other areas enumerated in section 1 shall be transferred without change in classification or compensation from the War Department to the Department of the Interior, when the transfer of jurisdiction is effected.

SEC. 3. That the unexpended balance of appropriations, or allotments therefrom, available to the War Department for the administration and protection of these parks, monuments, and other areas, including the appropriations for the salaries of civilian personnel involved, shall be transferred when the transfer of jurisdiction is effected, in such amounts as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, to the Interior Department, and shall become available for expenditure under the supervision of the said Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 4. That after this act becomes effective the parks, monuments, and other areas transferred herein to the jurisdiction of the Interior Department shall be administered under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, and such of these parks, monuments, and other areas as shall be so designated by the Secretary of the Interior shall be known as "national historical parks."

SEC. 5. That all duties, powers, and functions imposed and conferred by law upon the War Department, or the Secretary thereof, or commissions or other bodies under his jurisdiction, in relation to the parks, monuments, and other areas hereby transferred, including the duty of completing the establishment of the same in all cases where such establishment has not already been completed, shall immediately when said transfer becomes effective, be fully imposed and conferred upon and vested in the Department of the Interior, or the Secretary thereof, as the case may be: Provided, That the members of the several commissions in charge of national military parks appointed prior to August 24, 1912, shall continue to hold the offices now held by them, as contemplated in the act of Congress approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 417, 442).

SEC. 6. The duties imposed by the act of Congress approved June 11, 1926, entitled "An act to provide for the study and investigation of battle fields in the United States for commemorative purposes" (47 Stat., pt. 2, p. 726), on the Secretary of War shall, after the passage of this act, be performed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to call upon the Secretary of War for such historical studies and investigations with reference to battle fields within the continental limits of the United States, whereon troops of the United States or of the 13 original Colonies have been engaged against the common enemy, as may be necessary in performing the duties imposed on him by this act: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War shall include annually in the appropriations estimates for their respective departments the estimated cost for the fiscal year in question of the work required to be performed by their respective departments hereunder.

SEC. 7. All laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORMAN P. IVES, JR.

The bill (H. R. 9612) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to allow Norman P. Ives, jr., credit on other lands for compliances made in homestead entry, Gainesville, 021032, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow Norman P. Ives, jr., in connection with any homestead entry he may hereafter make upon lands subject to such entry, but not exceeding 40 acres in area, in one or more tracts or parcels of land, credit for such compliance as he may have made with the material requirements of the homestead law in connection with canceled homestead entry Gainesville 021032 for the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 5, township 4 south, range 17 east, Florida.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF NORBERT BOUDOUSQUIE

The bill (S. 3954) to quiet title in the heirs of Norbert Boudousquie to certain lands in Louisiana was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a patent to be issued to the heirs of Norbert Boudousquie, under cash certificate No. 994, dated December 13, 1849, at New Orleans, La., conveying section 64, township 11 south, range 7 east, and section 64, township 11 south, range 8 east, St. Helena meridian, in the former southeastern land district of Louisiana, notwithstanding any excess in area over the front tract on which the right of entry was based.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SETTLERS' CLAIMS, LAKE COUNTY, FLA.

The bill (H. R. 5695) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to equitably adjust disputes and claims of settlers and others against the United States and between each other arising from incomplete or faulty surveys in township 19 south, range 26 east, and in sections 7, 8, 17, 18, 19, 30, 31, township 19 south, range 27 east, Tallahassee meridian, Lake County, in the State of Florida, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with an amendment on page 3, line 23, to strike out the words "but any applicant may elect to proceed under section 1 of this act," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Provided, That, subject to adverse rights, any person entitled to a preference right to purchase under the provisions of this act may secure under this section lands in his actual possession, whether in a single tract or in surveyed lots, of a maximum area of 84,000 square feet, upon payment therefor at a rate not exceeding $10 for 4,200 square feet, but any applicant may elect to proceed under section 1 of this act: Provided further, That all the provisions hereof applicable to the town of Tavares shall be extended to any other established town within the area affected by this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to equitably adjust disputes and claims of settlers, entrymen, selectors, grantees, and patentees of the United States, their heirs or assigns, against the United States and between each other arising from incomplete or faulty surveys in township 19 south, range 26 east, and in sections 7, 8, 17, 18, 19, 30, 31, township 19 south, range 27 east, Tallahassee meridian, Lake County, in the State of Florida, and to issue directly or in trust as may be found necessary or advisable patent to such settlers, entrymen, selectors, grantees, and patentees, their heirs or assigns, for land claimed through settlement, occupation, purchase, or otherwise in said described area, preserving, as far as he may deem equitable, to those claimants now in possession of public land the right to have patented to them the areas so occupied: Provided, That a charge of not less than the appraised value of the land, exclusive of any improvements placed thereon, be made for each acre or fraction thereof of Government land patented under the provisions of this act, except that adjustment may be effected by exchange of lands patented for lands substantially equal in area, in which event payment shall be required of the difference in appraised values where the value of the land owned by the Government exceeds that of the land offered in exchange: Provided further, That rights acquired subsequent to the withdrawal of December 23, 1925, shall not be recognized or be subject to adjustment hereunder.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept any and all conveyances of land and to cause all necessary surveys to be made, to effect the purposes of this act. All adjustments hereunder shall conform to the approved plats of such survey or resurvey, and no other survey will be recognized.

SEC. 3. That in fixing the appraised price of such lands the Secretary of the Interior shall consider and give effect to the good faith and equities of the occupants of any of the areas found to be public land; and if the whole or any part of such land be within the corporate limits of the town of Tavares, the survey of the lots, blocks, streets, and alleys shall be considered as executed under the provisions of section 2384, Revised Statutes, but as far as practicable shall conform to the existing surveys and plats of the lots in such town: Provided, That the Secretary may, in his discretion issue a patent to Lake County, Fla., to not exceeding 1 acre upon which the county courthouse is located, such patent to provide that the land shall revert to the Government of the United States if the county sells any part thereof or devotes it to any use other than as a site for a courthouse and grounds.

SEC. 4. That the provisions of section 2382, Revised Statutes, as modified by sections 2384 and 2385, Revised Statutes, shall extend to all areas surveyed as within and a part of the town of Tavares: Provided, That subject to adverse rights any person entitled to a preference right to purchase under the provisions of this act may secure under this section lands in his actual possession, whether in a single tract or in surveyed lots, of a maximum area of 84,000 square feet, upon payment therefor at a rate not exceeding $10 for 4,200 square feet, but any applicant may elect to proceed under section 1 of this act: Provided further, That all the provisions hereof applicable to the town of Tavares shall be extended to any other established town within the area affected by this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether this meets with the approval of the persons whose title is in dispute or in litigation?

Mr. NYE. I understand the appeal was made to the department by those who had disputes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I am thoroughly familiar with the situation. It is in accordance with the recommendation of the department and is satisfactory to the localities concerned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. ABBERGER

The bill (S. 3452) for the relief of George W. Abberger was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to George W. Abberger out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $175, for the loss of a suitcase and contents which was checked on January 28, 1919, with the United States Railroad Administration at Wilmington, Del., to be delivered at Norfolk, Va., and upon which an excess-baggage charge was paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELMER J. NEAD

The bill (H. R. 8474) for the relief of Elmer J. Nead was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $277.35 to Elmer J. Nead, in full compensation against the Government for damages sustained as the result of an accident caused by a naval ambulance.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LARRY M. TEMPLE

The bill (S. 443) for the relief of Larry M. Temple was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$1,113.88" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,174.66," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Larry M. Temple, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,174.66, as reimbursement in full for hospital and other expenses incurred on account of injuries sustained June 11, 1926, at Miami Beach, Fla., by reason of being struck by a bullet fired from a Coast Guard vessel which was at the time pursuing an alleged violator of the prohibition laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS SWEENEY

The bill (H. R. 4927) for the relief of Francis Sweeney was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Francis Sweeney, formerly an employee in the Bureau of Lighthouses, Department of Commerce, to wit, a seaman on the U. S. lightship No. 58, the sum of $80, the same being in full payment for losses suffered by the said Francis Sweeney by loss of personal property used and reasonably necessary in connection with his official duty on said lightship, which was sunk on December 11, 1905.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEEL CARS IN THE RAILWAY POST-OFFICE SERVICE

The bill (S. 2107) to provide for steel cars in the railway post-office service was announced as next in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. Over.

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, did some one object?

Mr. PHIPPS. I made objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DALE. I do not want to undertake to argue with the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PHIPPS. I was not sure that the amendment now in the bill met with the full approval of the committee. If that is the fact, I have no objection.

Mr. DALE. The amendment has been approved, and is on the clerk's desk and reported with the bill.

Mr. PHIPPS. I find upon reading the report that that is correct, but I think we are going rather rapidly. We really have not had time properly to look up amendments and other items in the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "January" and insert "March,"; and on page 3, line 4, after the word "Provided," to strike out the following: "That after January, 1930, no apartment railway post-office car of other than steel or steel underframe construction may be operated by any independent short-line railroad in trains in which any other steel or steel underframe equipment is operated" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the provisions of this act shall not apply to trains operated upon branch lines, or to trains operated upon independent short-line railroads, or to trains operated upon narrow-gauge railroads, or to trains operated upon electric railroads.", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That after March, 1930, all cars or parts of cars, except as hereinafter provided, used for railway post-office service shall be of steel construction and of such style, length, and character, and furnished in such manner as shall be required by the Postmaster General, and shall be constructed, fitted up, maintained, heated, lighted, and cleaned by and at the expense of the railroad companies. No railroad company shall be permitted to operate any railway post-office car which is not equipped with sanitary drinking-water containers and toilet facilities, nor unless such car is regularly and thoroughly cleaned. Railroad companies shall place railway post-office cars in stations for use in advance distribution before the departure of trains at such time as may be ordered by the Postmaster General: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to trains operated upon branch lines, or to trains operated upon independent short-line railroads, or to trains operated upon narrow-gauge railroads, or to trains operated upon electric railroads.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF CHAPTER 137, THIRTY-NINTH UNITED STATES STATUTES AT LARGE

The bill (H. R. 158) to amend chapter 137 of volume 39 of the United States Statutes at Large, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sentence in lines 17 to 20, page 220 of volume 39, United States Statutes at Large, chapter 137, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, reading as follows: "The timber thus purchased may be cut and removed by the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, within such period as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, which period shall be designated in the patent," be amended to read as follows: "The timber thus purchased may be cut and removed by the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, within such period and under such rules, regulations, and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, which period and conditions shall be designated in the patent."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF TIMBER, OREGON & CALIFORNIA RAILROAD, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 8307) amending section 5 of the act approved June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 218), so as to authorize the sale of timber on class 3 of the Oregon & California Railroad and Coos Bay wagon-road grant lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 218), and as amended and extended by section 3 of the act of February 26, 1919 (40 Stat. L. 1179), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion and in the manner now provided for the sale of timber on lands of class 2, sell the timber on any of the lands of class 3 which at the time application to purchase the timber is filed have been subject to entry for a period of at least two years and are not embraced in an application or entry, such sale of the timber not to preclude the disposal of the land under laws applicable thereto, subject to the right of the purchaser of the timber to cut and remove the same."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PURCHASE OF LAND IN LOUISIANA

The bill (H. R. 9568) to authorize the purchase at private sale of a tract of land in Louisiana, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to allow the persons or corporation, in possession and having the bona fide equitable ownership thereof, to purchase at private sale, at the rate of $1.25 per acre, section 58 in township 12 south of range 14 east, Louisiana meridian, Louisiana, containing 39.80 acres.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YELLOWSTONE FOREST RESERVE

The bill (H. R. 7946) to repeal an act entitled "An act to extend the provisions of the homestead laws to certain lands in the Yellowstone forest reserve, approved March 15, 1906, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to extend the provisions of the homestead laws to certain lands in the Yellowstone forest reserve," approved March 15, 1906, Thirty-fourth United States Statutes at Large, page 62, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, That the passage of this act shall in nowise affect valid existing rights.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have had a letter making objection to the bill. I know nothing about it. The information was to the effect that it was an invasion or might prove to be an invasion of lands set apart for Yellowstone Park and might interfere with the development of the park and making objection to it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the bill does not refer to Yellowstone Park. It has reference to the Yellowstone forest reserve and not to the park at all.

Mr. KING. Then I have no objection to its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN ALIEN SEAMEN

The bill (S. 717) to provide for the deportation of certain alien seamen, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Alien seamen act of 1926."

SEC. 2. Every alien employed on board of any vessel arriving in the United States from any place outside thereof shall be examined by an immigration inspector to determine whether or not he (1) is a bona fide seaman, and (2) is an alien of the class described in section 7 of this act; and by a surgeon of the United States Public Health Service to determine (3) whether or not he is suffering with any of the disabilities or diseases specified in section 35 of the immigration act of 1917.

SEC. 3. Unless such alien was shipped in a port in continental United States prior to the passage of this act, then if it is found that such alien is not a bona fide seaman, he shall be regarded as an immigrant and immediately be ordered removed from the vessel to an immigration station; and the various provisions of this act and of the immigration laws applicable to immigrants shall be enforced in his case. From a decision holding such alien not to be a bona fide seaman the alien shall be entitled to appeal to the Secretary of Labor, and on the question of his admissibility as an immigrant he shall be entitled to appeal to said Secretary, except where exclusion is based upon grounds nonappealable under the immigration laws. If found inadmissible, such alien shall be deported, as a passenger, on a vessel other than that by which brought, at the expense of the vessel by which brought, and the vessel by which brought shall not be granted clearance until such expenses are paid or their payment satisfactorily guaranteed.

SEC. 4. If it is found that such alien is subject to exclusion under section 7 of this act, the inspector shall give immediately order to the master to remove such alien together with his effects and wages, if any, to an immigration station, and such alien shall then be deported in accordance with the provisions of said section 7.

SEC. 5. If it is found that, although a bona fide seaman, such alien is afflicted with any of the disabilities or diseases specified in section 35 of the immigration act of 1917, disposition shall be made of his case in accordance with the provisions of the act approved December 26, 1920, entitled "An act to provide for the treatment in hospital of diseased alien seamen."

SEC. 6. All vessels entering ports of the United States manned with crews the majority of which, exclusive of licensed officers, have been engaged and taken on at foreign ports shall, when departing from the United States ports, carry a crew of at least equal number, and any such vessel which fails to comply with this requirement shall be refused clearance: Provided, however, That such vessel shall not be required when departing to carry in the crew any person to fill the place made vacant by the death or hospitalization of any member of the incoming crew.

SEC. 7. No vessel shall, unless such vessel is in distress, bring into a port of the United States as a member of her crew any alien who if he were applying for admission to the United States as an immigrant would be subject to exclusion under subdivision (c) of section 13 of the immigration act of 1924, except that any ship of the merchant marine of any one of the countries, islands, dependencies, or colonies immigrants coming from which are excluded by the said provisions of law, shall be permited to enter ports of the United States having on board in their crews aliens of said description who are natives of the particular country, island, dependency, or colony to the merchant marine of which such vessel belongs. Any alien seaman brought into a port of the United States in violation of this provision shall be excluded from admission or temporary landing and shall be deported either to the place of shipment or to the country of his nativity, as a passenger, on a vessel other than that on which brought, at the expense of the vessel by which brought, and the vessel by which brought shall not be granted clearance until such expenses are paid or their payment satisfactorily guaranteed.

SEC. 8. This act shall take effect on July 1, 1928.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill (S. 717) to provide for the deportation of certain alien seamen, and for other purposes, was passed be reconsidered and that the bill take its place on the calendar.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator insist on having that action taken?

Mr. BINGHAM. I have received several letters in opposition to the bill which I have not had time to study. I shall be very glad to go over them with the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed are reconsidered, and the bill will take its place on the calendar.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 584) for the relief of Frederick D. Swank was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. JONES. Was objection made to the consideration of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection was made, and the bill went over.

Mr. HOWELL. Over.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. HOWELL. I am willing to do so.

Mr. JONES. The Senator is chairman of the Claims Committee. I do not know whether he bases his objection on what was presented to his committee. If so, I may not be able to change the Senator's mind to-night.

Mr. HOWELL. I think it will not be practicable to dispose of the bill to-night.

Mr. JONES. The Senator thinks from what he learned of the bill in his committee that it ought to go over?

Mr. HOWELL. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SMITH TABLET CO.

The bill (H. R. 4303) for the relief of the Smith Tablet Co., of Holyoke, Mass., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $150 to the Smith Tablet Co., of Holyoke, Mass., as reimbursement for the cost of remaking an appraisal and appraisal book necessitated by the loss of the original appraisal book by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, Treasury Department, during the examination of the accounts of the said company for income-tax purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M'ATEER SHIPBUILDING CO. (INC.)

The bill (H. R. 5935) for the relief of the McAteer Shipbuilding Co. (Inc.) was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 in full settlement of all claims of the McAteer Shipbuilding Co. (Inc.), against the United States for losses and damages growing out of and suffered under a contract dated June 30, 1917, for the construction of the steamer El Aquario.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to inquire why this claim was not referred to the Court of Claims?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think probably the report of the committee will indicate to the Senator. Suit was brought in the Court of Claims to recover $254,000 occasioned by the alleged breach of contract. On May 14, 1927, the Attorney General submitted for the consideration of the Secretary of War an offer by the attorney for the plaintiff to settle the claim against the Government by payment of $50,000, which proposal the Attorney General was advised the War Department was willing to accept as in the best interest of the Government, provided, of course, he concur therein. Subsequently the Attorney General advised the department that after careful review of the facts the Department of Justice was of the opinion that such settlement was in the interest of the Government. Both the Department of Justice and the War Department believe such a disposal of the matter would adequately meet the equities involved in the claim and would result in a material saving to the Government, including considerable expense from litigation. Upon that recommendation the House passed the bill and the Committee on Claims has made the report.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. S. HOWARD CO.

The bill (S. 3743) for the relief of C. N. Markle was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$81,376.43" and insert in lieu thereof "$20,827.51," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to R. S. Howard Co., of New York, N. Y., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,827.51 in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for damages and loss resulting from compliance with United States Navy commandeer order No. N–3255, dated June 18, 1918.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

C. N. MARKLE

The bill (S. 3743) for the relief of C. N. Markle, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Whereas the steamship Mosella sailed from London, England, on or about July 21, 1922, bearing a shipment of shotgun cartridges consigned to the said C. N. Markle; and

Whereas the said steamship Mosella was due to arrive in the port of New Orleans, La., on or about the 1st day of August, 1922, but failed to arrive in said port till the 23d day of September, 1922, owing to orders issued by the United States Shipping Board; and

Whereas the rate of duty on said shotgun cartridges under the tariff act of 1913 was 15 per cent ad valorem, but was increased by the tariff act of September 22, 1922, to 30 per cent, and duty was taken on said shipment under the provisions of said tariff act of September, 1922: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to determine the amount taken in duty on a certain shipment of shotgun cartridges shipped from London, England, to C. N. Markle, at Houston, Tex., and entered in the port of New Orleans, La., in excess of the amount which should have been taken if the said shipment had arrived prior to September 22, 1922, and had been assessed for duty under the provisions of the tariff act of 1913 at 15 per cent ad valorem.

SEC. 2. That when said amount has been determined, refund thereof to said C. N. Markle, of Houston, Tex., shall be made, and the appropriation of an amount sufficient to make said refund is hereby authorized out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

NATIONAL FOREST LANDS IN MONTANA

The bill (S. 1511) for the exchange of lands adjacent to National Forests in Montana was considered as in the Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. L. 465), entitled "An act to consolidate national forest lands," are hereby extended to include any suitable lands in the State of Montana situated within 6 miles of a national forest boundary. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become parts of the national forest nearest to which they are situated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOISE NATIONAL FOREST, IDAHO

The bill (S. 1577) to add certain lands to the Boise National Forest, Idaho, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any lands within the following described areas found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow, may with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, be included within and made a part of the Boise National Forest by proclamation of the President, subject to all valid existing claims, and the said lands shall hereafter be subject to all laws affecting the national forests:

The west half of section 2; all of sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10; the west half of section 11; all of sections 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 34, in township 4 south, range 2 west, of the Boise meridian, State of Idaho. All of township 4 south, range 3 west, of the Boise meridian, State of Idaho. All of what will be when surveyed of sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, and 30, in township 4 south, range 4 west, Boise meridian, State of Idaho. All of sections 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36, township 5 south, range 4 west, Boise meridian, State of Idaho. All of sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36, township 5 south, range 3 west, Boise meridian, State of Idaho. All of sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 34, township 5 south, range 2 west, Boise meridian, State of Idaho. All of sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, and 35, in township 6 south, range 2 west, Boise meridian, State of Idaho. All of township 6 south, range 3 west, Boise meridian, State of Idaho. All of township 6 south, range 4 west, Boise meridian, State of Idaho.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IDAHO NATIONAL FOREST, IDAHO

The bill (S. 1578) to add certain lands to the Idaho National Forest, Idaho, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described areas be, and the same are hereby, included in and made a part of the Idaho National Forest, subject to all prior adverse rights; and that said lands shall hereafter be subject to all laws affecting national forests: All township 23 north, ranges 2 and 3 east, and that part of the west half of township 24 north, range 4 east, which is not already included in the Nez Perce National Forest; all Boise meridian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 5894) for the relief of the State Bank & Trust Co. of Fayetteville, Tenn., was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOWELL. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JOSEPH F. THORPE

The bill (S. 382) for the relief of Joseph F. Thorpe was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,300 to reimburse Joseph F. Thorpe, formerly clerk at the American Legation at Athens, for expenditures incurred in accompanying Garrett Droppers, formerly United States minister to Greece, then under physical disability, to the United States, pursuant to instructions of the State Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL OFFICIALS AND EMPLOYEES, ALASKA

The bill (S. 4257) to authorize the payment of certain salaries or compensation to Federal officials and employees by the treasurer of the Territory of Alaska was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have received from the Secretary of the Interior a copy of a telegram from the Governor of Alaska, who asks a slight amendment to the bill, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 4, after the word "purposes" to strike out the period and insert a comma, and after the quotation mark to insert "and amendments thereto" and a period, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any salaries to United States officials or employees of the United States Government in Alaska, appropriated by the Alaska Territorial Legislature, session of 1927, may be paid to such United States officials or employees of the United States by the treasurer of Alaska up to and including the date of March 31, 1929, any Federal law to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That subsequent to March 31, 1929, all appropriations by the Alaska Territorial Legislature shall be in conformity with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, entitled "An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative powers thereon, and for other purposes," and amendments thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask that the letter from the Secretary of the Interior may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 8, 1928.

Hon. HIRAM BINGHAM,
Chairman Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR BINGHAM: Your letter of May 1, 1928, has been received, inclosing with request for expression of views thereon Senate bill 4257 entitled "A bill to authorize the payment of certain salaries or compensation to Federal officials and employees by the treasurer of the Territory of Alaska."

The bill in question was referred for consideration to Hon. George A. Parks, Governor of Alaska, who, under date of May 5, 1928, telegraphed as follows:

"Your wire 4th. Proposed bill will meet situation and enable Territory pay salaries as has been done since first session of legislature. Suggest following be added: 'and amendments thereto.' See amendment approved August 29, 1914. Urge favorable report, as proposed bill will meet objections raised and enable next legislature to make provisions to meet future situations."

In accordance with the governor's suggestion, I have to recommend that after the word "purposes," line 4, page 2, the words "and amendments thereto" be added, and, as so amended, the bill be given favorable consideration.

The facts necessitating the legislation contemplated in the bill are fully set forth in House Report No. 390, Seventieth Congress, first session, being a report on a somewhat similar bill, a copy of which is herewith transmitted.

Very truly yours,

HUBERT WORK.

GRANT OF LANDS AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

Be it enacted, etc., That the patent issued by the United States General Land Office to the board of supervisors of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College in trust for the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College under date of February 20, 1903, by virtue of the authority conferred by an act of Congress approved April 28, 1902, entitled "An act providing for the transfer of the title to the military reservation at Baton Rouge, La., to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College," which conveyed full and complete title to the buildings and grounds of the United States barracks at Baton Rouge, La., for the purpose of said university and college, being sections 44 and 71 of township 7 south, range 1 west, St. Helena meridian, State of Louisiana, containing 211.56 acres, be, and the same is hereby, approved and confirmed, and the right of the board of supervisors of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College to sell or lease any of the said grounds or buildings in its development of said university is fully recognized, the proceeds to form part of the funds of the said Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College and to be used for the purposes of said university and college, excepting from the force and effect of this act the parcel of ground containing about 2.45 acres granted to the Roman Catholic congregation of St. Joseph's Church of the city of Baton Rouge, by act of Congress approved September 30, 1890 (26 Stat. 503); and further excepting that portion of land that lies westward of a line 100 feet east of the center of the railroad tract of the Louisville, New Orleans & Texas Railroad Co.: Provided, That if the said railroad company shall cease to use and occupy such land it shall thereupon become subject to all the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ST. JOSEPH'S ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH, BATON ROUGE, LA.

The bill (S. 3620) granting certain land to the Roman Catholic congregation of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church of the city of Baton Rouge, La., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments on page 1, line 3, after the word "the," to strike out the words "Roman Catholic congregation" and insert the word "congregation"; in line 5, to strike out the words "city of" and insert the words "parish of East"; in line 10, to strike out the words "Roman Catholic congregation" and insert the word "congregation"; on page 2, line 5, to strike out the name "Hansey" and insert the name "Hausey"; on page 6, strike out the name "Hansey" and insert the name "Hausey"; in line 13, after the word "Baton," strike out the word "Rogue" and insert the word "Rouge"; in line 14, after the numerals "1890," strike out the words "and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to execute a quitclaim deed to said land in accordance with the provisions of this act," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and the Secretary of the Interior, after such survey as he may deem necessary, shall, as a further evidence of title, direct the issuance of a patent in accordance with the provisions of this act," so as to make section 1 read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the congregation of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church in the Parish of East Baton Rouge, La., all the proprietary right, title, and interest of the United States to and in that certain tract of land in the United States reservation or garrison grounds in the city of Baton Rouge, La., formerly used as a graveyard or burial ground by the congregation of St. Joseph's Church of said city in the parish of East Baton Rouge, which is not included in any of the lots or streets of said city, but lies on North Street and between Uncle Sam Street and the lot of the private property of H. E. Hausey, measuring 214.5 American measure, on line of said Hausey, running north by a depth of 497 feet, more or less, running east to the west line of Uncle Sam Street between parallel lines, and containing approximately 2.45 acres, as described in the act entitled "An act to provide for the disposal of a portion of the United States military reservation at Baton Rouge, La.," approved September 30, 1890, and the Secretary of the Interior, after such survey as he may deem necessary, shall, as a further evidence of title, direct the issuance of a patent in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys was, on page 2, line 21, strike out section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. That the provision "unless hereafter required by the Secretary of War for the use of the United States for military purposes" be, and it is hereby, stricken from the act of September 30, 1890 (26 Stat. 503), and any implied conditions of reversion of title to the Government of the United States contained in said act be, and the same are hereby, repealed, it being the purpose and intent of this act to grant to the congregation of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church, of Baton Rouge, La., free from restriction, reservation, or condition, full and complete title in and to the lands described in section 1 hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting certain land to the congregation of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church in the parish of East Baton Rouge, La."

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment on page 2, after line 2, to insert the following:

SEC. 3. That the lands hereby withdrawn from entry shall be designated and known as the Chief Joseph Battle Ground of the Bear's Paw.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the northwest quarter section 12, township 30 north, range 19 east, Montana meridian, is hereby withdrawn from all forms of entry under the public land laws of the United States, for the purpose of preserving the site of the battle between Nez Perces Indians under Chief Joseph and the command of Nelson A. Miles.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to enter into an agreement with the State of Montana, or Blaine County, Mont., or citizens of Montana, or either or any of them, for the care and upkeep of the herein-described lands.

SEC. 3. That the lands hereby withdrawn from entry shall be designated and known as the Chief Joseph Battle Ground of the Bear's Paw.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

USE OF LAND FOR STREET PURPOSES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 4087) authorizing the use of certain land owned by the United States in the District of Columbia for street purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized to use for street purposes 1,651 square feet of a tract of land known as parcel 17/93, 708 square feet of a tract of land known as parcel 18/52, and 380 square feet of a tract of land known as parcel 18/23, all for the widening of Reservoir Road, and to use for street purposes 23,779.63 square feet of a tract of land known as parcel 28/12 for the widening of Reservoir Road and Forty-fourth Street; and to use for street purposes a strip of land 60 feet wide containing 258,750 square feet, more or less, lying immediately northeasterly of the southwesterly boundary of a tract of land known as parcel 173/23 for the widening of South Dakota Avenue; and to use for street purposes 9,000 square feet, more or less, of a tract of land known as parcel 243/15 for the extension of Trenton Street and for the widening of Fourth Street SE.; and to use for street purposes 1,521.28 square feet of lot 802, square 1932, and 3,669.88 square feet of lot 837, square 1300, for the widening of Wisconsin Avenue, all as shown on maps designated as Street Extension Maps 1150 and 1154, and Surveyor's Office Maps 1314 and 1373, on file in the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, all the above-described property herein authorized to be used for street purposes being owned by the United States of America.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHELDON R. PURDY

The bill (S. 2526) for the relief of Sheldon R. Purdy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and paid to Sheldon R. Purdy, the sum of $5,000 in recognition of, and compensation for, valuable service rendered to the Post Office Department in the procedure for handling dead-letter mail and in the establishment of beneficial regulations and procedure with reference to improperly addressed mail, and in originating and procuring the cooperation of the public in the proper addressing of mail and the discontinuance of directory service in the delivery of mail, prior to January 1, 1924.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Colorado if he does not regard this as a somewhat dangerous precedent? I make the inquiry for the reason that a number of persons have spoken to me who have been in the public service, contending that they made suggestions which were of benefit to the Government. They never deemed it proper that they should apply for compensation in the shape of retirement or increased pay. If it established a precedent I do not know where we will end.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, had I not felt that this was an exceptional case I should not have gone to the trouble I did to get some recognition for this man. He applied himself assiduously to his labors. He was in the department for a number of years and it was through his persistency that the department finally recommended and put into effect the discontinuance of directory service in the post offices free of charge. That was one thing. The other thing brought to my attention was that of collecting due postage on letters returned from the dead letter office to the original writer where the writer could be located. It has brought in revenues amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Government. Had it not been for this man working on the matter and calling it to our attention we would not have had that revenue. If the Senator will read the report he will see the enormous amount of money that has flowed into the Federal Treasury and the Post Office Department through that means alone. The directory service is in effect in Chicago and some other places, but it was never until after the insistence of this man was brought to its attention that the Post Office Department issued a general order which made it universal in other large cities. It saved hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Government. I think the remuneration is a very small reward to an official who will do that sort of thing. Aside from that, the moral effect on other employees is very good indeed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL CAPITAL PARK AND PLANNING COMMISSION

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1044, the bill (S. 4126) authorizing the National Capital Park and Planning Commission to acquire rights in land, and to lease land or existing buildings for limited periods in certain instances. Consideration of the bill was objected to by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE]. He now withdraws his objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 2, line 3, after the word "grantor," to insert, "Provided, That such reservation of rights shall not continue beyond the life or lives of the grantor or grantors of the fee: Provided further, That"; and on the same page, to strike out lines 23 to 25, and on page 3, to strike out lines 1, 2, and 3, being section 2, and to insert a new section 2, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the authority of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, established by the act approved April 30, 1926 (Stat. L. vol. 44, p. 374), is hereby enlarged as follows:

Said commission is hereby authorized to acquire, for and in behalf of the United States of America, by gift, devise, purchase, or condemnation, in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 6, 1924 (Stat. L., vol. 43, p. 463), as amended by the act of April 30, 1926 (Stat. L., vol. 44, p. 374), (1) fee title to land subject to limited rights reserved to the grantor: Provided, That such reservation of rights shall not continue beyond the life or lives of the grantor or grantors of the fee: Provided further, That in the opinion of said commission the permanent public park purposes for which control over said land is needed are not essentially impaired by said reserved rights and that there is a substantial saving in cost by acquiring said land subject to said limited rights as compared with the cost of acquiring unencumbered title thereto; (2) permanent rights in land adjoining park property sufficient to prevent the use of said land in certain specified ways which would essentially impair the value of the park property for its purposes: Provided, That in the opinion of said commission the protection and maintenance of the essential public values of said park can thus be secured more economically than by acquiring said land in fee or by other available means: Provided further, That all contracts for acquisition of land subject to such limited rights reserved to the grantor and for acquisition of such limited permanent rights in land shall be subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

SEC. 2. The Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital is authorized, subject to the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, to lease, for a term not exceeding five years, and to renew such lease for an additional term not exceeding five years, pending need for their immediate use in other ways by the public, and on such terms as the director shall determine, land or any existing building or structure on land acquired for park, parkway, or playground purposes.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the National Capital Park and Planning Commission to acquire title to land subject to limited rights reserved, and limited rights in land, and authorizing the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital to lease land or existing buildings for limited periods in certain instances."

SUIT ON BEHALF OF INDIANS OF CALIFORNIA

A bill (S. 727) authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, there is a House bill similar to this which was reported favorably without amendment to-day from the Committee on Indian Affairs. I ask that the House bill may be substitued for the bill the title of which has just been stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 491) authorizing the attorney general of the State of California to bring suit in the Court of Claims on behalf of the Indians of California.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of this act the Indians of California shall be defined to be all Indians who were residing in the State of California on June 1, 1852, and their descendants now living in said State.

SEC. 2. All claims of whatsoever nature the Indians of California as defined in section 1 of this act may have against the United States by reason of lands taken from them in the State of California by the United States without compensation, or for the failure or refusal of the United States to compensate them for their interest in lands in said States which the United States appropriated to its own purposes without the consent of said Indians, may be submitted to the Court of Claims by the attorney general of the State of California acting for and on behalf of said Indians for determination of the equitable amount due said Indians from the United States; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear and determine all such equitable claims of said Indians against the United States and to render final decree thereon.

It is hereby declared that the loss to the said Indians on account of their failure to secure the lands and compensation provided for in the 18 unratified treaties is sufficient ground for equitable relief.

SEC. 3. If any claim or claims be submitted to said courts, they shall settle the equitable rights therein, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation or the fact that the said claim or claims have not been presented to any other tribunal, including the commission created by the act of March 3, 1851 (9 Stat. L., p. 631): Provided, That any decree for said Indians shall be for an amount equal to the just value of the compensation provided or proposed for the Indians in those certain 18 unratified treaties executed by the chiefs and headmen of the several tribes and bands of Indians of California and submitted to the Senate of the United States by the President of the United States for ratification on the 1st day of June, 1852, including the lands described therein at $1.25 per acre. Any payment which may have been made by the United States or moneys heretofore or hereafter expended to date of award for the benefit of the Indians of California, made under specific appropriations for the support, education, health, and civilization of Indians in California, including purchases of land, shall not be pleaded as an estoppel but may be pleaded by way of set-off.

SEC. 4. The claims of the Indians of California under the provisions of this act shall be presented by petition, which shall be filed within three years after the passage of this act. Said petition shall be subject to amendment. The petition shall be signed and verified by the attorney general of the State of California. Verification may be upon information and belief as to the facts alleged. Official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give the said attorney access to such papers, correspondence, or furnish such certified copies of records as may be necessary in the premises free of cost.

SEC. 5. In the event that the court renders judgment against the United States under the provisions of this act, it shall decree such amount as it finds reasonable to be paid to the State of California to reimburse the State for all necessary costs and expenses incurred by said State other than attorney fees: Provided, That no reimbursement shall be made to the State of California for the services rendered by its attorney general.

SEC. 6. The amount of any judgment shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of California, and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum and shall be thereafter subject to appropriation by Congress for educational, health, industrial, and other purposes for the benefit of said Indians, including the purchase of lands and building of homes, and no part of said judgment shall be paid out in per capita payments to said Indians: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to the State of California out of the proceeds of the judgment when appropriated the amount decreed by the court to be due said State, as provided in section 5 of this act.

SEC. 7. For the purpose of determining who are entitled to be enrolled as Indians of California, as provided in section 1 hereof, the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, shall cause a roll to be made of persons entitled to enrollment. Any person claiming to be entitled to enrollment may within two years after the approval of this act make an application in writing to the Secretary of the Interior for enrollment. At any time within three years of the approval of this act the Secretary shall have the right to alter and revise the roll, at the expiration of which time said roll shall be closed for all purposes and thereafter no additional names shall be added thereto: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, shall also cause to be made, within the time specified herein a roll of all Indians in California other than Indians that come within the provisions of section 1 of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I now ask that Senate bill 727 be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONSIDERATION OF BRIDGE BILLS

Mr. DALE. Mr. President, I ask that the next six bills on the calendar, from Order of Business 1096 to Order of Business 1101, inclusive, may be considered together. Some of the bills have been reported with amendments which make them all conform to the approved standard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

CUMBERLAND RIVER BRIDGE AT MOUTH OF INDIAN CREEK, KY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4295) authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near the mouth of Indian Creek, in Russell County, Ky., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State highway commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the mouth of Indian Creek, Russell County, Ky., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUMBERLAND RIVER BRIDGE AT NEELYS FERRY, KY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4289) authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Neelys Ferry, in Cumberland County, Ky., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the words "Neelys Ferry," to insert "Cumberland County," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State highway commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Neelys Ferry, Cumberland County, Ky., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State highway commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Arat, Cumberland County, Ky., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUMBERLAND RIVER BRIDGE AT BLACKS FERRY, KY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4292) authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Cumberland River at Blacks Ferry near Center Point in Monroe County, Ky., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment on page 1, line 7, after the word "near" to strike out the words "the town of"; and on page 2, line 1, after the name "Center Point," to insert the words "Monroe County," so as to make the bill read:

CUMBERLAND RIVER BRIDGES AT BURNSIDE, KY.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President, there are two other bills of the same character as those which have just been passed, which have been favorably reported to-day, being Senate bill 4288 and Senate bill 4294, and I ask unanimous consent that those bills may now be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The bill (S. 4288) authorizing the State Highway Commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the South Fork of the Cumberland River at Burnside, Pulaski County, Ky., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments on page 1, line 6, before the name "Cumberland" to insert "South Fork of the"; in line 7, after the word "near," to strike out "the town of"; and at the end of the same line, after the name "Burnside" and the comma, to insert "Pulaski County," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State highway commission, Commonwealth of Kentucky, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Burnside, Pulaski County, Ky., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

BRIDGE LEADING TO ZILLAH STATE PARK, WASH.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3039) making an appropriation for the construction of a bridge and approach road leading to the Zillah State Park, Wash., which had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 1, line 3, after the word "hereby," to insert "authorized to be," and in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$4,500" and to insert "$3,000," so as to make the section read:

That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of the special fund in the Treasury created by the act of June 17, 1902, and therein designated the "reclamation fund," the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the construction of a bridge, with an approach road, over the wasteway operated by the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior in connection with the Sunnyside Irrigation Canal, to replace the bridge and approach road leading to the Zillah State Park in the State of Washington which were washed out by the increased volume of water turned into such wasteway during a cloudburst on June 14, 1926. Such bridge and road shall be constructed by the State of Washington or any duly authorized agency or political subdivision thereof, under the supervision of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation, who may authorize the relocation of such bridge and road.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, section 2, line 8, after the word "herein," to insert the words "authorized to be," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. The sum herein authorized to be appropriated shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to the proper authorities of the State of Washington, as the construction progresses, upon vouchers submitted by such authorities and approved by the Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation. Such sum shall not be charged to the operation and maintenance expense of the Sunnyside division of the Yakima irrigation project.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing an appropriation for the construction of a bridge and approach road leading to the Zilla State Park, Washington."

OWNERS OF THE BARGE "MARY M."

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 460) for the relief of the owners of the barge Mary M, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the estate of Mary Malley, deceased, owner of the barge Mary M, against the United States for damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of a collision between said barge and the U. S. S. Melville, or by reason of the operation of the said steamship Melville, under the control of the Navy Department, on April 15, 1919, at the south end of Governors Island, New York Harbor, may be sued for by said owners of the barge Mary M in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of said owners of the barge Mary M, or against said owners of the barge Mary M in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by the order of said court, and that it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF MOSES M. BANE

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3056) for the relief of the estate of Moses M. Bane, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the estate of Moses M. Bane, deceased, who was receiver of public money for the Territory of Utah, and paid office rent at Salt Lake City for the years 1877 and 1878 and for the first quarter of 1879, the sum of $1,080, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the said sum for office rent having been advanced by the officer out of his private means.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JESSE R. SHIVERS

The Senate, as Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4396) for the relief of Jesse R. Shivers, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, to Jesse R. Shivers, North Wildwood, N. J., the sum of $796.95, for damages sustained to motor boat L–659, in collision with U. S. Coast Guard patrol boat CG–119, February 9, 1926.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OWNER OF STEAMSHIP "CITY OF BEAUMONT"

The bill (H. R. 8001) conferring jurisdiction upon certain courts of the United States to hear and determine the claim by the owner of the steamship City of Beaumont against the United States, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the City of Beaumont Ship Corporation, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, owner of the American auxiliary barkentine City of Beaumont, against the United States of America for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said vessel and the U. S. S. Westland, on the 19th day of December, 1918, may be sued for by the said owners of the City of Beaumont in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty, and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the City of Beaumont Ship Corporation, or against the said corporation in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal, except that no interest shall be allowed on any claim: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by orders of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN L. NIGHTINGALE

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8810) for the relief of John L. Nightingale, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the account of John L. Nightingale, postmaster at Fort Collins, Colo., in the sum of $34,934.90, the value of funds and stamps lost in the burglary of the post office at Fort Collins, Colo., July 24, 1927.

Mr. KING. I ask for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I desire to say that this is the case of the robbery of a post office. The usual procedure has been followed in the case of this postmaster, who was in no wise responsible for theft from his office. The report was very conclusive, and I think the Senator will be satisfied with it.

Mr. KING. Was the postmaster warranted in retaining so large an amount of stamps and money in the place where he kept it?

Mr. PHIPPS. The vaults were practically blown up. He did not have the valuables in an ordinary safe that anyone could open, but he had them in a place which was authorized for the safekeeping of the stamp. Practically the bulk of the amount was in postage stamps, and it was stolen.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALABAMA NATIONAL FOREST

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 130) suspending certain provisions of law in connection with the acquisition of lands within the Alabama National Forest. The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas section 7 of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 961), provides "That no deed or other instrument of conveyance shall be accepted or approved by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act until the legislature of the State in which the land lies shall have consented to the acquisition of such land by the United States for the purpose of preserving the navigability of navigable streams"; and

Whereas the State of Alabama by an act approved November 30, 1907, consented to such acquisitions; and

Whereas the State of Alabama by an act approved September 28, 1923, repealed the aforesaid act of November 30, 1907; and

Whereas the Secretary of Agriculture was not informed of said repeal and continued to contract for the purchase of certain lands within the present exterior boundaries of the Alabama National Forest, located in Winston, Lawrence, and Franklin Counties, in the said State of Alabama; and

Whereas the forestry officials of the said State of Alabama approved the policy of consolidation of lands within the present exterior boundaries of the aforesaid Alabama National Forest: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of section 7 requiring the consent of the said State legislature for the acquisition of such lands be, and the same are hereby, suspended as to any unacquired lands within the present exterior boundaries of the said Alabama National Forest until and including December 31, 1930.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

WOOL STANDARDS

The bill (H. R. 7459) to authorize the appropriation for use by the Secretary of Agriculture of certain funds for wool standards, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for expenditure by the Secretary of Agriculture, for the purposes hereinafter stated, all funds heretofore or hereafter collected by suit, or otherwise, pursuant to appropriations for the completion of the work of the domestic-wool section of the War Industries Board, and for enforcing Government regulations for handling the wool clip of 1918 as established by the wool division of said board, pursuant to the Executive order dated December 31, 1918, transferring such work to the Bureau of Markets, now a part of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture, and for continuing as far as practicable the distribution among the growers of the wool clip of 1918 of all sums heretofore or hereafter collected or recovered with or without suit by the Government from all persons, firms, or corporations which handled any part of the wool clip of 1918, which he finds it impracticable to distribute among said growers, provided that not to exceed $50,000 may be expended in any fiscal year.

SEC. 2. Said funds may be used for the purpose of acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful information relative to the standardization, grading, preparation for market, marketing, utilization, transportation, handling, and distribution of wool, and of approved methods and practices relative thereto, including the demonstration and promotion of the use of grades for wool in accordance with standards therefor which the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to establish. Said funds may be used for the grading of wool, and for such grading or other service rendered hereunder reasonable fees may be charged, and provided further that hereafter reasonable charges may be made for practical forms of grades for wool.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture may make such rules and regulations as he deems advisable for carrying out any of the provisions of this act. All receipts hereunder shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF FOREST LANDS, ETC.

The bill (S. 1344) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor," approved June 4, 1924, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments, on page 2, line 3, after the words "distribution of," to strike out "forest tree"; in line 4, after the word "plants," to insert "of forest trees, shrubs, and other beneficial forms of vegetation"; in line 6, after the word "belts," to insert "forests"; in line 7, after the word "lands," to strike out "and" and insert "or"; in line 8, after the word "forests," to insert "or other beneficial vegetative cover"; in line 9, after word "lands," to strike out "owned by any," and insert "in"; in the same line, after the word "county," to strike out "or municipality" and insert "municipal"; in line 10, after the word "or," to strike out "upon privately owned land" and insert "private ownership"; in line 14, after the word "that," to strike out "forest tree" and insert "such"; in line 17, after the word "timber," to strike out "thereon," and insert "or establishing a vegetative cover beneficial to water conservation thereon"; and in line 18, after the word "that," to insert "from any sums appropriated for carrying out the provisions of this section"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor," approved June 4, 1924, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to cooperate with the various States in the procurement, production, and distribution of seeds and plants of forest trees, shrubs, and other beneficial forms of vegetation for the purpose of establishing windbreaks, shelter belts, forests, and farm wood lots upon denuded or nonforested lands, or for the purpose of establishing forests or other beneficial vegetative cover upon lands in State, county, municipal, or private ownership situated on watersheds from which water is secured for domestic, irrigation, or industrial use within such cooperating States, under such conditions and requirements as he may prescribe, to the end that such seeds or plants so procured, produced, or distributed shall be used effectively for planting denuded or nonforested lands in the cooperating States and growing timber or establishing a vegetative cover beneficial to water conservation thereon: Provided, That from any sums appropriated for carrying out the provisions of this section, the amount expended by the Federal Government in cooperation with any State during any fiscal year for such purposes shall not exceed the amount expended by the State for the same purposes during the same fiscal year. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not more than $100,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the provisions of this section."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BEAL NURSERY AT EAST TAWAS, MICH.

The bill (H. R. 10374) for the acquisition of lands for an addition to the Beal Nursery at East Tawas, Mich., was considered as in the Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend, from the appropriation for planting trees on national forests during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and/or from the appropriation for cooperation with States during the same fiscal year under the provisions of section 4 of the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stats., 653), as amended, such amounts, but not to exceed a total of $25,000, as may be necessary to acquire by purchase or condemnation lands or water rights necessary, in his judgment, for forest-tree nurseries or for additions to existing forest-tree nurseries, and any lands obtained under the authority of this act shall, upon acquisition, become parts of the nearest national forests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the acquisition of land and water rights for forest tree nurseries."

THE FOREIGN SERVICE

The bill (S. 4382) to amend the act (Public, No. 135, 68th Cong.), approved May 24, 1924, entitled "An act for the reorganization and improvement of the Foreign Service of the United States, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. FESS. That is a very important bill and is quite lengthy. I do not think it ought to be passed under the five-minute rule when we are considering unobjected bills on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, wait a moment, please. I can say to the Senator from Ohio that this bill represents the work of a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations which has diligently pursued the subject since the time of the introduction of a resolution by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] in December. It has probably had a more extended hearing than almost any measure that has been before the Senate at this session. The subcommittee was unanimous in its report to the full committee, unanimous in making the draft of the bill as reported to the full committee, and the full committee, after going over the bill, section by section, was unanimous in reporting it; and I can assure the Senator from Ohio, whose presence we did not have immediately on the Committee on Foreign Relations, that there have been no injustices done by this bill but that the bill makes a great step in advance toward remedying many conditions which are intolerable under the administration of the act of May 24, 1924. I implore the Senator to withdraw his objection.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator may be allowed to give some little explanation of the bill.

Mr. MOSES. Briefly, the so-called Rogers Act, which was designed to provide in the entire Foreign Service a single list of officers, with promotion by seniority and merit, provoked in its operation a great deal of opposition and a great deal of complaint and a very great deterioration of the morale of the Foreign Service, to such an extent that when the operations of the act were crowned by the appointment on one day of four men as chiefs of mission, three of whom served on the personnel board, it became evident that something ought to be done to correct conditions which exist.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the Rogers Act did not pass for over three years. It had been pending before both bodies for a long time, and I do not like to allow a bill of 27 sections amending that act to be passed without even any discussion.

Mr. MOSES. I can say to the Senator that, while the bill has 27 sections, it is an amendment of the Rogers Act and adopts the language of that act and does nothing to it except to make certain changes, which I can speedily explain to the Senator from Ohio.

The principal change is to take the subject matter of promotions in the Foreign Service out of the hands of men who are themselves in the Foreign Service and who may benefit by their action by setting up a bureau of personnel in the Department of State, to be in charge of an additional Secretary of State, who shall not be a Foreign Service officer nor have been a Foreign Service officer within two years of the time of his appointment; so that nobody concerned in promotion in the Foreign Service, following the passage of the bill now under consideration, can himself possibly benefit by any action which may be taken. We have found that of the nine men who from time to time have made up the personnel board under the Executive order issued pursuant to the enactment of the so-called Rogers Act, every man who has ever served for any time with that group has had promotions for himself, some of them three or four times, and, I think, the great majority of them at least twice.

Mr. FESS. Does this bill have the approval of the State Department?

Mr. MOSES. This bill has the approval of those officers of the State Department who have most to do with promotions. There is opposition to the bill in some quarters in the State Department.

Mr. SACKETT. Has it the approval of the Secretary of State?

Mr. MOSES. I am not sure. The principle of the bill, keeping promotions out of the hands of the board as it now exists, certainly has his approval. Whether the details of the bill have his approval or not I do not know. But, Mr. President, I have taken the position with reference to the bill that if we have general approval of the executives of the State Department who have had most to do with the matter of the personnel of the Foreign Service, that was sufficient, inasmuch as they are the permanent officers of the department who have been administering the Rogers law and who will have to act under the existing statutes. At any rate, Mr. President, I do not deem it to be of prime importance that we should have, for a new measure, the approval of those who have maladministered a previous measure.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. MOSES. Oh, yes, indeed.

Mr. KING. Does this bill provide for the demotion of what some have said was a clique which it is alleged have controlled promotions in the State Department, and also promoted themselves? The Senator knows against whom charges have been made. There are, it is alleged, five or six men, a sort of Harvard association, who, some think, have tried to run the State Department.

Mr. MOSES. In behalf of my colleague [Mr. KEYES], who is a graduate of Harvard College, I shall have to take exception to some of the language used by the Senator from Utah. I am not sure that this bill will provide for the demotion of any of the individuals under criticism by the Senator from Utah, and who have been under criticism before the subcommittee which drafted this measure; but it certainly will put an end to some of the practices in the State Department to which the Senator from Utah has reference.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, there has been enough said about that so that I do not want to see the bill passed without discussion.

Mr. MOSES. We can have discussion about it to-night, if the Senator from Ohio is willing.

Mr. FESS. The statements that have been made back and forth as to cliques in the State Department I think are pretty serious, and we do not want to pass a bill without any consideration of it under the unopposed rule.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of this bill. The bill was drafted and considered by the full committee after the subcommittee had gone into the matter fully after weeks of investigation. I do not think it is obnoxious to the State Department. We know that certain men high up in the State Department approve it. It will help the morale of the whole Consular Service, and this seems to be a very good opportunity to pass it.

Mr. FESS. Not very, to-night.

Mr. HARRISON. The bill was unanimously reported from the Foreign Relations Committee after full consideration. In answer to the question propounded by the Senator from Utah as to whether it demotes the clique, I will state that it abolishes the clique that once controlled the Consular Service. We think it will work wonders.

Mr. KING. The Diplomatic Service rather than the Consular Service.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, the Consular and Diplomatic Service.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator from Ohio is suspicious of the subcommittee or not, but the other members of the Foreign Relations Committee will indorse the action of the subcommittee in this particular matter, if that is the cause of his objection.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I feel like saying, in support of the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire, that after this bill was presented to the full committee by the subcommittee it had the very careful consideration of the full committee, which went over the bill word by word, and made some alterations in it. It was very carefully considered, and was reported unanimously; and we all felt that it would go far to remove serious criticisms that have been directed against the personnel of the State Department.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I say further to the Senator from Ohio that in the consideration of this matter we did not permit politics to be injected into it. We brought these people here from various parts of the country to appear before the subcommittee. There has been no criticism of the State Department before the subcommittee that conducted the investigation nor before the full committee. There is not now. We have merely tried to help the morale of the Consular and Diplomatic Services, and I believe we will do it. I dare say there is not a man in the Consular Service to-day who would not indorse this bill, and who does not believe that it will do what we think it will do.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the bill accomplishes one thing that the Consular Service has very properly criticized in the old plan of the Foreign Service. In the past there has been very little opportunity for those officers who went into the Diplomatic Service to learn anything about the Consular Service. Now, for the first time, by statute we require that every officer who takes a position in the Diplomatic Service shall have had at least five years' service in the consular branch of the service. It will go very far toward removing what has seemed to many people to be a snobbish distinction between the consuls and the diplomatic officers in the Foreign Service.

Another hardship which the bill corrects, which, I think, has been called to the attention of most Senators, is that it permits these Foreign Service officers, particularly of the lower classes, who are on far-distant stations, and who can not possibly, out of their salaries, afford to return to the United States for the brief vacation period allowed them each year, to consolidate those leaves over a period of as much as four years. You can readily imagine how a consul in some town in China is quite unable to afford the trip home for a 30-day holiday in the home country; but by allowing him to accumulate his leave for the four years it is worth while for him to save up and make the trip.

That is a hardship that I think has been called to the attention of many Senators in the past.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, my objection to the bill is because it is a voluminous statute. It in a sense is attacking, as I thought, the State Department. I did not like to have a measure of this sort go through without discussion. I have confidence, of course, in the judgment of these men who have thus expressed themselves on the necessity and the wisdom of the legislation; and I am amenable to reason. My only point was not to let it go through without discussion. I assume that these Senators would not make statements that are not supported by the facts. For that reason I am going to withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 19, after the word "follows," to strike out "(the following is new)"; on page 3, line 10, after the word "may," to strike out "have accrued," and insert "accrue"; on page 4, to strike out lines 3 to 16, both inclusive; on page 11, line 10, to strike out "class 1" and insert "Class I"; on page 20, line 19, after the word "appointed," to insert "annually"; in the same line, after the word "State," to strike out "who shall be members of the board for one, two, and three years, respectively"; in line 22, after the words "It shall be the," to strike out "sole and exclusive"; on page 21, line 4, after "Sec. 24," to strike out "That it shall be the function of" and insert "The Bureau of"; in line 5, before the word "Personnel," to strike out "The Bureau of"; in the same line, after the word "Personnel," to strike out "Bureau shall be solely responsible for the accuracy other," and insert "shall assemble and be the custodian of all"; in line 10, after the words "shall be," to strike out "soley" and insert "solely"; in line 12, after the word "Such," to strike out "record" and insert "records"; in line 13, after the word "additions," to strike out "in them"; on page 22, line 20, after the word "the," to strike out "Personnel"; on page 23, line 11, after the word "Except," to strike out "for" and insert "under"; on the same page, line 19, after the word "officer," to insert "without regard to age or length of service"; in line 21, after the word "State," to strike out "without regard to age or length of service"; on page 24, line 6, after the word "paragraphs," to strike out "I" and insert "(i)"; in line 11, before the word "Bureau," to strike out "Personnel," and after the word "Bureau" to insert "of Personnel"; on page 25, to strike out lines 4 to 6, inclusive; and in line 7, to change the number of the section from 28 to 27; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act (Public, No. 135, 68th Cong.), approved May 24, 1924, entitled "An act for the reorganization and improvement of the Foreign Service of the United States, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That hereafter the Diplomatic and Consular Service of the United States shall be known as the Foreign Service of the United States.

"SEC. 2. That the official designation 'Foreign Service officer,' as employed throughout this act, shall be deemed to denote permanent officers in the Foreign Service below the grade of minister, all of whom are subject to promotion on merit and who may be appointed to either diplomatic or consular positions or assigned to serve in the Department of State subject to section 14 of this act, at the discretion of the President.

"SEC. 3. That the officers in the Foreign Service shall hereafter be graded and classified as follows with the salaries of each class herein affixed thereto, but not exceeding in number for each class a proportion of the total number of officers in the service represented in the following percentage limitations:

"Ambassadors and ministers as now or hereafter provided; Foreign Service officers as follows: Class I (13 per cent), $8,000 to $9,000; Class II (17 per cent), $7,000 to $8,000; Class III (24 per cent), $5,000 to $7,000; Class IV, $4,000 to $5,000; unclassified, $2,500 to $4,000: Provided, however, That as many Foreign Service officers above Class III as may be required for the purpose of inspection may be detailed by the Secretary of State for that purpose.

"On the date this act takes effect officers shall be reclassified as follows:

"Officers in Classes I and II, as officers in Class I; officers in Classes III and IV, as officers in Class II; officers in Classes V and VI, as officers in Class III; officers in Classes VII and VIII, as officers in Class IV; and officers in Class IX, as unclassified officers; but no officer shall receive less salary through such classification than he is now receiving nor shall he receive any increase of salary through such classification except such periodic increase as may accrue to him under section 18 of this act.

"SEC. 4. That Foreign Service officers may be commissioned as diplomatic or consular officers or both: Provided, That any officer who entered the Foreign Service subsequent to July 1, 1924, shall serve five years as a consular officer before promotion to Class I except that he may be excused from not more than two years of such service if, in the opinion of the Secretary of State on the recommendation of the Assistant Secretary in charge of the Foreign Service, the completion of such term of five years as consul will not be in the interest of the Government: Provided further, That all such appointments shall be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: And provided further, That all official acts of such officers while serving under diplomatic or consular commissions in the Foreign Service shall be performed under their respective commissions as secretaries or as consular officers.

"SEC. 5. That hereafter appointments to the position of Foreign Service officer shall be made after examination and a suitable period of probation or after five years of continuous service in the Department of State, by transfer therefrom under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, or after 10 years of satisfactory service as clerk in a mission or consulate: Provided, That no candidate shall be eligible for examination for Foreign Service officer who is not an American citizen and who shall not have been such at least 15 years: Provided further, That reinstatement of Foreign Service officers separated from the classified service by reason of appointment to some other position in the Government service may be made by Executive order of the President under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

"All appointments of Foreign Service officers shall be by commission to a class and not by commission to a particular post, and such officers shall be assigned to posts and may be transferred from one post to another by order of the President as the interests of the service may require: Provided, That the classification of secretaries in the Diplomatic Service and of consular officers is hereby abolished without, however, in anywise impairing the validity of the present commissions of secretaries and consular officers.

"SEC. 6. That section 5 of the act of February 5, 1915 (Public No. 242), is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 7. That the Secretary of State is directed to report from time to time to the President, along with his recommendations, the names of those Foreign Service officers who by reason of efficient service have demonstrated special capacity for promotion to the grade of minister and the names of those Foreign Service officers and employees and officers and employees in the Department of State and clerks at missions and consulates who by reason of efficient service, an accurate record of which shall be kept in the Department of State, have demonstrated special efficiency, and also the names of persons found upon taking the prescribed examination to have fitness for appointment to the service.

"That the grade of consular assistant is hereby abolished.

"SEC. 8. That sections 1697 and 1698 of the Revised Statutes are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 9. Every secretary, consul general, consul, vice consul of career, or Foreign Service officer, before he receives his commission or enters upon the duties of his office, shall give to the United States a bond, in such form as the President shall prescribe, with such sureties, who shall be permanent residents of the United States, as the Secretary of State shall approve, in a penal sum not less than the annual compensation allowed to such officer, conditioned for the true and faithful accounting for, paying over, and delivering up of all fees, moneys, goods, effects, books, records, papers, and other property which shall come to his hands or to the hands of any other person to his use as such officer under any law now or hereafter enacted, and for the true and faithful performance of all other duties now or hereafter lawfully imposed upon him as such officer: Provided, That the operation of no existing bond shall in anywise be impaired by the provisions of this act: Provided further, That such bond shall cover by its stipulations all official acts of such officer, whether commissioned as diplomatic or consular officer. The bonds herein mentioned shall be deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury.

"SEC. 10. That the provisions of section 4 of the act of April 5, 1906, relative to the powers, duties, and prerogatives of consuls general at large are hereby made applicable to the Foreign Service officers detailed for the purpose of inspection, who shall, under the direction of the Secretary of State, inspect in a substantially uniform manner the work of diplomatic and consular offices.

"SEC. 11. That the provisions of sections 8 and 10 of the act of April 5, 1906, relative to official fees and the method of accounting therefor shall apply to diplomatic officers below the grade of minister, and consular officers.

"SEC. 12. That the President is hereby authorized to grant to diplomatic and consular officers representation allowances and rent or post allowances wherever the cost of living may be proportionately so high that, in the opinion of the Secretary of State, such allowances are necessary to enable such diplomatic or consular officers to carry on their work efficiently, out of any money which may be appropriated for such purpose from time to time by Congress, the expenditure of such representation allowances or rent allowances to be accounted for in detail to the Department of State quarterly under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, and by the Secretary to be reported annually to Congress.

"SEC. 13. Appropriations are authorized for the salary of a private secretary to each ambassador who shall be appointed by the ambassador and hold office at his pleasure.

"SEC. 14. That any Foreign Service officer may be assigned for duty in the Department of State without loss of class or salary, such assignment to be for a period of not more than three years, unless the public interests demand further service, when such assignment may be extended for a period not to exceed one year. Any Foreign Service officer of whatever class detailed for special duty not at his post or in the Department of State shall be paid his actual and necessary expenses for travel and not exceeding an average of $8 per day for subsistence during such special detail: Provided, That such special duty shall not continue for more than 60 days, unless in the case of trade conferences or international gatherings, congresses, or conferences, when such subsistence expenses shall run only during the period thereof and the necessary period of transit to and from the place of gathering: Provided further, That the Secretary of State is authorized to prescribe a per diem allowance not exceeding $6, in lieu of subsistence for Foreign Service officers on special duty or Foreign Service inspectors.

"SEC. 15. That the Secretary of State is authorized, whenever he deems it to be in the public interest, to order to the United States on his statutory leave of absence any Foreign Service officer or vice consul of career who has performed three years or more of continuous service abroad: Provided, That the expenses of transportation and subsistence of such officers and their immediate families, in traveling from their posts to their homes in the United States and return, shall be paid under the same rules and regulations applicable in the case of officers going to and returning from their posts under orders of the Secretary of State when not on leave: And provided further, That while in the United States the services of such officers shall be available for trade conference work or for such duties in the Department of State as the Secretary of State may prescribe, but the time of such work or duties shall not be counted as leave.

"Leave with pay shall be of two kinds: (1) Leave as granted together with an additional allowance of a reasonable transit time between the officer's post and his residence in the United States, and (2) simple leave without such allowance.

"Simple leave with pay may be taken annually, if no other leave is taken in that year, for not more than 30 days in any one year, except, in the discretion of the President, in the case of illness of an officer or of a member of his immediate family or other exceptional circumstances.

"Simple leave not taken when due may be accumulated and taken not to exceed 60 days in any one year, but leave with transit time allowance may not be accumulated with simple leave and the whole taken as simple leave.

"Leave with pay with a transit time allowance may be taken biennially, if no other leave is taken in that year, for not more than 60 days in any one year, except, in the discretion of the Secretary of State, in the case of (1) officers at remote posts, and (2) illness of an officer or of a member of his immediate family, or other exceptional circumstances.

"Leave with transit time allowance not taken when due may be accumulated separately, when it may be taken not to exceed 120 days in the fourth calendar year, or it may be accumulated, together with simple leave, and the two taken together as leave with transit time allowance not to exceed 120 days in the third calendar year, after two years without any leave of either sort, or not to exceed 180 days in the fourth calendar year, after three years without any leave of either sort.

"No Foreign Service officer shall be absent from his post with pay for more than 48 hours without permission, except as provided herein.

"All rules and regulations governing the leaves of Foreign Service officers shall be uniform.

"Section 1742 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 16. That the part of the act of July 1, 1916 (Public, No. 131), which authorizes the President to designate and assign any secretary of Class I as counselor of embassy or legation, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'Provided, That the President may, whenever he considers it advisable so to do, designate and assign any Foreign Service officer as counselor of embassy or legation.'

"SEC. 17. That within the discretion of the President, any Foreign Service officer may be assigned to act as commissioner, chargé d'affaires, minister resident, or diplomatic agent for such period as the public interests may require without loss of grade, class, or salary: Provided, however, That no such officer shall receive more than one salary.

"SEC. 18. That for such time as any Foreign Service officer shall be lawfully authorized to act as chargé d'affaires ad interim or to assume charge of a consulate general or consulate during the absence of the principal officer at the post to which he shall have been assigned, he shall, if his salary is less than one-half that of such principal officer, receive in addition to his salary as Foreign Service officer compensation equal to the difference between such salary and one-half of the salary provided by law for the ambassador, minister, or principal consular officer, as the case may be.

"SEC. 19. The President is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for the establishment of a Foreign Service retirement and disability system to be administered under the direction of the Secretary of State and in accordance with the following principles, to wit:

"(a) The Secretary of State shall submit annually a comparative report showing all receipts and disbursements on account of refunds, allowances, and annuities, together with the total number of persons receiving annuities and the amounts paid them, and shall submit annually estimates of appropriations necessary to continue this section in full force and such appropriations are hereby authorized: Provided, That in no event shall the aggregate total appropriations exceed the aggregate total of the contributions of the Foreign Service officers theretofore made, and accumulated interest thereon.

"(b) There is hereby created a special fund to be known as the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund.

"(c) Five per cent of the basic salary of all Foreign Service officers eligible to retirement shall be contributed to the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund, and the Secretary of the Treasury is directed on the date on which this act takes effect to cause such deductions to be made and the sums transferred on the books of the Treasury Department to the credit of the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances: Provided, That all basic salaries in excess of $9,000 per annum shall be treated as $9,000.

"(d) When any Foreign Service officer has reached the age of 65 years and rendered at least 15 years of service he shall be retired: Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, retain any such officer on active duty for such period, not exceeding 5 years, as he may deem for the interests of the United States: Provided further, That if any such officer shall have served 30 years he may be retired at his own request.

"(e) Annuities shall be paid to retired Foreign Service officers under the following classification, based upon length of service and at the following percentages of the average annual basic salary for the 10 years next preceding the date of retirement: Class A, 30 years or more, 60 per cent; class B, from 27 to 30 years, 54 per cent; class C, from 24 to 27 years, 48 per cent; class D, from 21 to 24 years, 42 per cent; class E, from 18 to 21 years, 36 per cent; class F, from 15 to 18 years, 30 per cent.

"(f) Those officers who retire before having contributed for each year of service shall have withheld from their annuities to the credit of the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund such proportion of 5 per cent as the number of years in which they did not contribute bears to the total length of service.

"(g) The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to invest from time to time in interest-bearing securities of the United States such portions of the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund as in his judgment may not be immediately required for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances, and the income derived from such investments shall constitute a part of said fund.

"(h) None of the moneys mentioned in this section shall be assignable, either in law or equity, or be subject to execution, levy, attachment, garnishment, or other legal process.

"(i) In case an annuitant dies without having received in annuities an amount equal to the total amount of his contributions from salary with interest thereon at 4 per cent per annum, compounded annually up to the time of his death, the excess of said accumulated contributions over the said annuity payments shall be paid to his or her legal representatives; and in case a Foreign Service officer shall die without having reached the retirement age the total amount of his contribution with accrued interest shall be paid to his legal representatives.

"(j) That any Foreign Service officer who before reaching the age of retirement becomes totally disabled for useful and efficient service by reason of disease or injury not due to vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct on his part, shall, upon his own application or upon order of the President, be retired on an annuity under paragraph (e) of this section: Provided, however, That in each case such disability shall be determined by the report of a duly qualified physician or surgeon designated by the Secretary of State to conduct the examination: Provided, further, That unless the disability be permanent, a like examination shall be made annually in order to determine the degree of disability, and the payment of annuity shall cease from the date of the medical examination showing recovery.

"Fees for examinations under this provision, together with reasonable traveling and other expenses incurred in order to submit to examination, shall be paid out of the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund.

"When the annuity is discontinued under this provision, before the annuitant has received a sum equal to the total amount of his contributions with accrued interest, the difference shall be paid to him or to his legal representatives.

"(k) The President is authorized from time to time to establish, by Executive order, a list of places which by reason of climatic or other extreme conditions are to be classed as unhealthful posts, and each year of duty subsequent to January 1, 1900, at such posts, while so classed, inclusive of regular leaves of absence, shall be counted as one year and a half, and so on in like proportion in reckoning the length of service for the purpose of retirement.

"(l) Whenever a Foreign Service officer becomes separated from the service except for disability before reaching the age of retirement the total amount of contribution from his salary with interest shall be returned to him.

"(m) The Secretary of State is authorized to expend from surplus money to the credit of the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund an amount not exceeding $5,000 for the expenses necessary in carrying out the provisions of this section, including actuarial advice.

"(n) Any diplomatic secretary or consular officer who has been or any Foreign Service officer who may hereafter be promoted from the classified service to the grade of ambassador or minister, or appointed to a position in the Department of State, shall be entitled to all the benefits of this section in the same manner and under the same conditions as Foreign Service officers.

"(o) For the purposes of this act the period of service shall be computed from the date of original oath of office as diplomatic secretary, consul general, consul, vice consul, deputy consul, consular assistant, consular agent, commercial agent, interpreter, or student interpreter, and shall include periods of service at different times as either a diplomatic or consular officer, or while on assignment to the Department of State, or on special duty, or service in another department or establishment of the Government, but all periods of separation from the service and so much of any period of leave of absence without pay as may exceed six months shall be excluded: Provided, That service in the Department of State or as clerk in a mission or consulate prior to appointment as a Foreign Service officer may be included in the period of service, in which case the officer shall pay into the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund a special contribution equal to 5 per cent of his annual salary for each year of such employment, with interest thereon to date of payment compounded annually at 4 per cent.

"SEC. 20. In the event of public emergency any retired Foregin Service officer may be recalled temporarily to active service by the President, and while so serving he shall be entitled in lieu of his retirement allowance to the full pay of the class in which he is temporarily serving.

"SEC. 21. That all provisions of law heretofore enacted relating to diplomatic secretaries and to consular officers, which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby made applicable to Foreign Service officers when they are designated for service as diplomatic or consular officers, and that all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 22. That the appropriations contained in Title I of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes,' for such compensation and expenses as are affected by the provisions of this act are made available and may be applied toward the payment of the compensation and expenses herein provided for, except that no part of such appropriations shall be available for the payment of annuities to retired Foreign Service officers: Provided, That thereafter all estimates and requests for appropriations for the Foreign Service and appropriations therefor shall be made for Foreign Service establishments in countries or geographical or political areas, but upon necessity therefor arising sums appropriated may be transferred from establishment to establishment within the country or geographical or political area for which appropriated.

"SEC. 23. That there is hereby established in the Department of State a bureau of personnel to be under the supervision of an additional Assistant Secretary of State, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall not be when appointed or for two years prior thereto a Foreign Service officer. Such Assistant Secretary of State shall have no other duties assigned to him. The salary of such Assistant Secretary of State, as well as that of the Undersecretary of State, the four Assistant Secretaries of State, and the legal adviser of the Department of State, shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

"SEC. 24. (a) That the Secretary of State is authorized (1) in accordance with the civil service laws to appoint, and, in accordance with the classification act of 1923, and later amendments thereto, to fix the compensation of, such officers and employees in the bureau of personnel as may be necessary for the administration of this act, or (2) to assign to the bureau of personnel from other bureaus or divisions in the Department of State such officers and employees as he deems advisable: Provided, That no person in an executive position in the bureau shall be of lower classification than grade 5—senior profession of grade 12—chief administrative, or in corresponding grades of later acts or amendments. No officer in the Foreign Service of the United States shall be appointed or assigned to the bureau of personnel nor shall any person be appointed or assigned thereto within two years following service as a Foreign Service officer, nor shall service in the bureau of personnel be accounted service in the Department of State for the purposes of appointment to the position of Foreign Service officer, or as service in some other position in the Government for reinstatement in the Foreign Service, as provided in section 5 of this act.

"(b) The Secretary of State is authorized to make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere, and for law books, books of reference, and periodicals) as may be necessary for the administration of this act.

"(c) There shall be a board of selection for Foreign Service officers composed of the Assistant Secretary, who shall be chairman, one member of the personnel office, who shall be secretary, and three other competent persons to be appointed annually by the Secretary of State, not more than one of whom may be a Foreign Service officer. It shall be the duty of the board of selection to recommend promotions in the Foreign Service and to furnish to the Secretary of State a list of Foreign Service officers of class I who have demonstrated special capacity for promotion to the grade of minister. To perform the duties hereinbefore set forth the board of selection shall be convened not later than December 1 of each year."

"SEC. 24. The bureau of personnel shall assemble and be the custodian of all information in regard to the character, ability, efficiency, experience, and general availability of Foreign Service officers. The Assistant Secretary of State supervising the personnel bureau shall be solely responsible for the accuracy and impartiality of the efficiency records of Foreign Service officers. Such records shall be kept so that no alterations, erasures, withdrawals, or additions can be made without being apparent and every Foreign Service officer shall be entitled to see his own record upon request by him. No unfavorable entry shall be made on an officer's record except together with the officer's reply thereto and the conclusion thereon of the Assistant Secretary supervising the personnel bureau. Not later than November 1 of each year the personnel office shall, under the supervision of the Assistant Secretary of State, prepare a list in which all Foreign Service officers shall be graded in accordance with their relative efficiency and value to the service. In this list officers shall be graded as excellent, high average, average or poor, with such further subclassification as the Assistant Secretary shall find necessary: Provided, That this list shall not become effective in so far as it effects promotion until it has been considered by and has the approval of the board of selection hereinbefore provided for: Provided further, That this list shall not be changed within a year after it has been prepared in so far as it effects promotion except for unusual cause. From this list of all Foreign Service officers, in the order of their ascertained merit within classes, recommendations for promotion shall be made. Recommendations shall also be made, in order of merit, for the unclassified grade as vice consuls, candidates who have successfully passed the examinations. All such recommendations shall be submitted to the Secretary of State, who shall transmit them to the President for submission to the Senate, if he see fit.

"The correspondence and records of the bureau of personnel shall be confidential except to the President, Secretary of State, the Assistant Secretary of State supervising the bureau, such of its employees as may be assigned to work on such correspondence and records, and the individual Foreign Service officers concerned, and except to proper administrative officers of the Department of State, concerning the abilities and capacities of officers for special work or specific posts.

"SEC. 25. That notwithstanding the provisions of section 3 of this act all Foreign Service officers shall, at the expiration of each year of service in any class after this act takes effect, receive an increase of salary of $100, except that no officer shall receive a salary above the maximum of his class. Foreign Service officers on the date this act takes effect shall receive an increase in salary of $100 for each full year served continuously in any class, effective on the date this act takes effect, except that no officer shall receive a salary greater than the maximum salary for his class. Except under extraordinary circumstances which shall be reported to the President by the Secretary of State, no Foreign Service officer shall be promoted from one class to another until he shall have served four years in the class to which he was admitted.

"If after 10 years of continuous service in the unclassified grade or 8 years' continuous service in any other class below Class I any officer is not recommended for promotion to the next higher class, such officer, without regard to age or length of service, shall be retired from the service, after a hearing by the Secretary of State, upon an annuity equal to 25 per cent of his salary at the time of retirement, in the case of officers over 45 years of age or in the case of officers under 45 years of age with a bonus of 1 year's salary at the time of his retirement, either annuity or 1 year's salary to be payable out of the Foreign Service officers' retirement and disability fund and except as herein provided, subject to the same provisions and limitations as other annuities payable out of such fund; but no return of contributions shall be made under paragraph (i) or L of section 19 of this act in the case of any Foreign Service officer retired under the provisions of this act. Whenever it is determined by the Assistant Secretary supervising the bureau of personnel that the efficiency rating of an officer is poor, thereby meaning below the standard required for the service, and such determination has been confirmed by the Secretary of State, the officer shall be notified thereof, and if, after a reasonable period of not less than one year, the rating of such officer continues to be found poor by the Assistant Secretary and such finding is confirmed by the Secretary of State after a hearing accorded the officer, such officer shall be separated from the service with the annuity or bonus provided in this section, but no officer so separated from the service shall receive the said annuity or bonus unless at the time of separation he shall have served at least 15 years. He shall, however, have returned to him the full sum of his contribution to the annuity fund, with interest thereon at 4 per cent.

"SEC. 26. That nothing in this act shall be construed to reduce the salary of any Foreign Service officer upon promotion to a higher class.

"SEC. 27. That this act shall take effect July 1, 1928."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARION BANTA

The bill (H. R. 10067) for the relief of Marion Banta was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. E. HANSEN

The bill (S. 3794) for the relief of R. E. Hansen was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the sum of $2,480.65 is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of funds received from the sale of stored water in the Blackfoot Reservoir, Fort Hall irrigation project, Idaho, to the North Side Canal Co., to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to pay R. E. Hansen, Blackfoot, Idaho, for damages incurred in the destruction of his crop of hay and oats by the overflow of his land on account of the operation of said irrigation project.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COWLITZ TRIBE OF INDIANS

The bill (H. R. 167) to amend the act of February 12, 1925 (Public, No. 402, 68th Cong.), so as to permit the Cowlitz Tribe of Indians to file suit in the Court of Claims under said act was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARCH L. GREGG

The bill (S. 3595) for the relief of Arch L. Gregg was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the end of section 1 to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That no part of the amount appropriated in this bill in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney, or attorneys on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim. Any person or persons violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to Arch L. Gregg, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 as compensation for disability resulting from an injury received in the performance of his duties while assuming to act as a special deputy United States marshal on November 20, 1917, when he was shot by a person whom he was endeavoring to arrest upon a charge of evading the selective draft act.

SEC. 2. That no part of the amount appropriated in this bill in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim. Any person or persons violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DETAIL OF ENGINEERS OF BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I was unable to attend the session on Tuesday evening, and in my absence Order of Business 825, Senate bill 1718, was called. It is entitled "A bill to authorize the President to detail engineers of the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture to assist the governments of the Latin-American Republics in highway matters." One Senator, through a misapprehension, stated that I was opposed to the consideration of the measure, and asked that it go over. I now ask unanimous consent to take up that bill for consideration and to make a brief statement in regard to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUCE. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. BRUCE. I object because the promise was made to us that when the unobjected bills were completed we would go back to the beginning of the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the unanimous-consent agreement under which we are operating.

HOWARD SEABURY

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to report from the Committee on Commerce a bill that I am satisfied will lead to no discussion, and ask for its passage, if the Senator will not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Let it be stated.

Mr. JONES. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, House bill 12379, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. It is a bill granting the consent of Congress to Howard Seabury to construct, maintain, and operate a dam to retain tidal waters in an unnamed cove which is situated and extends from Cases Inlet into section 28, township 21 north, range 1 west, Willamette meridian, in Pierce County, State of Washington.

Mr. BRUCE. If there will be no discussion, I shall not object.

Mr. JONES. No; I trust there will not be. It is a House bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committe of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Secretary will now return to the beginning of the calendar.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NEWTON, MASS.

The bill (S. 2447) for the relief of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Newton, Mass., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. An objection will enable a motion to be made, I presume.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. President, I shall not move to consider this bill, because, while I think it is exceedingly meritorious, I understand that even if the motion prevailed there would be protracted debate; and at this time of night the motion would avail nothing to the bill, but would prevent other measures from passing. So, after consultation with other friends of the bill, I have decided not to waste time by making a motion for its consideration.

GRANT OF LANDS AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask that we may return to Order of Business No. 1090, which has just had favorable action of the Senate here to-night. It is Senate bill 3537. An identical bill, House bill 11852, which is not yet upon the Senate calendar, has passed the House. I ask that the House bill may be substituted for the Senate bill, and the Senate bill indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be entered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11852) providing for the confirmation of grant of lands formerly the United States barracks at Baton Rouge, La., to the board of supervisors of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 3537 will be indefinitely postponed.

LOUISE A. WOOD

The bill (S. 61) granting an increase of pension to Louise A. Wood was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. BRUCE. I move that the bill be taken up for consideration notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louise A. Wood, widow of Leonard Wood, late a major general in the United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $5,000 a year in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS

The bill (S. 1939) granting pensions and increase of pensions to widows and former widows of certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator from South Dakota intend to press this bill to-night?

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I am not going to move to take up this bill; but I do ask unanimous consent to take up instead the other bill, Order of Business 857, the Civil War widows' pension bill, to give them $40 per month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I spoke to the Senator——

Mr. NORBECK. The amendments that the Senator and I agreed upon were adopted.

Mr. KING. Those were adopted?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; they were adopted the other night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10159) granting pensions and increase of pensions to widows and former widows of certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill has been heretofore considered, and the amendments agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2787) providing for the appointment of governors of the non-Christian Provinces in the Philippine Islands by the Governor General without the consent of the Philippine Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, this bill will lead to protracted debate. I therefore ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting war was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This joint resolution is reported adversely.

Mr. BRUCE. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2149) authorizing and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate all phases of crop insurance was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that that go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1414) for the prevention and removal of obstructions and burdens upon interstate commerce in cottonseed oil by regulating transactions on future exchanges, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have an understanding with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAYFIELD] about this bill, and ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CLASSIFICATION OF SERVICE POSTMASTERS

The bill (S. 1728) placing service postmasters in the classified service was announced as next in order.

Mr. BLEASE. Let that go over.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I move that the bill be taken up for consideration, notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. KING. There will be some debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I call for a division.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRATTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. During his absence, and not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who is absent. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. ASHURST (when Mr. HAYDEN's name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is absent on important official business. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If voting, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. COPELAND. I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], but I understand that on this question he would vote the same way I shall vote, so I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]; and

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. BRATTON. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS], and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—24

Blaine	Cutting	Hale	Norris
Borah	Dale	Howell	Nye
Bratton	Deneen	Johnson	Oddie
Brookhart	Edge	Jones	Sackett
Bruce	Frazier	Keyes	Vandenberg

Gerry	McKellar	Robinson, Ind.	Tyson
Glass	McLean	Schall	Walsh, Mass.
Goff	McMaster	Shipstead	Warren
Gooding	Metcalf	Simmons	Watson

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

CONVICT-MADE GOODS

The bill (S. 1940) to divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

COLUMBIA BASIN RECLAMATION PROJECT

The bill (S. 1462) for the adoption of the Columbia Basin reclamation project, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I wish the Senator would let us take this bill up and consider it briefly. We have offered an amendment to the bill which takes out all of the appropriation for construction, and simply provides for the appropriation necessary to continue the studies and surveys of the project. I think with that amendment, taking out the provision of the bill for the large appropriation, there will not be serious objection to it. I wish the Senator would let us take the bill up. It is very important.

Mr. KING. Let me inquire if the amendment which it is proposed to offer does not commit the Government to the policy, and is not an authorization of it, regardless of the survey.

Mr. DILL. The proposed amendment simply commits the Government to the policy of investigating this project as a Federal project. It does not authorize the building of the project in any way. We took out the provision that did authorize that by this amendment. I do not think there can be serious objection to the bill, as it only authorizes a continuation of the studies.

Mr. KING. Will not the Senator move to take the matter up so that it can be debated without the limitation of five minutes on the length of speeches?

Mr. DILL. I am willing to, but I hope the Senator will permit the bill to be taken up without objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BINGHAM in the chair). The Senator from Utah is correct. If the bill is taken up without objection, speeches will be limited to five minutes, whereas if it is taken up on motion, debate will be unlimited.

Mr. DILL. I move that the bill be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am very glad at this juncture to give my support to this bill. I happen to be a humble member of the committee that reported it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, under what rule is it that the motion is not debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under Rule VIII, under which the Senate is now operating.

Mr. BORAH. This is after 2 o'clock, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under previous decisions of the Chair, when the Senate indulges in a night session and proceeds under Rule VIII, it is assumed that 2 o'clock is somewhere in the future and not in the past.

Mr. BORAH. But it is after 2 o'clock to-day. There is no logic in that ruling.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under previous decisions of the Chair debate is not allowed on a motion to take up a bill at a night session when the Senate is operating under Rule VIII.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if we vote in the affirmative to take the bill up, it means that it may be debated under Rule VIII without any limitation as to the length of speeches?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is correct.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington.

On a division, the motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], on page 1, line 7.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I would like to have the bill read before we start with the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the lands in the eastern part of the State of Washington embraced in what is commonly known as the Columbia Basin project, or all the lands that may be embraced within the boundaries of such project, as may be finally determined by the Secretary of the Interior, be, and the same are hereby, adopted as a reclamation project to be known as the Columbia Basin reclamation project, and the appropriation of the necessary funds to determine and carry on such project is hereby authorized from funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated. This project shall be carried on, developed, and dealt with in every respect and pursuant to the terms and conditions of the United States reclamation act and amendments thereto, except for the appropriation provision herein made.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I understand the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] has an amendment which, to a large extent, meets my ideas, and I beg to withdraw the amendment which I offered, and will let the Senator offer his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida withdraws his amendment.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which previously was offered by my colleague for him and myself, beginning on page 1, line 9, to strike out the remainder of the bill which carries the appropriation; on page 1, line 9, after the word "project," to strike out the balance of the line, all of line 10, and on page 2, all of lines 1 to 6, inclusive, and to insert the following:

and the appropriation of funds to make such surveys, investigations, and studies as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of the Interior to determine the economic feasibility of this project, and the best method for prosecuting the same, is hereby authorized from funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the bill as it would read with this amendment simply provides for the appropriation of the necessary funds to make the studies and surveys to determine the economic feasibility of this project, and no longer authorizes the appropriation for the building of the project, as it previously did. The amendment does not affect, however, the amendments already adopted regarding the States of Idaho and Montana. It refers only to that part of the bill which carries the authorization of the appropriation for construction.

We are anxious to have the appropriation in order that the work may go forward over a period of years and be done with a view to the actual construction of the project rather than by piecemeal appropriation. The Secretary of the Interior has said in his report that he approves the appropriation of funds for the studies and surveys, but he did object to the bill as it was written because of the large appropriation and it being an indeterminate amount at this time.

I shall be glad now to answer any questions.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Washington if the amendment now proposed by him, inserted at the point designated in the bill, would not still leave in the bill the language from lines 6 to 9, inclusive, "to be finally determined by the Secretary of the Interior, be, and the same are hereby, adopted as a reclamation project, to be known as the Columbia Basin reclamation project"?

Mr. DILL. That is true.

Mr. PHIPPS. The adoption of the project, it seems to me, should take place after and not before the investigation to determine the feasibility. I think the amendment as suggested by the Senator from Florida was in proper form. If the Senator from Washington prefers the language of his own amendment, I would not have any objection to that, but I do not think that the Congress at this time is ready to declare and adopt this property or this land as a reclamation project. I think the investigation should first be had.

As I said before on the floor of the Senate, I am in favor of having the necessary appropriations to determine that fact authorized and made, but I feel that if the Congress goes on record as having adopted this as a reclamation project it is perhaps setting up false hopes in the minds of settlers, who will come into that district saying, "We are going to move into a Government reclamation project." I think it would very likely result in a land boom that would not be justified at this time.

Mr. DILL. Settlers will not go into and live on the project with knowledge that the economic feasibility will not be determined for some years to come. There is no way for them to make a living unless they make it by pumping water or carrying water on the land.

Mr. PHIPPS. Then what is the purpose of insisting upon having it adopted as a reclamation project? Why not be satisfied with the authority to expend all the money necessary to determine whether or not it is a feasible reclamation project?

Mr. DILL. If we simply continue to appropriate money in small amounts, as we have been doing, we will continue to get piecemeal investigations and piecemeal reports. If the project is adopted as a project, it means that $250,000 or $300,000 or $400,000, which will be spent over the period of the next five or six years, will be spent consecutively with a view to determining the development of the project as a whole, and one final report will be made, and we will not be having a report on every $50,000 we appropriate.

Under the present law there is no possibility of building a reclamation project until it has been determined economically feasible.

The use of the word "adoption" does not commit the Government to building the project, but it will commit the Reclamation Bureau to investigation on the theory that it is to be built as a whole if it is to be built at all. As long as this is done we will have to spend the money as we have been in the past, and we will not be able to get a study of the project on the theory of the entire project, spending three or four hundred thousand dollars, because we will only appropriate $50,000 or $100,000 at most at a time, and we will get a piecemeal investigation.

Mr. PHIPPS. An authorization is not necessarily an appropriation. While it is true that the appropriation would be made annually in moderate amounts as the necessary work progresses, I see no objection to making the authorization if such amount as is estimated will be sufficient to determine definitely and finally whether or not it is feasible.

I am absolutely opposed to the Congress going on record as having adopted this project before it knows whether or not it is feasible. I think it is misleading to the public, misleading to the people who would interest themselves in it, and it is absolutely unnecessary to go to that expense.

I think the Senators from Washington should be satisfied to have the authorization for the money that may be necessary, no matter whether it is $100,000 or $500,000, authorized to be appropriated in the judgment of the Congress from time to time on reports from the Department of the Interior. But to say that this is adopted as a reclamation project to my mind is a very bad policy, and I hope the bill will not be supported in that form. At the proper time I shall move to strike out the necessary language to eliminate its adoption as a project.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I want to answer the Senator from Colorado. The Senator from Colorado speaks as though there had been no report on the feasibility of the project. There have been reports on the feasibility of the project and they are on file as Senate documents. The project has been declared feasible, but before any project can be constructed there must be a study of the economic conditions by which the Secretary of the Interior is enabled to say it is economically feasible. The Congress has appropriated in the past funds for this investigation and the reports on file now are that the project is a feasible project. But it is such an immense project, there is so much soil involved, the carrying of the water is the biggest thing ever attempted by the Government, that consequently a great deal of study ought to be carried on and a great deal of work should be done before an actual declaration of its economic feasibility should be made.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Senator himself understand and intend that this measure, as he now has it formulated, does not commit the Government of the United States to the construction of this project?

Mr. DILL. It certainly does not commit the Government to the construction. That will be determined only after a report has been had from the Secretary of the Interior as to whether it is economically feasible.

Mr. PHIPPS. Then why put the cart before the horse and adopt it now? Why adopt it in advance? The Senator is well aware of the moneys that have been expended on the project.

Large amounts have been expended, not only by the Federal Government, but by the States and by individuals. I voted for the Federal appropriation. As I said, I am willing to vote for more. I am willing to authorize now any amount that may be determined upon as necessary to determine definitely and finally whether or not the project is economically feasible and practicable and desirable.

Mr. President, I feel that in approving the bill as rewritten by the Senator from Washington we are committing a blunder and incurring a moral obligation on the part of the Government of the United States to proceed with the project.

Mr. DILL. The Senator knows we have adopted other projects which were not ready to build, but which we meant to build. The adoption of the project in this language means that the studies from now on will be made with a view to the economic feasibility of the entire project and not piecemeal reports such as have been made in the past.

Mr. PHIPPS. The manner in which the investigation should be conducted would not vary one iota on either basis. It would be identically the same. The reports and recommendations would have to come to the bureau, be passed on by the department, and the department in turn recommend to Congress that appropriations be made, and the appropriations would then be made. There is not one bit of difference whatever involved in the manner of handling the appropriations. The authorization is one thing and the appropriation is another, but there is a vast difference between authorizing an investigation and providing the appropriations for it, and the adoption of a project. I hope the Senate will not agree to the passage of the bill in its present form.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay a vote on the matter. I think the Senators from Washington are entitled to have a vote on it. I have no objection to one more investigation of the matter. I know absolutely nothing about the project except from the literature furnished by the boosters. I have never heard a knock on it anywhere along the whole line. The proponents of the bill claim for it that it has a six-months growing season, that it will raise staple farm products, and that it can be put in for $157 an acre. Am I correct?

Mr. DILL. About that amount.

Mr. NORBECK. Our experience, where we have to agree on these reclamation projects, has been that they have cost from two to three times what the engineers have estimated them to cost. But, assuming that the figures are right, that the booster literature which has gone out is correct, it will cost more to put water on that land than we can buy Iowa land for. It will raise the same crops, because it is in a higher altitude than other sections where other projects are located. Washington is fortunate in many respects. All other reclamation projects are not so fortunate. I think they have a remarkable record, but so far as I know they are all at a lower altitude and all produce other kinds of crops than this land is intended to produce.

Mr. JONES. The Senator is mistaken with reference to the altitude of these lands. Generally these are much lower than any other reclamation projects.

Mr. NORBECK. I am speaking of the reclamation projects in the State of Washington. This altitude is given at about 1,550 feet.

Mr. JONES. No; the altitude is about 350 or 400 feet up to 1,750 feet.

Mr. NORBECK. What is the altitude at Yakima? These are higher than any other projects in the State of Washington, are they not?

Mr. JONES. Oh, no. The Yakima project ranges from about 350 to 900 feet.

Mr. NORBECK. And this runs to about 1,500?

Mr. JONES. This runs from about 350 feet to about 1,500.

Mr. NORBECK. But a large part of it lies in the higher altitude.

Mr. JONES. No; the Senator is mistaken. The greater part is in the lower altitude.

Mr. NORBECK. I only have the booster pamphlets for it.

Mr. JONES. The Senator has not read them quite right, then.

Mr. NORBECK. I have no objection to getting a vote on the proposition providing for further investigation. I want to vote for it with my eyes open, but I do share the fear of some that it will lead to agricultural overproduction. It will take a long time to get the project under water.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I have voted for many reclamation projects in the West. I have voted for them without any hesitation. The Senators from the West were recently telling us that they must have an appropriation of $100,000,000 to take care of surplus crops. The Government has lost $25,000,000 on these reclamation projects already.

Lands in the United States, in the Middle West, the West, South, and North can be bought for less than it takes to put water on these lands. It seems to me the Senators ought to be satisfied to amend the bill so as to provide merely for a survey.

Congress has appropriated $3,000,000 or more for a survey of all the rivers in the United States, and the Columbia River is one of them. I am sure that the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], chairman of the Committee on Commerce, will see that that river gets attention, and he will have the assistance of the able junior Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL]. I hope the Senator will amend the bill, and not, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] suggested, put the cart before the horse. I want to do anything I can to help him in any matter in which he is interested, but he is asking a thing that he ought not to call upon the Congress to do.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I want to say with reference to the Senator's suggestion that we are asking Congress to authorize an appropriation for the building of this project contemplating more than it would ever pay back, that we believe the effective way to have the investigation of this great project is to have it done as a project, adopted by the Government. That does not commit the Government to building the project, but it does commit the Reclamation Bureau to the study of the project as a whole.

The Senator from Georgia mentioned the fact that the West has received much money for reclamation, and it is true that it has. The South has just received great consideration at the hands of Congress, and I am glad that it has.

Mr. HARRIS. But not in the same proportion. Senators from the West can ask for $10,000,000 and get it more easily than we can get $100,000 down in my section of the country. I do not say that in any unkind spirit, but the facts will prove it.

Mr. DILL. I do not want to get into an argument, but I must remind the Senator that the flood control bill carried $325,000,000, none of which will ever be repaid. I do not say that in any spirit of criticism. I am glad it was appropriated for the purpose. We are asking only $300,000 or $400,000 at most to build this project that some day the country will badly need. Twenty-five or thirty years from now this land will be badly needed. I can say to those who have any fear of over-agricultural production that it will be many years before there is any production on this land, because it is such an immense project that there is no possibility of it being done within a reasonable time.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I think I can shorten proceedings, if the Senator will allow me. May I ask if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington is the amendment before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. PHIPPS. Is it now in order for me to offer a substitute for the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. PHIPPS. I send to the desk an amendment in the form of a substitute, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado offers an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington, in the form of a substitute, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, line 7, after the word "be," it is proposed to strike out down to and including the word "made," in line 6, page 2, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

investigated as to feasibility and cost, including the extent of the irrigable land, with a classification of soils of that area, measurements and sources of the water supply and determination of the cost of works for storage and distribution, working out plans for settlement and farm development, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of the Interior to determine the economic feasibility of this project.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. DILL. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that we are presented with a question here that ought to be seriously considered by Senators coming from localities in the country where it is necessary, either in whole or in part, to irrigate land and which have had the benefits of the Reclamation Service. I would not want to block anything that the Senators from Washington desire; I would be willing to resolve the doubt in their favor; but I want to speak particularly to Senators who come from localities where the Reclamation Service operates.

We can not afford to ask Congress to do something involving an expenditure of the public money of the United States or of the reclamation fund that will afterwards bring discredit upon the Reclamation Service. It seems to me, Mr. President, that there is such doubt about this proposed project that before we legally adopt it as a reclamation project we ought fully to investigate it and be fully advised as to it. It is already stated that it is conceded by the engineers that it is going to cost from $150 to $157 an acre to put water on this land. That ought to make us pause and consider. It may be that it will be found on investigation that that estimate is proper and that the work should be done, but that is going, in my judgment, about the limit. It is a question of whether land in that locality will be able to pay itself out if we have to expend $157 an acre to put water on it, besides the annual cost of keeping up the project, which will amount to something in addition to that.

I should not have any objection to an investigation to see whether we should adopt this as a project, but I can not for the life of me understand why it is necessary to put in the statute the direct language that "it is hereby adopted as a reclamation project," when all concede that there is some doubt as to whether it is going to be practicable or impracticable. We go far enough, it seems to me, if we authorize an appropriation to make the necessary investigation. I believe that Senators from reclamation States ought to be careful that they do not overstep the bounds and have Congress do something out of favor to us that we may regret in the future. I myself can not understand why everything that could be expected would not be accomplished if we should withhold any action as to the formal adoption of this as a project until the necessary investigation shall have been made.

As I understand, even the Senators from the State of Washington are unable to say now that there is going to be a favorable report when a full investigation shall have been made. Why not make the full investigation?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The Senator from Nebraska says that we are unable to say whether there is going to be a favorable report on this project. Of course, we can not forecast the report, but we can say that every report up to this time has been favorable. As to the analysis of soil, as to the details of the report as to the economic feasibility of the project, as required by the Department of the Interior, of course, nobody can forecast that, but we have every reason to believe that the report will be favorable, and if it shall not be favorable, then, of course, the project never will be constructed. I remind the Senator, however, that projects are adopted regularly by the Government which can not be built until further investigation and the department shall declare them economically feasible.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be; I may be wrong about it; but I want to ask the Senator why can not everything be accomplished that he wants to accomplish if he will amend the bill so that we shall not formally adopt the project, but shall authorize a sufficient appropriation to make the investigation? I think I was warranted from the Senator's own language in stating that he can not now tell until all these investigations shall have been made whether the project will be feasible. I hear it said that it is going to be a very expensive proposition.

Mr. DILL. There is this point, which I tried to explain a moment ago, that if the investigations are made under an adoption clause they will be made with a view to a final report; but if they be made by a piecemeal appropriation we shall only get a report at the end of each session of Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. But we can easily arrange that, it seems to me, by the language of the proposed statute. Let the bill provide, if the Senator desires, that the entire proposition shall be investigated and a complete report submitted on it, but do not bind us by law to accept this as a reclamation project until then. How would the project be injured should the bill be amended in that way? What would be the difference according to the Senator's own viewpoint? Where would the Senator begin if we did that?

Mr. DILL. The project would then be looked upon as a project as to which it was not yet determined whether it would be a Federal project or not. If this project is ever built at all, it must be built as a Federal project.

Mr. NORRIS. I am perfectly willing, as far as I am concerned, to have the Government make that full investigation, but it is conceded we are not qualified now to invite settlers up there.

Mr. DILL. We can not invite settlers onto any project until it has been declared economically feasible, even though the Government has recognized it as a Federal project.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the difference, according to the Senator's idea, whether we formally say this is a Federal project, or whether we say we will investigate now before we make that declaration? It does not hurt it any to leave it that way. If it can be determined that it is easily feasible, an investigation will bring that out. We have to have that, any way.

Mr. DILL. I suggest to the Senator that the department engineers have already declared it a feasible project, but no action has ever been taken to recognize it as such, and if we refuse to recognize this project at all until it is recognized as economically feasible, we will be taking a different course from any we have taken with other Federal projects.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the Senator himself to say that he does not know whether it is economically feasible or not.

Mr. DILL. No; nor do we know that of some other Federal projects which have already been adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not looked into all of them, but it may be that we have committed errors in the past. As much as I am in favor of irrigation—I am not afraid of irrigating any piece of land where the project is decided to be a feasible one, and will vote for it almost without limit—I do not want, for the sake of the Reclamation Service itself, to take a step that may get us into disrepute not only with the country, but with Congress. I am afraid we might lose some of the respect of the country if we should ask the Government of the United States to declare this as a feasible project, and it might be determined in the end that it is not. If there were anything to be lost, if there were any possibility of losing anything, there might be some argument in putting this in, but I have not heard one word from anybody that, to my mind, gives any excuse for making this declaration now.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of reading an extract from the report of the Secretary of the Interior on this project?

Mr. NORRIS. I am through.

Mr. PHIPPS. I do not want to take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. I can get the floor again if I want it.

Mr. PHIPPS. I want the Senator to hear this. This is from a copy of a letter addressed to me as chairman of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation; and at this point I want to say that, as chairman of that committee, I feel I would be assuming an undue responsibility if I allowed this measure in its present form to become a law. In this letter the Secretary said:

> I have your request for report on S. 1462, "A bill for the adoption of the Columbia Basin reclamation project, and for other purposes," for which the bill proposes to authorize the necessary funds from the General Treasury.
> The importance of this project to the Nation would make advisable a complete investigation of feasibility and cost extending over several years. This should include the extent of the irrigable area with a classification of soils of that area, measurements of the water supply and determination of the cost of works for storage and distribution, working out plans for settlement and farm development. All this information would be necessary in order to make a final and safe determination of feasibility as a prerequisite to recommending authorization of the project.
> I am, therefore, unable to recommend favorable consideration of the bill in its present form, but would recommend a reasonable appropriation to further and complete our investigations to determine feasibility.

With that information comes this:

> The last report made by a board of engineers gives the following information regarding cost, area, and engineering feasibility, which, of course, would be subject to correction as a result of more complete and recent investigations, if the department should be authorized by Congress to make a further survey:

Total area of Columbia Basin project	acres	1,224,000
Probable total cost		$197,895,595
Probable per acre cost of construction		$157

Mr. President, I do not think any member of the committee is a stronger friend of this project than I am, but I am not convinced that the time has arrived when Congress can properly adopt it as a reclamation project. I feel that the amendment I have submitted as a substitute would meet all the requirements, fill every condition that should reasonably be expected, and would enable the people to go ahead so that this work could be carried to a conclusion, to the point, at least, where the Government could determine whether or not it was feasible.

RECESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 10.30 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement previously entered into, the Senate will stand in recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Thereupon, at 10.30 o'clock p. m., the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, May 11, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 10 (legislative day of May 3), 1928

UNITED STATES COAST GUARD

The following-named cadets in the Coast Guard of the United States, to rank as such from May 15, 1928:

To be ensigns

Watson A. Burton.
Walter C. Capron.
Dale T. Carroll.
Samuel F. Gray.
Wilbur C. Hogan.
Kenneth P. Maley.
Leon H. Morine.
Carl B. Olsen.
Earl K. Rhodes.
Thomas M. Rommel.

These young men will have satisfactorily completed the course of instruction for cadets at the Coast Guard Academy, have passed the prescribed physical examination, and have served as cadets the time required by law.

JUDGE OF THE MUNICIPAL COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Robert E. Mattingly, of the District of Columbia, to be judge of the municipal court, District of Columbia. (A reappointment, his term having expired.)

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Lewis L. Drill, of Minnesota, to be United States attorney, district of Minnesota, vice Lafayette French, jr., resigned.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY

FINANCE DEPARTMENT

First Lieut. William Thomas Johnson, Infantry (detailed in Finance Department), with rank from July 1, 1920.

First Lieut. Earle Everette Cox, Cavalry (detailed in Finance Department), with rank from January 1, 1925.

INFANTRY

Maj. Irving Joseph Phillipson, Adjutant General's Department, with rank from July 1, 1920.

AIR CORPS

Second Lieut. Joe L. Loutzenheiser, Cavalry (detailed in Air Corps), with rank from June 12, 1924.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

To be lieutenant colonel

Maj. Joseph Warren Stilwell, Infantry, from May 6, 1928.

To be major

Capt. Jay Drake Billings Lattin, Signal Corps, from May 6, 1928.

To be captain

First Lieut. Allen Ferdinand Grum, Ordnance Department, from May 6, 1928.

To be first lieutenant

Second Lieut. Bernard Aye Tormey, Field Artillery, from May 6, 1928.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 10 (legislative date of May 3), 1928

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY

To be lieutenant commander

Benjamin F. Staud.

To be lieutenant

Carl H. Reynolds, jr.

To be chaplains

William H. Rafferty.
John E. Johnson.
Joseph E. McNanamy.
Homer G. Glunt.
Edward J. Robbins.
Charles A. Dittmar.
Emerson G. Hangen.

To be chief boatswain

George P. Childs.

To be chief pay clerks

Andrew E. King.
Rufus Hendon.
Fred Robinson.
Chester W. Utterback.
Wilburn Bates.

To be ensigns

Thomas A. Ahroon.
Alfred M. Aichel.
John C. Alderman.
Stephen H. Ambruster.
Paul R. Anderson.
Robert J. Archer.
Carl R. Armbrust.
Theodore F. Ascherfeld.
Thomas Ashcraft.
Michael P. Bagdanovich.
Alan B. Banister.
Richard N. Belden.
Irwin F. Beyerly.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, May 10, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art all in all, Thou art such a merciful Father, for height nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God. O give us an outburst of faith with the assurance that nothing can defeat divine care and divine compassion; we shall wonder then at the richness of life that shall come to us. Chasten all desire and graciously help us to know ourselves and Thy purpose concerning us. Give us wise views of the needs of our country and renew our strength and hope in all good things. Continue, blessed Lord, to establish us in all those virtues and in the love of that truth as taught by the Teacher of Nazareth. In His blessed name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

IMMIGRATION

Mr. CARLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted me, I want to call the attention of the House to the very meritorious provisions of H. R. 12816, entitled:

A bill relating to immigration of certain relatives of United States citizens and aliens lawfully admitted to the United States.

This bill has been favorably reported from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and is now on the House Calendar. Its purpose is to remove some of the hardships now imposed under the present immigration quota law, which in its strict application has practically severed many family ties.

The population of the eighth congressional district of New York, which I have the honor to represent, is composed to a very large extent of foreign-born citizens, their American-born children, and resident aliens.

Since being elected by the people of the eighth congressional district of Brooklyn, N. Y., to represent them in Washington there have been called to my attention many pitiful and deserving cases.

Hardships and family separations caused by the strict enforcement of the immigration law are so frequently found and called to my attention that I am in favor of amending the present law and humanely modifying many of its provisions.

I heartily agree with the report of the committee and favor the early passage of the bill.

This bill would permit the entry, outside of quota limitations, of the wives of United States citizens, the husbands of United States citizens, and the children, under 21 years of age, of United States citizens.

The present law does not give a nonquota status to the husbands of citizens or the children between the ages of 18 and 21 years of citizens.

This bill also gives a certain preference status, within the quota allowances, to the unmarried children under 21 years of age, the wives, and the husbands of aliens already lawfully admitted to the United States and permanently resident here.

I would urge greater leniency than would be accorded under the terms of this bill. I would not set any age limit upon the children of United States citizens, for so long as either parent was a citizen I would admit their unmarried children irrespective of age. In fact, I would even go further; I would give a nonquota status to those minor children living abroad of aliens who have been legally admitted to the United States and who have filed their declarations of intention to become American citizens.

In many instances immigrants legally in the United States, some of them having filed their declarations of intention to become citizens, have appealed to me to assist in bringing their minor children here to join the family group in their established home. The only answer I could give those people was that their children would have to make application in the regular way at the American consulates abroad and come under the quota allowance, which, in most instances, on account of the small quota allowance, meant a wait of long and weary years.

I would be in favor of further amending the immigration laws so as to give the Secretary of Labor, or some officer designated by him, certain discretionary powers to meet unusual emergencies which can not otherwise be properly met on account of the strict interpretation of immigration law.

I have particularly in mind two pathetic cases in which discretion, if it were authorized, would have relieved a very distressing situation.

The first which came to my notice when I assumed office was the case of an alien widow who, with her infant child, came to this country on a visit to near relatives. While here on a visitor's visa this alien mother was taken ill and died. Under the technical interpretation of the quota immigration law the motherless infant could not remain here with its blood relatives but was compelled to return to its native land, the same as an adult alien.

Within the past few days an appeal was made to me by a young woman, a naturalized citizen, to procure permission to bring her infant sister to live with her, the widowed mother having died, leaving this little sister alone. Under the present law there was no provision whereby this child could be admitted to the United States, even temporarily, as she was under the age that she might be admitted for educational purposes.

I can not believe that anyone, not even the strongest advocate of total restriction of immigration, in circumstances as in the cases cited, would or could object to a provision in the immigration law that would give to the proper officials some discretionary powers to take care of such an emergency.

The adoption of the amendments suggested would not seriously affect the quota provisions of the present law; it would be merely granting to our own adopted citizens the benefit of humane provisions and common-sense interpretation of the quota law.

In conclusion, I sincerely hope that before adjournment of the Seventieth Congress some remedial and humane legislatiou will be enacted so that the many hardships now imposed under the quota immigration law will be partially, at least, eliminated.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of Muscle Shoals legislation and to include certain figures with reference to the cost of electricity.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of Muscle Shoals legislation and to include certain figures in regard to the cost of electricity. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, after almost a decade of strife and controversy, during which resources worth millions have been permitted to lie idle, it seems that the Muscle Shoals question is about to be settled. Begun originally as a war measure under the national defense act of June 3, 1916, completion of the great project has been delayed by at least 10 years while selfish, profit-seeking private interests have sought to obtain possession of the work already completed so that they might amass new fortunes at the expense of the consumer, and through their tactics have obstructed the passage of requisite legislation. I refer to the Power Trust and the fertilizer interests, who have been responsible for withholding undoubted benefits of great magnitude from the public these many years.

If the measure becomes a law as approved by both Houses there will be three chief ways in which the Nation will benefit. First, through the production and sale of power at a rate much cheaper than that extorted from the consumer by the electric-power interests; second, by the efficient and therefore much less costly production of fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients on an experimental basis; and third, by the opening of more than 400 miles of the Tennessee River to navigation and the control of its waters in time of danger from flood.

Originally this immense project was planned for the production of nitrates to be used in the manufacture of explosives needed in unprecedented quantities for the carrying on of the World War. An idea of the growing need of nitrates for this purpose may be gained from the fact that more explosives are used in one demonstration of modern bombing practice than were expended by both armies in the Battle of Gettysburg. Before entering the World War we were absolutely dependent upon foreign countries for our supply of nitrates, and Chile, our chief source, was uncertain at best. If this source had been cut off there is no telling what disastrous effect might have been the result.

As it is, millions of dollars are spent annually for nitrates in this country, both for fertilizer and for explosives. At the time of its erection the Muscle Shoals plant was modern in every respect and one of the best of its kind in the world. Since that time, however, great strides have been made in the cheaper and more efficient production of nitrates, and the new methods that have been developed necessitate improvements in the plant as it now stands. To the original cost of the work already carried out—approximately $150,000,000—we must now add $37,000,000 for the construction of another dam at Cove Creek and about $33,000,000 for altering and modernizing the present plant. The erection of a dam at Cove Creek will serve the double purpose of flood control and will increase the output of power from the combined sources 300 per cent, so that the power development will be in the neighborhood of 300,000 horsepower.

While the primary purpose of the development was the production of nitrates, the immense masses of water held in leash by the great dams at Muscle Shoals are capable of generating a considerable surplus of power over and above that needed to run the nitrate plants. What use shall be made of this power? Is it to be allowed to fall into the hands of private interests who would use it to mulct the people out of every possible dollar, or shall it be developed and distributed by a Government corporation at a fair price?

Volumes of propaganda have been spread over the country forecasting ruin to private interests if the Government should take over Muscle Shoals and thereby enter into competition with the power and fertilizer interests. According to these tales, want and deprivation will be the share of thousands of owners of power stocks if power prices are lowered through Government operation of the plants in question. Senator NORRIS, the champion of the present Muscle Shoals legislation, has very ably portrayed the results of Government control by graphic illustrations from Ontario, Canada, where power is furnished at cost by a publicly owned corporation.

One of the cases cited is that of the wife of a laboring man, a Mrs. Cullom, of Toronto, living in a modest home of eight rooms. Notwithstanding the small size of her household, this woman used 334 kilowatt-hours of electricity in one month, an amount startling to every American citizen. The average consumption in an eight-room home in the United States is less than one-fifth of that amount. Now let us compare the bill Mrs. Cullom received for that month with that of a consumer in our own country, as shown by Senator NORRIS. Her light and power bill for the 334 kilowatt-hours she had used was $3.55. Had she lived in Washington, her bill for the same amount would have been $23.18; in Birmingham, Ala., she would have had to pay more than $32; and if she had lived in some of the towns in Florida, her bill would have been more than $60.

During the past year, Senator NORRIS says in his address, domestic consumers of electricity in the United States paid an average of 7½ cents per kilowatt-hour, while Ontarians were paying 1.85 cents. Profiting by the low rate, Mrs. Cullom is able to use nearly every electrical appliance known to science to lighten her labors. Electric sweepers, irons, kitchen ranges, heaters, washing machines, and twice as many lights as are customary with people of like circumstances in this country are within the means of almost everyone in Ontario, but who can afford such conveniences with the exorbitant power rates in force here?

Another instance of the benefits of cheap power is presented by Mr. NORRIS in the case of an Ontario farmer. I quote from the address of the honorable Senator from Nebraska:

> I have before me a photograph of the farm home of Mr. B. L. Siple, a Canadian citizen who lives in Ontario. He has 79 acres in his farm, and at the time I visited him he was milking 17 cows by electricity. He filled his silo by electricity. He ground his feed by electricity. He pumped the water by electricity. Every cow in her stall had a bucket of water within her reach. When she drank the water in the bucket it was automatically refilled. Mr. Siple's barn could be lighted throughout by the pushing of a button. The house was a beautiful modern cottage, the equal of any in our cities in America. There was running water in the kitchen and in the bathroom. Mrs. Siple cooked the year around on an electric stove. She had an electric fan in the kitchen. She washed her dishes in water that she heated by electricity. The bathroom was supplied with water heated by electricity. In fact, she had practically all of the modern electrical conveniences known to science to-day.
> The installation on this farm of electricity had practically saved Mr. Siple the expense of one hired man and it saved his wife the expense of a hired girl. He paid for the entire facilities for the year in which I visited him $115.49. Like the city man, he paid an amortization fee, and also included in this bill an item which in 30 years will pay off the entire capital stock, including the construction of the transmission lines.

To quote Senator NORRIS still further:

> And it must be remembered that in all the Canadian rates I have given there is included an amortization fee. That is, there is included in the prices a fee which in 30 years will pay off the entire invested capital. So that the rates are not only paying interest on the money invested in the development, not only paying for the expense of operation and depreciation, but they are likewise paying a fee that in 30 years will leave them with nothing to pay except the expense of maintenance and operation.

In view of these facts does it look as though the American Power Trust were operating on a philanthropic basis and due to suffer greater losses if their rates were forced down by Government competition? Are not the American people entitled to profit by resources owned by themselves as well as are the people of Ontario?

And, without a doubt, Government operation of the power plants at Muscle Shoals will have a far-reaching effect in reducing power rates. The power emanating from this plant will be placed, first, at the disposal of the States, counties, and municipalities, and any surplus that remains will be sold to distributors who desire it. It will be the part of the Government corporation to see that the power is resold at a fair rate, and the rates thus set will serve as a basis throughout the country in the near future, it is to be hoped.

The power problem is but a single aspect of the Muscle Shoals question. The plants there will assure the country of a permanent nitrate supply within its own borders, and in case of war will result in immense savings. In times of peace these nitrates will be available for the manufacture of fertilizer at much lower prices than the imported product. Fertilizer interests have opposed Government operation on grounds similar to those presented by the Power Trust, claiming that they would have to shut down their plants if the Government were to go into the business. As a matter of fact, their arguments are contradictory. They claimed, on the one hand, that the Government could not distribute fertilizer at a profit beyond a very restricted radius, due to the high transportation cost, and, on the other, that they could not hope to compete with Government prices. As it is provided in the present bill that fertilizer shall be produced on an experimental basis only, the fertilizer interests themselves will derive great advantage.

If the Muscle Shoals bill becomes a law, the Government corporation will have at its disposal any documents in the United States Patent Bureau, and thus will be able to carry on experiments looking toward the cheapest and most efficient production of fertilizer, a procedure admittedly far beyond the means of most private manufacturers. The results of these experiments would be passed on to the private manufacturers and naturally would be of great benefit to them. Furthermore, the nitrates produced at Muscle Shoals will be sold to the manufacturers, who now have immense freight bills to pay on the waste matter that comprises more than 80 per cent of the product imported from abroad. The nitrate content of the product mined in Chile, it has been pointed out, is seldom more than 16 per cent, the remainder being filler. Thus the production of cheaper nitrates and experimentation in fertilizer manufacture will be of untold benefit both to the private manufacturer and to the farmer. The importance of commercial fertilizer in agriculture is constantly growing. This fact may be better appreciated when it is understood that its production has been the study of scientists for the past 25 years, during which period great strides have been made.

As to the standpoint of navigation and flood control on the Tennessee River, more than 400 miles of water navigation will be thrown open by completion of the Muscle Shoals project and the construction of the dam at Cove Creek. The great dams would serve to eliminate most of the danger of floods in the Mississippi Basin and thus would be directly in line with recent flood-control legislation.

WILLIAM LADD AND THE AMERICAN PEACE SOCIETY

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I very much dislike to object, we have agreed on to-day for the consideration of the emergency officers' bill and there are to be five hours of general debate, so I dislike to let in extraneous matters. I wish the gentleman would wait until Saturday.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. I will say to the gentleman that I am a man of few words.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that, and this is a very embarrassing position for me to take.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. The matter I intend to speak about concerns this day, and if I wait until a later day the occasion will have passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON of Maine. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House: The thoughts of lovers of peace the world over are turned this morning to the city of Cleveland, Ohio, where there is now in session a World Conference on International Justice, attended by some of the outstanding world statesmen of the present day, and promising much for the promotion of a better understanding among nations. This conference has been arranged as a part of the contennial anniversary celebration of the American Peace Society, founded on May 8, 1828, by William Ladd, of Minot, Me. This peace society, the first of its kind in the United States—patriotic in the truest sense, standing always for adequate national defense, yet seeking always world peace through reason and justice—has been now for 100 years one of the world's greatest forces for right thinking along international lines, and to it humanity owes a very generous debt of gratitude.

The president of this society to-day is our distinguished colleague, the Hon. THEODORE E. BURTON, of Ohio, whose eloquent utterances on the floor of this House in behalf of world tolerance, world understanding, world sympathy and justice, have repeatedly won our love, challenged our admiration, and compelled our respect. [Applause.] May God spare this man of magnanimity and vision to many years of useful service. [Applause.] We need such men as he in this House; for long ago it was written, "Where there is no vision the people perish."

This day commemorates not only the hundredth anniversary of the founding of the American Peace Society, but it commemorates also the birth, 150 years ago today, of William Ladd, the founder of that society. And because this man spent the greater part of his useful life on one of the thousand beautiful hillsides of my native State, in the little village of Minot, because he also was a man of vision, and there dreamed the golden dream of world peace, and there wrought the labors that won for him the title which still graces his name, "The apostle of peace"; because the people of my State honor his memory, as it is honored by the world in Cleveland to-day; and because the problem that he sought to solve is the greatest problem that now challenges the effort of the Christian world, I crave your brief indulgences this morning, that I may say just a word as to the life and labors of this man.

William Ladd was a simple toiler on a Maine farm, yet he was a great man. He was great because he contributed largely to the ideals of mankind and because he gave to the service of those ideals all that he had. I may not review here the story of his earlier life. Suffice to say that he was 41 years of age when he received from the Rev. Jesse Appleton, president of Bowdoin College, then on his deathbed, the inspiration and urge to world-peace work. The remainder of his life, some 33 years, were devoted unceasingly to this cause. In it he spared neither his health nor his fortune. Ten years later he gathered together the various peace societies of the United States into one great organization, the American Peace Society, the hundredth anniversary of which is now being celebrated.

In thought William Ladd was far in advance of his time. As early as 1831 he conceived the idea of an international congress and a high court of nations. In his writings and in his speeches he simply sought to extend the principles of the American Constitution and our Supreme Court so that they might apply to nations as well as to States. His entire physical strength was spent in advancing these ideas, in the press and from the lecture platform and the pulpit. In the last years of his life, health failing him, unable to stand, he often addressed large audiences from his knees. On his return home from one of these speaking trips, exhausted, he died, and on his tomb are inscribed these words:

> Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God.

It was one hundred years ago that this man lived and worked and gave his life in the service of a great ideal, inspired by the vision of a better world, in which reason and justice should be substituted for violence in the affairs of nations. His was a voice crying in the wilderness. To the then world at large Ladd was simply a dreamer of pious dreams, a visionary, an idealist seeking Utopia. William Ladd may have been a dreamer, but he was more than a dreamer. His was a vision that pierced the future, a faith founded on the teachings of the Man of Galilee, and his a courage and a determination that enabled him to play a man's part in making his vision a thing of reality and substance.

> He who has a vision
> Sees more than you and I;
> He who dreams the golden dream
> Lives fourfold thereby;
> Time may laugh, worlds may scoff,
> And hosts assail his thought,
> But the visionary came, ere the builder wrought.
> Ere the tower bestrode the dome,
> Ere the dome the arch,
> He, the dreamer of the dream,
> Saw the vision march.

The vision that William Ladd saw a century ago is slowly but surely coming to fulfillment. The idea which he gave to the world still lives, and grows greater and more sublime, as men of the present day seek peace under his benign and simple doctrine. Outlawry of war may no longer be classed as the pathetic fancy of the impractical idealist. War is being outlawed to-day, and the area of its banishment is continually widening. Year by year the specter of war is passing more and more into the background, and the day draws near when the great conflicts of the world shall be not those of nation against nation but those of all the peoples of the earth combined against ignorance, poverty, disease, and crime, the four great enemies of mankind. The task to which William Ladd set his hand a century ago is ours to-day, and no longer impossible of accomplishment.

Thomas Nelson Page, who has the power at times to clothe truth in the garments of imagination, once said:

> God, with His mighty wind, has shaken his hand over the river, and men are beginning to go dry-shod on the places where once there was no passage.

Nineteen centuries failed to give us an international Christianity, an international desire and effort for world peace. We would not listen to the still, small voice of conscience, so God spoke to us out of the whirlwind of war. Out of that war, refined by its fires, has come a new world conscience, a world desire for peace, a world consecration to the obligations of our present-day civilization. God has, indeed, shaken His hand over the river, and we may if we will, if we have the faith and the vision and the courage, walk dry-shod on the places where once there was no passage. [Prolonged applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a short editorial from the Chicago Tribune and one letter relative to the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill, which we will soon take up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial and letter with regard to the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I shall have to object, Mr. Speaker.

THE ROMANCE OF PUBLIC HEALTH

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on public health and sanitation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, it is refreshing to note that the Congress of the United States within the past few weeks has paused in its consideration of routine legislation and has given thought to the health of the Nation and the world.

Two bills recently passed by the House and Senate dealing with important matters relating to scientific studies and the public health serve to remind us of the striking advances that have been made in the sanitary sciences within the past few decades.

The development of modern science has been a triumphant march. It is a matter of great pride that medicine has kept abreast of the advancement made in all other branches of science. Gratifying progress has been made in internal medicine, surgery, pathology; in fact, in all branches of medicine. It is of interest to note that preventive medicine, hygiene, and public health laws have also kept apace with the growth of knowledge.

H. R. 8128, a bill to authorize a permanent annual appropriation for the maintenance and operation of the Gorgas Memorial Laboratory in Panama, which has been passed by the House, is one of the important bills to which I refer. This laboratory is intended to be a permanent memorial to Dr. William Crawford Gorgas, former Surgeon General of the United States Army.

It is fitting that such a memorial be established in Panama, where General Gorgas demonstrated the most striking application of the principles of modern sanitation that has been made within recent years.

The Panama Canal could not have been constructed, and the American efforts would have failed had it not been for the success of General Gorgas in conducting the sanitary and health work of the Isthmus.

The field of tropical and medical research is large, and the needs involved are great. The present research facilities are limited, and it appears that there is no likelihood of the completion of this work for a great many years to come. The studies in tropical diseases have scarcely been touched in comparison with what is needed.

SANITATION AN ANCIENT SCIENCE

Such great strides have been made in public health, preventive medicine, and hygiene within the past few decades that many persons regard sanitary science as of modern origin. This is not the case. In the history of early peoples we almost invariably find that the health of the population was a subject of serious consideration and legislation.

The Egyptians filtered the muddy water of the Nile at an early date. They gave special attention to their food and to child welfare. They recognized the danger of floods to health and resorted to preventive measures. Joseph's Well, near Gizeh, was excavated through 300 feet of solid rock and was an object lesson in obtaining pure water. Reservoirs were common in ancient times. The Chinese for thousands of years have used alum in the clarification of muddy waters.

The Bible reveals that Moses proposed and enforced many excellent sanitary measures. The Mosaic laws contain specific directions for personal cleanliness, the purification of dwellings and camps, the selection of healthful and the avoidance of unhealthful food, the isolation of persons with contagious diseases and various other points bearing on the welfare of the race. The inhabitants of old India also gave attention to their food, habitations, games, exercises, and the isolation of children in the case of infectious diseases.

The wonderful physical development of the ancient Greeks is well known. The Romans were among the first peoples to recognize the value of ventilation and to provide for a good supply of fresh air. They brought fresh water from the mountains and provided underground drains for the disposal of sewage. Amongst their military operations the Romans found time to construct the Cloaca Maxima, some 2,400 years ago, which not only served for the removal of refuse, but also helped to drain bogs and marshes. It constitutes the principal sewer of modern Rome. Aqueducts were constructed to cover miles of the surrounding plains. Their remains, many of which have been restored, are now used for their original purpose. At one time there were 14 large and 20 small aqueducts bringing water to Rome, some of which carried the water from a distance of more than 50 miles. During the reign of Tiberius and Nero, the per capita supply of water was over 1,400 liters a day. It is a matter of historical record that between 400 B. C. and 180 A. D., about 800 public baths were installed among the "thermæ carcallæ," which accommodated 3,000 bathers at one time. These things evidence the munificence and abundance with which the first of sanitary requisites were supplied to Rome.

CHOLERA WIDESPREAD

In the thirties, forties, fifties, and sixties of the last century cholera was by no means unusual in many places in the United States. Congress passed special legislation relative to outbreaks of cholera in 1832 and in 1866.

More than 50,000 persons died of cholera in 1831–32 in 18 cities of Europe. In Hungary during this same epidemic, 1 person out of every 46 died of this disease. In Montreal the rate was given as 1 person out of every 20; in New York, 1 person out of every 100; and in Albany, 1 out of 77. As late as 1873 cholera was epidemic in several of our States.

Prior to the Civil War yellow fever was so common throughout the South, particularly in New Orleans, Galveston, Mobile, Key West, Pensacola, and Charleston, S. C., that some writers spoke of these places as endemic centers. Philadelphia, Baltimore, New York, and other cities suffered epidemics of yellow fever. In fact, no less than 90 epidemics of yellow fever have made their appearance in the United States at different times.

DISCOVERIES OF PASTEUR

Modern public health may be said to date from the discoveries of Louis Pasteur, a great French scientist. His work was largely in the field of bacteriology and was carried on from about 1857 to 1885. Pasteur's work successfully disproved the belief, which was almost universal at that time, that putrefaction, fermentation, and similar processes were the result of what was spoken of as the "spontaneous generation" of lower forms of life; that is, that such forms could originate de novo from inanimate matter. The work done by Pasteur included the discovery that certain diseases in both man and some of the lower animals were due to the growth and multiplication of microscopic disease-producing plants, which are ordinarily spoken of as bacteria.

It was not until the late eighties of the past century, however, that the leaders of medical science either in Europe or in America generally accepted the demonstrations and existence and the pathologic significance in health or disease of the bacteriological discoveries of Pasteur.

DOCTOR JENNER AND THE MILKMAID

It should be recalled that the demonstration of the value of vaccination against smallpox by Edward Jenner about the year 1798, was the first notable victory of modern times over disease and pestilence. Until that time smallpox reaped a large harvest of lives every year, and was as common as measles is at the present time. Jenner's demonstration antedated the work of Pasteur by about three-quarters of a century.

In order to appreciate the importance of the discovery and use of vaccination against smallpox it is of interest to know something of the historical development of this important contribution to the prevention of disease.

At one time smallpox was the most common and the most dreaded disease in the world. Before the days of vaccination only 5 or 10 people out of every 100 escaped smallpox, and of those who contracted the disease about one person out of every four died. Many of those who recovered were scarred, maimed, or even blinded for life. The disease was so feared, and people were so sure that they would get it, that many of them had themselves inoculated with smallpox so as to have it and get through with it. Many of those who were thus voluntarily inoculated with smallpox died, but the death rate among the inoculated was much less than among those who contracted the disease in other ways.

While a medical student Edward Jenner learned from a milkmaid that persons who had been inoculated with cowpox were not subject to smallpox. This fact impressed Jenner, and when he finished his medical course he began to seek out people who had been inoculated with cowpox and persuaded them to allow him to inoculate them with smallpox. After he had inoculated 10 persons with smallpox and found that in no case did the disease develop, he decided to persuade some one who had never had either cowpox or smallpox to submit himself to inoculation, first with cowpox and later with smallpox.

This he did for the purpose of further determining the value of cowpox as a protection against smallpox. This experiment was made on May 14, 1796, when Jenner inoculated a young lad named James Phipps from an eruption due to cowpox—the virus, as it was called, being taken from a vesicle or sore from the hand of Sarah Nelms, a young girl who had contracted cowpox from milking an infected cow. In describing the experiment, Jenner says:

> In order to ascertain whether the boy, after securing so slight an affection of the system from cowpox virus was secure from the contagion of smallpox, he was inoculated with variolous matter immediately taken from a smallpox pustule after slight punctures and incisions were made in both arms, and the smallpox matter was carefully inserted, but no disease followed.

Jenner's experiment was repeated many times in England, and the practice of vaccination from arm to arm was soon begun.

Vaccination was first practiced in the United States by Dr. Benjamin Waterhouse, of Harvard Medical School. At the instance of President Jefferson, an act was passed by Congress in 1813 to encourage vaccination. This act provided, among other things, for the free transmission of vaccine virus through the mails, and the appointment of vaccine agents. This act was repealed in 1822. The reasons advanced for the repeal of the 1813 law relating to vaccination, as disclosed by the record of the proceedings in Congress, were that the subject was one properly within the province of the several States, locally, and that the law constituted a monopoly and discouraged medical men from exerting themselves in promoting vaccination.

MODERN SANITATION

One of the important developments of recent years is the awakening of a sanitary conscience. To some men it is a new thought that the care of the body and cleanliness of surroundings are very important factors in the comfort, safety, and even the life and health of their fellow man. Preventitive medicine of the present day teaches that we must not only safeguard our own body against infection and keep our own body clean for our own sakes, but quite as much for our neighbors' sake. It teaches the lesson of unselfishness, of community and public interest. One man alone can not fight successfully against the common foe, disease; it takes the combined and intelligent cooperation of the community.

The new public health developed within the past half century has given to us an entirely different conception of many of the factors that enter into the preservation of health and protection against disease. Many an old theory has been disproven. The old theory of the spread of disease through fomites or inanimate things, has been shown to be of far less importance than was at one time supposed. It is known that, in fact, this occasionally happens, especially with diseases spread through discharges from the mouth, nose, and throat. Instead of suspecting letters, books, umbrellas, walls, furniture, and other unlikely objects, which were formerly disinfected or destroyed, we now think of things recently moistened with saliva, such as drinking utensils, towels, toys, furniture, food, fingers, and flies. Many of our sanitary procedures of 50 years ago now require considerable modification in the light of present-day science.

Our conception of public health has been broadened so that modern public health is concerned not only with stamping out communicable disease, but with a much broader aspect of public health. There are many preventable defects which can be reached especially in the school child and industrial worker. Present-day preventive medicine must concern itself with problems of heredity and eugenics. The questions of immunity from disease, health hazards of occupation, the food supply, including milk and water, must be given consideration.

Within recent times there has come to exist a broadened public vision as to the duty of governments to individuals and to groups of individuals. This has led to progress which, generally speaking, has been initiated by far-seeing volunteers and directed along practical channels by official bodies, which is the proper sequence for progress among self-governing people. Thus in our own time there has been a marked development of public-health activities and an increased appreciation of the obligations of governments and of the public, especially to those who need help because of mental or physical infirmities, as well as to those engaged in vocations either intrinsically detrimental to health or else productive of pecuniary returns so small as to render well nigh impossible home environments and living conditions conducive to health.

In the States this sentiment has been evidenced by the broadened powers and increased efficiency of their health departments, the passage of laws regulating child labor and fixing hours of labor for women as well as for those engaged in hazardous occupations, lessening of occupational hazards, better provision for the care of tuberculosis and mental diseases, and by intelligent efforts to eradicate typhoid fever, malaria, and other diseases having a bearing on the public health. Very significant, too, has been the recognition of the economic value of preventive medicine by great industrial organizations and life-insurance companies.

All conditions which tend to decrease the mental and physical fitness and efficiency not only of the present, but also the future generations, come within the sphere of interest of the ideal public-health servant who must keep step with the epidemiologist, the psychiatrist, the pediatrist, the syphilographer, the great industrial enterprises, and the sanitary engineer, as well as with the hospital and with the general practitioners. He can least of all afford to lose touch and sympathy with the individual sufferer.

VOLUNTEER HEALTH AGENCIES

The interest of the public is shown by the efforts of numerous volunteer organizations in the initiation and development of health movements throughout the several States. These are encouraging signs of a splendid future.

There is a field of usefulness for the volunteer health organizations when wisely directed. They must form the connecting link between many of the public and governmental agencies. Official health organizations and volunteer organizations must work together in close harmony.

It has been said that public health is purchasable, but the people are entitled to have skilled purchasing agents, whether the money comes from them in taxes or in voluntary offerings. It can not be had merely with sums of money, however large, nor with untrained, irresponsible personnel.

It is evident, therefore, that the foundation for that ideal condition for which we hope when the conquest of preventable diseases shall at length be accomplished, is being laid by an aroused public sentiment over widening areas of our country, and by increasing efficiency of Federal, State, and local health officers.

The very cornerstone of an effective national public health organization is the local health officer. The office must be one of sufficient dignity by adequate remuneration and certainty of tenure as to attract the right type of young men, and facilities which now exist in only two or three schools should be given in every medical school to educate men for these positions.

The State departments of health are making notable progress, but, with few exceptions, they are hampered in their usefulness by totally inadequate compensation to attract men fitted for the broader problems of modern preventive medicine.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

No other country approaches the United States in efficiency of national health work. Our problem is peculiar to our form of government. The United States Public Health Service has been builded upon sure foundations. It is the result of evolution and gradual development, and its adaptability to changing conditions has been shown in the past few years.

The history of the United States Public Health Service dates back more than a century and a quarter. It had its origin in the old Marine Hospital Service, which was first authorized by act of Congress approved July 16, 1798.

The evolution of public health functions from such a service was along natural lines. The medical officers, in providing care for the American merchant marine, were often the first physicians to diagnose such diseases as cholera, yellow fever, smallpox, and the like, which were being imported into the United States. This was especially the case in the southern ports as regards yellow fever, and during epidemics when called upon by State and local health authorities the President authorized the Marine Hospital Service to aid the health authorities in giving relief in the control of these diseases.

In 1878 Congress authorized the use of the Marine Hospital Service in an extensive way as the Federal health service. The act approved April 29, 1878, gave very broad powers to the service to cooperate with State and local health authorities in the control of diseases, especially yellow fever. The above mentioned act was, for the most part, a quarantine law to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States. In 1890 Congress passed an act which utilized the Marine Hospital Service as the Federal health agency for the prevention of interstate spread of disease.

FEDERAL, STATE, AND LOCAL COOPERATION

The act of February 15, 1893, extended the powers of the Marine Hospital Service to cover the control of all infectious and contagious diseases in cooperation with State and local health agencies.

After the act of 1893, which recognized the Marine Hospital Service as the Federal health service, Congress continued to impose additional health functions upon the service, and on July 1, 1902, passed the act which changed its name to the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service and made it a health service in name as well as in functions. The larger part of its functions up to this time had been the combating of epidemics, especially of those of yellow fever, which from time to time swept over the country.

While the public-health functions of the service had their inception in the prevention of the introduction and spread of quarantinable diseases, their development in logical sequence was brought about by growing public opinion. In addition to the quarantine and hospital functions the activities of the service include research and educational work. The investigative functions began with the study of such diseases as yellow fever and cholera in the early years of the existence of the service, but it was not until July 1, 1902, that Congress authorized the establishment of the Hygienic Laboratory for that purpose. Since this legal authorization, the Hygienic Laboratory has grown very rapidly, until it now stands as one of the foremost research institutions in the world.

From the control of epidemics the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service began to study control measures for the more common contagious and infectious diseases, such as typhoid fever, diphtheria, scarlet fever. The history of the remarkable control of typhoid fever which has taken place in the United States within the past 20 years is a part of the history of the Public Health Service, in cooperation with State and local health agencies, and now typhoid fever, which formerly took a total of more than 50,000 lives annually of the population of the United States, is responsible for the death of something less than 10,000.

The development of the health functions of the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service continued until finally Congress by the act approved August 14, 1912, changed the name again to its present one, the United States Public Health Service, and at the same time gave it very broad powers to investigate the diseases of man and the pollution of navigable streams and lakes of the United States.

There is not so much duplication, either in human endeavor or financial output, in the Federal medical and health activities as is supposed, but there is a lack of unification and coordination which all are interested in correcting.

The legitimate functions of the Federal Government in public-health matters in the United States appear to be—

First. The supervision and control of essentially national and international health matters, such as the protection of the country from the introduction of disease from without and the control of the interstate spread of disease.

Second. Research and investigation of public-health problems.

Third. Cooperation with State and local health authorities in matters when necessary and desired by them.

Fourth. The formulation of minimum health standards.

Fifth. The dissemination of information with regard to health matters for the education of the general public.

Sixth. Furnishing leadership and stimulation in the solution of health problems.

Seventh. Medical examinations of arriving aliens or aliens destined to enter the United States.

Eighth. The furnishing of medical care and treatment to certain beneficiaries specified by law.

Ninth. The supervision and control of biologic products sold in interstate commerce.

The United States Public Health Service now possesses all the authority which can be granted to it under the present Constitution. The problem, therefore, is to develop the Public Health Service and supply it with adequate funds and trained personnel.

NEW LEGISLATION

The House of Representatives passed on March 7, 1928, H. R. 11026, which is designed to render more efficient the Federal health activities. This bill provides for the coordination of Federal health activities, and gives to the Public Health Service the facilities necessary for it to function more efficiently as the central health agency of the Government. This bill was drafted by the health agencies of the country represented in the National Health Council, after a study of Federal health problems in cooperation with the Bureau of Governmental Research. It is approved by national medical, dental, health, and engineering associations. The principles of the bill likewise have been indorsed by the United States Chamber of Commerce and by the American Federation of Labor.

Although the coordination of Federal health activities has been agitated for years, never before has such unanimous indorsement been given to any specific measure by the public-health agencies of the country.

Through successive acts the Congress has provided broad authority for Federal public-health activities. For the most part the discharge of these activities has been imposed upon the United States Public Health Service. Accordingly that service has been developed as the essential health agency of the Government. Although the policy long has been established and reaffirmed by Congress that there should be thorough cooperation of the Public Health Service with State and local health authorities, no such general provision has been made for similar cooperation with other governmental establishments. In consequence public-health work has been undertaken by various Government departments independent of, and uncorrelated with, the activities carried on under the basic health laws mentioned.

In special instances these health functions of other departments have been recognized as requiring cooperative effort, and this has been provided for by law. In this class may be mentioned the medical examination of immigrants, measures in foreign ports for the sanitary protection of American commerce, the sanitation of mines, the sanitary protection of shellfish areas, and the oversight of therapeutic agents. Officers of the Public Health Service have been detailed, therefore, under specific provisions in aid of these matters, to the Immigration Service, the Consular Service, the Bureau of Mines, the Bureau of Chemistry, and in the case of the Bureau of Fisheries the work is correlated.

It is highly important, from the health standpoint, for this policy to be extended so as to apply to all agencies of Government not specifically provided with medical and sanitary services. The need to strengthen the health activities of the Government and to bring about their proper correlation has long been recognized. In order to insure the orderly development of Federal health work and to prevent waste, authority to this end should be established. As stated by Dr. William H. Welch, of Johns Hopkins University, at hearings before the congressional committee:

> The growth of the Public Health Service to-day has placed it in the front rank among corresponding agencies of government in other countries. The service contains in increasing numbers leading experts in the field of preventive medicine and public health in this country * * * who can express authoritatively the best knowledge which we have as regards the promotion of health and the prevention of disease.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH FIRST

Scientific research is the most important public-health function of the Federal Government. By means of a proper system of correlation, duplication and useless effort would be avoided and greater progress would be assured in the solution of important health problems which influence adversely the national welfare.

DIPHTHERIA

Diphtheria is one of the communicable diseases of which we know the cause and mode of transmission, and for which we now possess a specific preventive and curative agent of great potency. We also have now a reliable test, called the Schick test, which indicates whether or not a given individual is susceptible to the disease. The introduction of the toxin-antitoxin mixture, which provides permanent immunity against diphtheria, places in the hands of health authorities a most valuable weapon for further combatting this disease. The death rate from diphtheria has responded quickly to the medical discoveries of the past half century. The first aid to the control of this disease was Von Behring's discovery of diphtheria antitoxin. In the period immediately following the general introduction of this antitoxin in the treatment of diphtheria (1894–1905) the death rate in 23 American cities declined at the rate of 10.2 per cent per year.

In 28 American cities for which the rates have been computed the decline has been from about 116 per 100,000 in 1890 to 8 per 100,000 in 1925. This extraordinary achievement in public health will probably stimulate campaigns for the better control of other communicable diseases.

THE PASSING OF YELLOW FEVER

Probably no brighter spot illuminates the highway of scientific knowledge and no more interesting chapter exists in history than that which marks the passing of yellow fever. To those who recall the appalling epidemics of only a generation or two ago, and the panics which they produced, this achievement seems little short of miraculous. Yellow fever has not been been epidemic in the United States since 1905, and it has been out of reckoning in the United States for several years past except for the important work of safeguarding our ports and frontiers. Within recent years the attack on yellow fever has been extended to Mexico and Central and South America. It is the hope of sanitarians that the Western Hemisphere will eventually be rid of one of its worst plagues. Dr. Carlos Finlay discovered the part played by the mosquito Aedes egypti in causing yellow fever in 1881, but the announcement received no credit until about 1900. Early in 1900 Dr. H. R. Carter, of the United States Public Health Service, showed that a lapse of 12 to 15 days is necessary before a case of yellow fever becomes dangerous to others. Following this came the epoch-making work of Dr. Walter Reed and his coworkers, showing that yellow fever is produced by a mosquito bite by infection of blood and by injection of filtered blood serum. thus proving the existence of a filtered virus. These observations were confirmed by Rosenau, of the Public Health Service, in 1903.

MALARIA

The parasite which causes malaria was discovered in 1880. However, it was not until about 1897 that Sir Ronald Ross made the important discovery of how the malaria parasite gets into the blood of man. It was through his studies that it was shown that the Anopheles mosquito was the means whereby the malaria parasite was spread from person to person. The development of methods of attack on malaria soon followed the discovery of the rôle the mosquito played in transmitting malaria. The application of this knowledge relating to malaria by public-health authorities has been successful in ridding large areas of malaria infection.

TUBERCULOSIS RETREATS

Half a century ago tuberculosis caused more than 320 deaths annually in every 100,000 of the population of Massachusetts. Probably this rate is not higher than the rate for other States for which records are not available. To-day tuberculosis causes less than one-third of this number of deaths per 100,000. While the reduction of the death rate from tuberculosis has undoubtedly been due, in part, to natural causes, it is probable very much more has been the result of public-health activities. Among the specific measures that have contributed to this result are improved and more accurate methods of diagnosis, the pasteurization of milk, the abolition of the common drinking cup and other utensils used in common, the inspection of meat products, and improved housing.

MILK AND PUBLIC HEALTH

The relationship of milk supplies to the public health has long been recognized as of great importance. Through the medium of milk many diseases are spread, among which may be mentioned diphtheria, scarlet fever, tuberculosis, typhoid fever, cholera, dysentery, and septic sore throat. Diseases spread by infected milk have also been the cause of high mortality rates among children. Louis Pasteur, of France, found that milk would not rapidly ferment or sour if raised to a certain temperature, and kept that temperature for a given period of time. This is what is now generally known as the process of Pasteurization, so named from the man who first developed this method of destroying disease-producing germs in milk.

The sound principles of the effective sanitary control of milk have been established to the satisfaction of the scientific world. These principles are sufficiently well understood to form the basis of effective milk legislation and milk regulation. It only remains to bring to the attention of the general public the complete realization of the food value of milk, and of the great principles of sanitary control of milk, in order to produce a satisfactory solution of the milk problem in every community.

PURE FOOD LAWS

The first attempts at food control were made by local communities, generally by cities, where the residents were removed from actual contact with the producers of food. The laws which were first enacted usually related to specific productions, few embraced foods in general. One of the earliest laws regarding foods in general was enacted by the State of Illinois in 1874. In 1906 the Federal law relating to food and drugs was enacted. Within two years after the passage of this act, at least 30 States amended or enacted food laws. Many of these followed the general lines of the Federal law, but many differences remain and the ideal uniformity has not yet been reached. The pure food and drugs act of 1906 has been of great value in protecting foods sold to the public against adulteration. Improved methods of canning, preserving, and refrigeration of foods have also been introduced during the past 50 years.

SCARLET-FEVER CONTROL

Recent studies have developed a serum which is believed to be of considerable value in the treatment of scarlet fever. Drs. George F. Dick and Gladys H. Dick, of Chicago, have described a test which is useful in determining whether given individuals are susceptible to scarlet fever. It is believed by public-health officials that this test will be of material value in the control of scarlet fever. In the early development of preventive medicine the suggestion was made that preventive medicine and curative medicine must proceed along divergent paths. In this connection it is interesting to note that modern theory and practice have brought about a result entirely different, and at the present time it is frequently difficult to say where one branch begins and the other ends. Curative medicine in its methods has become largely preventive and now deals with immunization and prevention as a part of its work. The development of the Schick test for diphtheria and Dick test for scarlet fever are an example of this, while in matters of tuberculosis and venereal disease it is frequently difficult to note any line of demarcation between cure and prevention.

PELLAGRA PREVENTED

Pellagra has long been included among the diseases associated with food for the evidence has indicated that it is caused by a deficient diet. This disease was first recognized in the United States in 1864, after which it was more or less overlooked until 1906 when cases were reported from the Alabama Insane Asylum. In subsequent years many cases were reported in various parts of the country, particularly in the South. This disease has been made the subject of special study by the United States Public Health Service. Dr. Joseph Goldberger and other officers working with him have shown that by diet alone the disease has been produced in subjects, and by the same means they have prevented and cured it if not too far advanced. It is believed that the case is reasonably proven and the work done by these investigators within the past few years stands as a very important achievement in preventive medicine. Studies in connection with pellagra have indicated the value of brewer's yeast in furnishing a well-balanced diet. Acting on this knowledge, extensive use has been recently made of brewer's yeast in the flooded area along the Mississippi River in the prevention and cure of this disease.

SPOTTED FEVER

Rocky Mountain spotted fever is a disease prevalent in certain sections of the western part of the United States. In the area where this disease exists a number of cases occur annually, particularly in persons engaged in outdoor pursuits. For more than 25 years the Public Health Service has been conducting studies relating to this disease. As a result of these studies there has been developed by Drs. R. R. Spencer and R. R. Parker, a vaccine which the evidence at hand tends to show is of great value in preventing the disease and in lessening the severity of cases that develop. The discovery of this vaccine is considered to be one of the important advances in preventive medicine of recent years. With the preparation of this vaccine new principles relating to the production of vaccines have been developed.

RABBIT FEVER WIDESPREAD

In 1910 officers of the Public Health Service, while engaged in plague-control measures in San Francisco, Calif., observed a plaguelike disease in rodents. This disease, although resembling bubonic plague, was found not to be plague. It was not until 1921 that this disease was identified as rabbit fever, or tularæmia. Studies by Dr. Edward Francis, of the Public Health Service, have shown its importance and wide prevalence. The presence of this disease in almost all of the States in the Union has been reported. It has also been identified in Japan. The studies leading up to the recognition and description of this disease are an important landmark in the recent progress of preventive medicine.

VENEREAL DISEASES

Fifty years ago but little thought was given to the public-health aspects of venereal diseases. With the development of salvarsan, the perfection of the Wassermann reaction, and other bacteriological advances in this field, important weapons have been placed in the hands of public-health authorities for the control and eradication of these diseases. There has been a general awakening on the part of the public to the importance of campaigns directed against these diseases, and as a result, many State and local boards of health are now conducting vigorous antivenereal-disease campaigns.

HOOKWORM ERADICATION

In 1902 Dr. Charles W. Stiles, of the United States Public Health Service, demonstrated that the widespread anæmia present among the population of the Southern States was due to hookworm disease. This discovery is one of the most important public-health advances of the century, and through the campaign for the eradication of hookworm disease which followed this discovery, a great impetus has been given to public-health work generally throughout the Southern States as well as the entire country.

WATER

The history of water purification is closely associated with the general progress in sanitation and public health within recent years and with the rise of the modern science of preventive medicine. Judged by our present-day standards the water supplies of the United States of a few years ago were low. The germ theory of the transmission of disease by means of polluted water was not generally accepted until less than 50 years ago, and water purification was practically an unknown art. Water analyses were confined to mineral constituents. A study of the records of those times shows many notable typhoid epidemics. To-day typhoid fever is a vanishing disease, except in communities that are negligent in applying the well-known principles of modern sanitary science. From the standpoint of preventive medicine an outbreak of typhoid fever is a reproach to the sanitation and civilization of a community. In 1877 the death rate from typhoid fever in the United States was about 45 per 100,000. In 1910 it was 23.5, and in 1926 it was 6.5.

BIRTH, DEATH, AND DISEASE STATISTICS

The collection of statistics relating to births, deaths, and the prevalence of disease has made rapid development throughout the civilized world during the past 50 years, particularly the collection of information relating to deaths and the prevalence of disease. In the United States the development of a death registration area and a birth registration area have been brought about. A city or State is admitted to the death registration area only if it can be shown that 90 per cent of the actual deaths are being reported. A similar requirement is made for admission to the birth-registration area.

In 1877 there was no registration area in the United States. In 1880 a registration area was established comprising 17 per cent of the population. In 1900 the collection of annual statistics of deaths was begun, 40.5 per cent of the population being included in the area. In 1928, 93.5 per cent of the population was included in the registration area. Figures for the United States or for considerable sections of the country earlier than 1900 are approximate only, as only a few States and cities have reliable data earlier than that year.

Although the United States was collecting and publishing current information relating to the prevalence of disease before 1912, the data were from scattering sections of the country and incomplete. In 1912 a standard form for reporting notifiable diseases was agreed upon at a conference of State and Territorial health authorities with the United States Public Health Service. In the same year reports for annual prevalence of disease for cities was begun, including only a few cities. Cities having a combined population of approximately 50,000,000 were included in the compilation for 1926. The data for States were first published in 1913. These reports were incomplete and included only about 17 States. In 1926 reports were received from 47 States and also the District of Columbia, Territory of Hawaii, and Porto Rico.

In preventing and controlling the spread of disease, prompt information is necessary in regard to the locality of occurrence and conditions under which it is occurring. Modern means of transportation and the increase in the rate and amount of travel by rail, by automobile, and by airplane, greatly facilitate the rapid dissemination of communicable diseases and greatly emphasize the need for such information.

But few States required the reporting of communicable diseases a few years ago. At the present time every State in the Union has laws or regulations requiring the reporting of certain diseases to officials whose duty it is to record and act on the information.

BOARDS OF HEALTH

In 1869 only three States, Massachusetts, California, and Virginia, had established boards of health. The health department of the District of Columbia was established in 1870. By 1876 only 12 States had developed boards of health. In 1891, 36 States had health departments. Every State in the Union now has a health department.

It is said that a board of health was established at Petersburg, Va., in 1780; one was certainly established in Philadelphia in 1794, and one in New York in 1796. By 1873, 32 cities had established boards of health. Every city of any magnitude in the United States now has an organized health department.

YAKIMA COUNTY LEADS

A county in my district has the distinction of having the first whole-time county health department to be established in the United States. I refer to Yakima County, Wash., where the first whole-time county health department was established in 1911. In 1928, 414 counties in the United States are provided with local health service under whole-time health officers. During the past 12 years the Public Health Service has undertaken a program of cooperative demonstrations in rural health work from which have come many sanitary and economic benefits to the communities, and stimulation for the development of whole-time county health service.

At the present time there is in every State some regular provision for local health organization.

INTERNATIONAL SANITATION

With the great progress of the public health movement throughout the world during the past half century, advances have been made in international sanitation also. The necessity of international sanitary agreements and standards were first emphasized by the cholera epidemics which occurred in Europe during the early eighties and nineties. The first international sanitary conference was held in Rome in 1885. The United States was not represented at this meeting. Other international conferences in which the United States was represented were held in different European cities at varying intervals. The international sanitary convention of Paris was signed ad referendum December 3, 1903. The United States Senate, by its resolution of March 1, 1905, ratified this convention. The exchange of ratifications between the representatives of the participating nations took place in Paris, April 6, 1907. This agreement, which modified the measures necessary to guard against the invasion of bubonic plague and cholera, emphasized the responsibility of the different governments to each other in matters pertaining to public health.

Following another international sanitary convention held in Rome in December, 1907, the International Bureau of Public Hygiene of Paris was organized with the object of facilitating the collection of facts concerning the public health, especially those relating to the importance of recognizing the various stages of infectious diseases and the measures to combat them. The organic statutes organizing an International Bureau of Public Hygiene authorized direct communication with the principal health authorities of the participating governments. The foundations of the International Office of Public Hygiene were laid as for an institution that is to be permanent. In organization it resembles the Permanent International Postal Bureau.

The latest revision of the International Sanitary Convention was signed in Paris June 21, 1926. The United States Senate on March 22, 1928, ratified this revision of the sanitary convention.

The Pan American Sanitary Bureau of American Republics was founded by the International Conference of American States held in the City of Mexico in 1901. The object of this organization is to discuss freely all matters relating to the public health, particularly those which affect the American republics, and to encourage the execution of the resolution of agreements decided upon by the conventions. The Pan American Sanitary Bureau of American Republics holds meetings at intervals of two or three years.

As a result of the Pan American Sanitary Conference held in Habana, November, 1924, there was adopted the present Pan American Sanitary Code which is believed to be one of the most comprehensive instruments of this kind that has ever been adopted.

TYPHOID FEVER WALKS THE PLANK

The bacillus which causes typhoid fever was discovered in 1880. Subsequent studies showed that this organism may be spread to persons through food, fingers, and flies. In 1896 Widal announced the agglutination test for the diagnosis of typhoid fever. Although protective inoculation by means of vaccine, against typhoid fever, was practiced as early as 1895, it was not until several years later that inoculation for the prevention of typhoid was practiced on an extensive scale.

This was made effective on a large scale in the United States Army in 1909, where its use was shown to be highly satisfactory. Formerly it was an axiom that typhoid fever was a scourge of all armies. In the Spanish-American War 1 man out of every 6 contracted typhoid fever in an army of 107,973, and this disease caused 1,580 deaths in the same Army. During the World War 1 man out of every 3,756 in an army of approximately 4,000,000 contracted typhoid fever, and there were only 213 deaths from this disease. This remarkable record is due, in large measure, to the protective inoculation against typhoid fever given every person entering the Army.

In 1900, typhoid fever was excessively prevalent in the country as a whole. Approximately 35.9 persons out of every 100,000 died of the disease in that year. Estimating 10 cases for each death, there were, on an average, 359 cases per annum out of every 100,000 of the population. This was in striking contrast to the low mortality rates of the older countries in northwestern Europe.

Preventive medicine has developed to such an extent that we are sometimes prone to have a false sense of security and neglect important fundamentals of sanitation. It has been stated that a large epidemic of typhoid fever is impossible in a city with present modern sanitary conditions. It was said that a city provided with thoroughly safeguarded water supplies and adequate control of milk and foodstuffs need not fear the epidemic prevalence of typhoid fever. However, if any of these essentials of sanitation are neglected, even for a short time, a disastrous epidemic may occur. As an example of this, it may be stated that during 1927 there occurred in the city of Montreal, Canada, an outbreak of typhoid fever in which more than 5,000 cases occurred and approximately 524 deaths were recorded. This tragic instance serves to impress the necessity of adequate public-health protection and demonstrates that eternal vigilance is the price of sanitation.

FILTERED WATER

A most interesting and important phase of development in public-health work has been the improvement of the quality of public water supplies by filtration plants and other purification processes. In 1890 only about 1.5 per cent of the urban population of the United States was supplied with filtered water. By 1900 the proportion had reached 6.3 per cent. Since that date the development has been very rapid, and it is estimated that now more than 50 per cent of the urban population of the United States is supplied with filtered water.

BUBONIC PLAGUE

Bubonic plague is an ancient disease, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to even estimate the number of deaths for which it is responsible. The plague bacillus was discovered in 1895 by Yersin. Later studies showed the rôle of the flea as the transmitting agent of plague from rat to rat or from rat to man. The work of the Indian Plague Commission, appointed by the British Government, stands as an important milestone in the progress of the knowledge of plague.

Plague first appeared in the United States in 1900 at San Francisco. It was recognized in 1907 in Seattle, in 1914 at New Orleans, and again in 1920. Later, in 1920, it was recognized in Beaumont and Galveston, Tex., and in Pensacola, Fla.

In 1904 it was suspected, in 1908 it was demonstrated that bubonic-plague infection had spread from the rat to the ground squirrel of California. It has been present among these rodents ever since. In spite of outbreaks of plague that have occurred, through broad and vigorous campaigns conducted by the United States Public Health Service in cooperation with the State and local health authorities so far any extended epidemic of the disease has been prevented. Without any knowledge of the mode of spread or method of control of this disease it is not unreasonable to believe that the scourge might have swept the country.

In 1924 plague made its appearance in Los Angeles, Calif., and after an active campaign it was brought under control. Two months later the infection was noted in New Orleans, La., and Oakland, Calif. However, measures for its control were promptly put into effect. These campaigns for the control of plague have been successfully concluded.

MENTAL HYGIENE

Decided advances in mental hygiene and a fuller recognition of the tremendous importance of this now well-defined branch of medical science have been made within recent years. Facilities for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with various forms of mental diseases have been enlarged and improved. Methods of prevention and treatment have been modified to correspond to the present-day conception of the cause and correction of such conditions. Institutions and colonies for the care of those mentally sick, epileptics, and the feeble-minded have become a necessary part of the public facilities provided by the States and the Federal Government.

The scope of mental hygiene is so great that it is difficult to enumerate its many ramifications. The enormous problem involved in the proper care of the mentally sick and the feeble-minded comes under this category. It is futile to attempt to solve the problem of mental hygiene by building more institutions and increasing the facilities for custodial care. The proper approach to the scientific prevention of both diseases and defects of the mind is the use of every source of medicine and biology. Utilization of any one of the several fields that must be explored—pathology, chemistry, and psychology—will doubtless offer valuable aid in the further study of mental hygiene.

It has been stated that there are in the United States more persons who are mentally sick than those that are physically ill. The admission rate to the mental hospitals in the United States is now about 90,000 new patients annually.

The recognition of mental hygiene as an important field of preventive medicine and public health is one of the great advances of recent years.

Public health education is a phase of activity in the field of preventive medicine which has developed with the advance of scientific knowledge. During the past few decades very rapid progress has been made in public health and sanitary research. There has been added to our knowledge of diseases and their prevention, much more knowledge than is being used. The problem, therefore, arises as to how to present to every individual in a community the important facts he should know about the prevention of diseases and the public health.

To give information on any subject to everyone in a community is a tremendous task and one that can never be finished. It has no end because new facts are being constantly developed through research and new people are being added to each community through new arrivals and the growth of children to the teachable age. The promotion of the public health through health education, therefore, is a task of imparting an increasing mass of information to an ever-changing population. The magnitude of such a task, instead of being a cause for pessimism, should be a challenge to develop a plan whereby each community may feel a sense of responsibility in the very important task of health education.

The facts needed for health education are developed by the laboratory workers, those engaged in scientific research of all kinds, field workers in epidemiology, vital statisticians, and clinicians who are close observers of their patients.

Failure to eliminate certain diseases is frequently not due to want of knowledge of the cause, but to inability to get this knowledge to those who require it most.

Death rates for the United States as a whole have been reduced from 17.6 per 1,000 in 1900 to 12.2 in 1926.

The infant mortality rate has been reduced from approximately 167 per 1,000 births in 1890, to 72 in 1926. The death rate from tuberculosis has been reduced from 201.9 per 100,000 in 1900 to 87.1 in 1926. Similar results are noteworthy in the reduction of other communicable diseases, and some of the American cities have attained even greater reductions.

At the close of the nineteenth century the average length of human life was between 45 and 50 years. To-day it varies from about 24 years in India to 60 years in New Zealand. The expectation of life in the United States for 1926 was 57.74 years. The best available figures show that the span of life in the United States has been lengthened 15 years since 1870.

Much has been accomplished in preventive medicine and hygiene—much more remains to be done. There is yet too much preventable disease. Many problems are still unsolved. Figures at hand indicate that deaths from diseases of the heart, blood vessels, and kidneys, apoplexy, insanity, and cancer have increased during the past 40 years. Unfortunately the exact cause of many of these and other chronic degenerative diseases is still obscure.

The triumphs of modern preventive medicine and sanitation have been great. The problems for solution are still greater. The true aim of all scientific investigation and public-health endeavor is the prevention of disease and the promotion of public health.

THE AGRICULTURAL SURPLUS CONTROL BILL

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the farm problem.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, by a decisive vote in the House and Senate, Congress has again passed the McNary-Haugen bill. By this action Congress once more recognized that the demands of agriculture are just and should be granted. From the day this legislation was first proposed in Congress it has gradually grown in favor. It has outlived the taunts, jokes, and contemptuous sneers that were directed against it by the beneficiaries of special privilege, the buccaneers of big business, and those short-sighted statesmen who, without a careful study or understanding of the bill, arrogantly denounced it. It has had the experience that all great measures encounter. When they are first proposed they are ridiculed and denounced. Then they are declared economically unsound; and in the final stages they are challenged as unconstitutional. But after all, if a measure is sound and just and intended to remedy social injustice, it will survive and become a law. And this farm-relief legislation has had to travel this rough and rocky road. But the soundness of the principle and the justice of the plan is now conceded by the best-informed students of agricultural conditions and a very substantial majority of the House and Senate, and the measure will soon be sent to the White House for the President's approval.

I do not know whether the President will approve or veto this measure. I am convinced that he should give it his approval. I am sure he would do this if it were not for the crowd of ultrareactionaries who surround him and use their baneful influence to defeat all legislation that is designed to break the power of big business and give the masses a square deal. But if the President should again veto the measure his veto will not mark the end of the McNary-Haugen bill. A veto will serve to strengthen the demand for this legislation, and the next Congress will favor this bill by an increased majority which will insure its enactment even over a third presidential veto.

The arguments against the enactment of this legislation have crumbled one by one because they could not stand the acid test of intelligent analysis and thoughtful consideration. By high tariff laws the Federal Government has stabilized the manufacturing industry which has insured higher prices for manufactured commodities than could be obtained without these tariff laws. By the transportation act and the law creating the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Government has stabilized the transportation industry and enabled the railroads to secure higher rates and larger net profits than were possible without this legislation. By the Federal reserve act the Federal Government has stabilized banking and finance, regulated interest rates, controlled loans and credits, and made the banking and financial pursuits safe and profitable. By numerous acts of Congress the Federal Government has stabilized big business and commerce and tremendously increased the profits of those who engage in these vocations. By orders of utility boards and public-service commissions the Federal Government and States have stabilized the business of street-railway companies, electric-light companies, water companies, telephone companies, and other lines of business, increasing their profits at the expense of the general public. By the Adamson law and numerous other acts the Federal Government has stabilized labor and enabled the organized wageworkers to secure higher wages and more satisfactory working conditions.

In short, the Federal Government and State governments have by class legislation and special privilege laws stabilized and increased the profits of every great industry except agriculture. According to the Coolidge-Mellon-Hoover-Jardine theory every great basic industry except agriculture should be nursed, petted, babied, and favored by the Government, but when agriculture asks for a little of the same kind of medicine that the Government has been granting unstintingly to these other vocational groups, the door of the White House is slammed in the faces of the American farmers. If Congress and the President would only try half as hard to find a remedy for the farmers' ills as they have worked to aid the manufacturing, transportation, banking, and business interests, a satisfactory solution of the farm problem would have been found long ago.

But the industrial East is in the saddle, riding booted and spurred, roughshod over the agricultural classes. Big business gets all the legislation it wants, but the agricultural classes are given scant consideration by the Coolidge-Mellon-Hoover-Jardine oligarchy. How long will the American farmer be deluded by the false philosophy of the industrial East? How long will the western farmer continue to carry hay and water to the eastern industrial elephant? How long will the 30,000,000 American people who depend either directly or indirectly on agriculture for a livelihood be satisfied with the few crumbs that fall from the table laden with bounties and legislative favors for the special-privilege classes? And how long, O how ong, will the western Republicans submit to the party lash in the hands of a few eastern Republicans who worship at the altar of special privilege, use the party of Lincoln, Grant, Garfield, and Blaine to accomplish their sinister and selfish purpose and feather their own nests, and whose sordid and shortsighted leadership and opposition to farm-relief legislation have driven agriculture dangerously close to the abyss of bankruptcy?

In this connection I want to express my appreciation of the very valuable service rendered by my colleague from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY]. From the beginning of the fight for farm relief he has been on the firing line, working in season and out of season to secure the enactment of legislation that would relieve the American farmer of the unjust handicap under which he has so long labored. He has never faltered in his devotion to the interests of agricultural classes.

As a member of the Committee on Agriculture that framed the McNary-Haugen bill, Mr. RUBEY rendered the people of his district and the farmers of the Nation a very valuable service. He was faithful in attending the meetings of this important committee. He patiently and industriously aided in framing this legislation. His understanding of the farm problem, his sympathy for the farming classes, his ripe experience as a legislator, his sound judgment and admirable qualities of mind and heart enabled him to render a service to agriculture the value of which can not be easily computed. Many times when the fate of this bill hung trembling in the balance the vote of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] turned the tide and gave the friends of farm relief a majority in the committee, and I understand at times the committee was so evenly divided that this bill probably would not have been reported out in its present form had it not been for the vote and influence of Mr. RUBEY. I am indeed glad to bear testimony of the great value of the service Mr. RUBEY has rendered to his district and the country at large, and I indulge the hope, which I am sure is concurred in by all the Members of this body, that he may be reelected and that the people of his district may continue to have the benefit of his valuable services.

Nor can I forego the opportunity to commend the splendid services of my colleague from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] in this fight for equality of agriculture. Ever since I came to Congress his office has been close to mine, and I have been intimately associated with him in legislative matters. Times without number I have consulted him with reference to pending legislation.

I soon found that his judgment was sound, that he was well informed on economic problems, that he was an expert parliamentarian and thoroughly familiar with the legislative machinery, and that his heart was on the right side of every issue, especially the agricultural question. In the five-year battle to pass the McNary-Haugen bill it has been my privilege and pleasure to fight side by side with him, and in this long struggle he has never faltered. From the first he realized the nation-wide distress of agriculture and the absolute necessity for the enactment of legislation that would place agriculture on a parity with other industries; and having put his hand to the plow he never looked back, never compromised on any essential provision of the measure, and never surrendered. When the outlook was most discouraging he never lost confidence in the cause and never doubted that ultimately a worth-while farm relief bill would be enacted based on the McNary-Haugen formula. In the recent contest he rendered the agricultural classes of the Nation a service the value of which can not be measured in dollars and cents.

I am proud of the record made by my Democratic colleagues of Missouri on farm legislation. Every Democratic Member from rural Missouri voted for and loyally supported the McNary-Haugen bill, thereby demonstrating their interest in the welfare of their constituents and their capacity to render their districts and the Nation efficient service.

From what I have said about my colleagues Mr. RUBY and Mr. CANNON having had an active part in securing the enactment of the McNary-Haugen bill it must not be assumed that my other Democratic colleagues from Missouri were any less active in support of farm-relief legislation. As I have said, every one of my Democratic colleagues from rural Missouri gave their votes and aggressive support to this legislation. But in the fight to put over the legislative program of the American farmers I have been very closely associated with Mr. RUBY, a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and with Mr. CANNON, each of whom have given special attention to the farm problem, while my other Democratic colleagues from Missouri being on other committees, though not neglecting farm-relief legislation, were nevertheless compelled to give much of their time to the important problems coming before their committees for consideration. In other words, every Democratic Representative from rural Missouri has kept the faith and have a 100 per cent record on farm-relief legislation.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the control of farm surplus.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the agricultural surplus control bill, commonly referred to as the McNary-Haugen bill, passed the House of Representatives May 3 by a vote of 204 to 121. I voted in favor of the bill because I believe it makes a serious and well-directed effort to deal with what I regard as our greatest economic problem, to wit: The marketing of the surplus of our farm products in a way so as to prevent such surplus from bankrupting the growers who produce it. When, as a Member of Congress, I have voted upon measures affecting agriculture, I have supported every measure which I thought would be helpful to the farming industry. In doing so, I have not felt that I was supporting class legislation, but legislation for the benefit of the whole community.

Mr. Speaker, there are many problems of farm production, but I shall not discuss them to-day because, notwithstanding the many difficulties attending production, the fact remains that our farmers manage to produce as much of the basic farm commodities as the world needs, and in some years more than the world will use, at a fair and living price to the grower under present marketing conditions.

The big economic problem which confronts us, for example, in the cotton industry, and one that is worthy of the efforts of our best minds to solve, is to market it at a price which will yield a fair profit to the grower and will not bankrupt him when it happens that a surplus is produced.

The present glaring defect in our marketing system is illustrated by the fact that in 1925 we produced a crop of 16,000,000 bales and sold it for $500,000,000 more than a crop of around 18,000,000 bales produced in 1926. And in 1927 we produced a crop of 12,700,000 bales and sold it for as much as we sold our 18,000,000 crop in 1926.

Thus we have the unsound situation of rewarding the producer for producing less and penalizing him to the point of bankruptcy for producing more. Surely some way must be found by which that situation will be corrected. What we need to do is to develop a better marketing system, so that the price of our product will not be stagnated by a temporary surplus. Control the surplus and manipulation of the market will be impossible. Leave the surplus uncontrolled and it will be very difficult to work out any marketing system which will save the farmers from heavy losses.

So the remedy lies in the control of the surplus by some adequate surplus-control agency. What do we mean by a surplus? I would define it to mean that part of the crop which if marketed during the usual 12 months of consumption depresses the price of the whole crop to a point where it is unprofitable to the grower. Farm surpluses are in part within the control of the producer and in part they are beyond his control.

To state it another way, farm surpluses are due in part to acreage and the use of fertilizer, both of which are, of course, under the control of the farmer and in part to the seasons and insect damage, over which he has but little control. None, of course, as to seasons, and not very much as to insect damage. Therefore if surpluses are reasonably controlled so as to put farming upon a more profitable and stable basis, two agencies must work together to accomplish that end.

First, I am convinced after the best study I can give to the problem the Government must set up some kind of machinery along the lines of that provided in the McNary-Haugen bill for the control of the surpluses when they occur; and second, the farmers must cooperate by diversifying their crops and not planting too much acreage in any one particular commodity. Any plan of Government control of the surplus will fail unless it receives a reasonable amount of cooperation from the farmers themselves. Can we get that cooperation from the farmer? I think so.

I see no reason why the farm board such as would be set up by the McNary-Haugen bill could not secure cooperation with the farmers to an equal degree as the Federal reserve board is able to secure cooperation with the Federal reserve banks and their member banks. Of course, the cooperation which the Federal reserve system receives from its member banks and the cooperation which the member banks in turn receive from the Federal reserve system is very far from being perfect, but I do not want to abolish the Federal reserve system because it does not work perfectly. Because we think it would be impossible to frame a law which would cure all the defects in our present marketing system, is no reason why we should oppose doing anything at all.

There are some people who oppose any legislation to aid the farmer in the control of his surplus by Government help because they say it would be too paternalistic. Now, if the protective tariff is not the essence of paternalistic legislation, then I do not know the meaning of the word "paternalistic." Does the North and East propose to release any of the protection which they enjoy under the paternalistic Fordney-McCumber tariff law? Oh, no; they do not. Entrenched behind a tariff wall as high as any ever enacted by an American Congress and which I voted against, they propose to hold on to all the protection they have and to set up a cry of "Too paternalistic" every time it is proposed to give the farmers of the West and South a degree of protection comparable to that which they enjoy.

So let it be clearly understood that I believe that something can be done by the Government such as is provided in the McNary-Haugen bill to stop the radical and demoralizing fluctuations in the prices of basic farm products, fluctuations which ranged, for example, from around a low figure of 10 cents a pound for cotton in December of 1926 to a figure around 25 cents in the early part of September, 1927, and then back to 18 cents a pound by December, 1927, a fluctuation of $75 a bale over a period of less than 12 months. No business in the world can enjoy any degree of stable prosperity under such wide fluctuations of prices. Something must be done to correct it.

I think the operation of the McNary-Haugen bill would do much to correct these evils. The McNary-Haugen bill does not provide any compulsory control of acreage. I would not have supported it if it had done so. Social cooperation must be voluntary if it succeeds. It crumbles under compulsion. And that is especially true of the Anglo-Saxon race. It is in our blood to want to be free.

So the McNary-Haugen bill contains no provisions whatever which would give the Federal farm board established under its provisions any compulsory control over acreage. The farmer would still be free to plant whatever he wants to plant and whenever he wants to plant it. But I do not doubt that the great majority of American farmers would be willing to give the board a sufficient amount of cooperation to make the plan of surplus control a success. Not perfection, of course. Any new law of this importance must necessarily pass through its experimental stages. But a start must be made somewhere if we are ever to solve this great problem of surplus control of farm products. The McNary-Haugen bill would make the start, and for that reason I was glad to give it my support.

Let us develop the resources of our land, call forth its powers. Promote all its great interests to see whether we also in our day and generation may not perform something worth while to be remembered.

Thus spoke Daniel Webster nearly a century ago, and his stirring call to service in this great basic industry should still strike a responsive chord in the heart of every citizen who is interested in the happiness and welfare of the American people.

AGRICULTURAL SURPLUS CONTROL BILL

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the McNary-Haugen bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, the recent consideration of the McNary-Haugen farm relief bill in the United States Senate was responsible for the introduction of two amendments to the bill affecting the fruit growers of the United States. One amendment was introduced by Senator Neely, of West Virginia, and the other one was presented by Senator COPELAND, of New York. These amendments are designated as the Neely and the Copeland amendments.

The Neely amendment sought to relieve the fruit growers from the operation of the equalization fee without destroying the loan and credit features of the bill. The adoption of this amendment would have made available to the fruit growers of the United States every needed facility for storing and marketing their products. Because of the perishable character and nature of fruits, the equalization fee was not favored by the growers; but, for exactly the same reason, the credit and loan provisions of the said bill were most desirable.

The effect of the Copeland amendment, which was adopted in the Senate, is most disastrous to the fruit growers. It eliminates fruits from every provision of the McNary-Haugen bill. In other words, fruit, as a commodity, is an outcast. This amendment denies to the fruit growers of the country the rights and advantages guaranteed to the producers of other agricultural commodities and places their fate in the hands of the commission merchants. It denies credit and loan facilities of the United States Government to the producers of fruit, and reaffirms and reestablishes the present policy of securing loans and credits from commission merchants, who arbitrarily fix a low market price for the producer and a proportionately high price to the consumer. It leaves the fruit grower at the mercy of the commission merchants, and neither the grower nor the public is benefited. This is the aim and objective of the Copeland amendment.

The adoption of the Copeland amendment was most significant. It was a decided victory for the commission merchants and all allied associations and the organizations in the business of buying and selling fruits. It was particularly gratifying to those organizations which have constantly opposed and contended against all cooperative movements to assist and aid the farmers.

In the April 14, 1928, issue of The New York Packer, a trade publication devoted to the interest of commercial growers, packers, shippers, and receivers of fruit, vegetables, melons, and so forth, with offices in Kansas City, New York, Cincinnati, Chicago, and Los Angeles, almost a column is devoted to the most gratifying success of the Copeland amendment under the glaring headlines:

Fruits and vegetables eliminated from McNary-Haugen bill. Trade associations have been active in support of the amendment and the pressure of a flood of telegrams pouring into Washington from members of the trade throughout the country was a factor in winning the battle.

This is a bold confession. We can now begin to understand. The adopted amendment is the result of legislative propaganda.

Under a Chicago date line of April 13 the same article continues:

The force of the fruit and vegetable trade organizations was felt in Washington this week when telegrams from members of the various trade associations throughout the country poured into the offices of Senators. The joint council representing members of the Western Fruit Jobbers' Association, International Apple Shippers' Association, and the National League of Commission Merchants has been active in its support of the Copeland amendment, excluding fruits and vegetables from the bill.

William Garfitt, secretary of the Western Fruit Jobbers' Association said yesterday that members of his organization had been flooding Washington with telegrams in support of the Copeland amendment.

Under a Detroit date line of April 13 the following is published as a part of the said article:

The Detroit branch of the National League of Commission Merchants sent the following telegram to United States Senator JAMES COUZENS: "We, the undersigned members of the Detroit National League of Commission Merchants, hereby request that you use your influence and support to the Copeland amendment in final action by the Senate pending, which would exclude fruits and vegetables from the operation of the McNary-Haugen relief bill (3555), as the original bill as drafted would prove very harmful to the entire fruit and vegetable business of the United States."

The article gives another report, under a New York date line of April 13, as follows:

The legislative committee of the New York Mercantile Exchange held a meeting Monday to consider the McNary-Haugen bill, which is attracting the attention of not only the members of the produce trade of the country but also that of the merchants in all other lines of business. President Droste issued a letter later to the trade calling attention to the circular which was issued by W. F. Jensen, president of the Federated Agricultural Trade of America, condemning the measure. Mr. Droste urged immediate action against the measure. He also included a list of the United States Senators and all the Members of the House of Representatives of the State of New York and urged the trade to take up the matter immediately with their Representatives, protesting against the passage of the bill.

The above press dispatches are quoted to show the extent of the propaganda released by various organizations opposed to any system of cooperation and credit for the American farmer. Anyone who is familiar with the character and nature of said organizations and associations will know the truth of my statement. The dispatches also prove that the McNary-Haugen bill as amended in the Senate is most satisfactory to the middleman.

During the discussion and consideration of said bill in the House of Representatives every effort was made to adopt amendments similar to the Copeland amendment. The House rejected these amendments, and the bill was finally passed without any amendments similar to the Neely or Copeland amendments. The House bill still keeps the fruit growers under the provisions of the equalization bill, which is very objectionable to the growers. This objection should be removed in conference.

The Senate and House bills are now in conference, and it is hoped that an amendment removing fruit growers from the equalization fee and at the same time permit them to enjoy the privileges of the credit and loan provisions will result. This is what the fruit growers desire. In doing this the McNary-Haugen bill will, in fact, be a relief measure for the fruit growers of the United States instead of an enabling act to assist the commission men.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10360) to confer additional jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims under an act entitled "An act authorizing the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota to submit claims to the Court of Claims," approved May 14, 1926, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10360) and agree to the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the bill and the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill and the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11577) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. On No. 72: Restores the House cut of $4,410 for investigations of the European earwig.

On No. 73: Provides an additional $5,000 under "Insects affecting cereal and forage crops," for investigation of the feasibility of shipment of alfalfa meal the entire year.

On No. 74: Strikes out the Senate increase of $15,000 for investigations relative to the cattle grub.

On No. 75: Strikes out the words "not to exceed" in connection with an amount reappropriated, to conform to certain requirements of the Comptroller General.

On Nos. 76 and 77: Corrects a total and the amount allocated for salaries in the District of Columbia.

BUREAU OF BIOLOGICAL SURVEY

On No. 78: Restores the House cut of $1,480 for a new clerk in the Washington office.

On No. 79: Provides $30,000, as appropriated by the Senate, for construction of a dam at Cold Springs Creek, on the Montana National Bison Range.

On No. 81: Strikes out the words "not to exceed" in connection with an amount reappropriated, to conform to certain requirements of the Comptroller General.

On No. 82: Retains the Senate increase of $5,000 for elk and buffalo investigations.

On No. 83: Strikes out $12,000 provided by the Senate for investigations relative to the woodcock.

BUREAU OF AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS

On Nos. 87 and 88: Retains the Senate increase of $10,000 for investigations relative to the uses of cotton, and strikes out the Senate increase of $50,000 for grading and marking of meats.

On No. 89: Insert the word "stocks" in lieu of the word "stock."

On Nos. 90 and 91: Provides $10,000 for Shanghai office.

On Nos. 92, 93, and 94: Corrects the totals and the amount allocated for salaries in the District of Columbia.

PASSENGER-CARRYING VEHICLES

On No. 95: Authorizes $175,000 as provided by the Senate, instead of $165,000 as proposed by the House, for purchase, maintenance, etc., of passenger-carrying vehicles.

FOREST ROADS AND TRAILS

On Nos. 96 and 97: Appropriates $7,500,000 as provided by the Senate, instead of $6,500,000 as proposed by the House, for construction of forest roads and trails.

EIGHTH INTERNATIONAL DAIRY CONGRESS

On No. 101: Provides $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses in connection with the Eighth International Dairy Congress.

The committee of conference have not agreed to the following Senate amendments:

On Nos. 56 and 59: Providing $100,000, as appropriated by the Senate, for a horticultural experiment station at Cheyenne, Wyo.

On Nos. 80, 84, 85, and 86: Providing $54,500 for work relative to predatory animals and rodents, $7,500 for investigations concerning fur-bearing animals, and correcting the totals and the amount allocated for salaries in the District of Columbia as they may be affected by action on the two amounts contained in the Senate amendment.

On No. 98: Striking out the word "may" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "shall," making it mandatory instead of discretionary for the Secretary of Agriculture to incur obligations in the full sum of $7,500,000 authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929.

On Nos. 99 and 100: Appropriating for restoration of roads destroyed by the floods of 1927 as follows: $2,654,000 in Vermont, $653,300 in New Hampshire, and $1,889,994 in Kentucky.

On No. 102: The total of the bill, which will be affected by action taken on the other amendments in disagreement.

L. J. DICKINSON,
E. H. WASON,
JOHN W. SUMMERS,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
JOHN N. SANDLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conference report be agreed to.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

Amendment No. 56: Page 33 of the bill, line 16, insert:

"Horticultural experiment station, Cheyenne, Wyo.: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled 'An act providing for horticultural experiment and demonstration work in the semiarid or dry-land regions of the United States,' approved March 19, 1928, including the erection of buildings and fences, the construction of irrigation facilities, the employment of persons, and for other necessary expenses, to be immediately available, $100,000."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 56: Moved by Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 56, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "Horticultural experiment station, Cheyenne, Wyo.: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled 'An act providing for horticultural experiment and demonstration work in the semiarid or dry-land regions of the United States,' approved March 19, 1928, including the erection of buildings and fences, the construction of irrigation facilities, the employment of persons, and for other necessary expenses, to be immediately available, $100,000: Provided, That the limitations in this act as to the cost of buildings shall not apply to this paragraph."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 59: Page 36, line 11, strike out "$4,216,436" and insert "$4,439,636."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 59: Moved by Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 59, and agree to the same with amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment, insert "$4,380,436."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 80: Page 53 of the bill, line 6, strike out "$595,500" and insert "$657,500."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 80: Moved by Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 80, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$650,000."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 54, line 11, strike out "$1,034,520" and insert "$1,145,000."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Moved by Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 84, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$1,125,500: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall investigate and report to the next regular session of Congress as to the feasibility of a five-year cooperative program, or a program extending over such term of years as to him shall seem most advisable for the purposes in view, for the eradication, suppression, or bringing under control of predatory animals within the United States, and the estimated cost thereof as compared to the present method."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 85: Page 55, line 7, strike out "$1,074,520" and insert "$1,185,000."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 85, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$1,165,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 86: Page 55, line 8, strike out the figures "$209,520" and insert "$217,000."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Moved by Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 86, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$211,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 98: Page 80, line 3, strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa about these increases in amendments 96, 97, and 98, what they are and what they do?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. That is an additional $1,000,000 for roads and trails. The authorization in the law was for $7,500,000. In the last bill the committee cut that down to $6,500,000. It does not correspond with the authorization under the law with the result that they absorbed their balance, and at the end of this year they need the whole authorization. While the Budget was only for $6,500,000 the House allowed the Budget estimate, and the Senate allowed the authorization of $7,500,000.

Mr. SNELL. That is all there is to it?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SHREVE. Is this authorization continued from year to year?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. It is. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in amendment No. 98.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 99: Page 81, after line 16, insert the following:

"FLOOD RELIEF, VERMONT AND NEW HAMPSHIRE

"For the relief of the State of Vermont, $2,654,000, and for the relief of the State of New Hampshire, $653,300, in the matter of roads and bridges damaged or destroyed by the flood of 1927: Provided, That any sums appropriated under this authorization shall be expended in accordance with the provisions of the Federal highway act, except that the provision limiting Federal payments to not exceed $15,000 per mile shall not apply and the provision restricting the expenditure of Federal funds upon roads on the system of Federal-aid highways shall not apply to the extent that such expenditure is hereby authorized on roads and bridges not on but which are extensions of said system within municipalities having a population of 2,500 or more, as shown by the last available census."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"FLOOD RELIEF, VERMONT, NEW HAMPSHIRE, AND KENTUCKY

"For the relief of the following States as a contribution in aid from the United States, induced by the extraordinary conditions of necessity and emergency resulting from the unusually serious financial loss to such States through the damage to or destruction of roads and bridges by the floods of 1927, imposing a public charge against the property of said States beyond their reasonable capacity to bear, and without acknowledgment of any liability on the part of the United States in connection with the restoration of such local improvements, namely: Vermont, $2,654,000; New Hampshire, $653,300; Kentucky, $1,889,994; in all, $5,197,294, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the sums hereby appropriated shall be expended by the State highway departments of the respective States, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, for the restoration, including relocation, of roads and bridges so damaged or destroyed, in such manner as to give the largest measure of permanent relief, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided further, That the amount herein appropriated for each State shall be available when such State shall have or make available a like sum from State funds for the purposes contained herein."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I think the House ought to have an explanation of this amendment. Because of the damage by floods in Vermont, New Hampshire, and also in the State of Kentucky, two amendments were added on the floor of the Senate, the first one, No. 99, being based on a Budget estimate. No. 100 was not based on a Budget estimate, but a Budget estimate has later been sent to the House covering it. The amendments of the Senate provided originally for the damage on primary roads, so far as Vermont and New Hampshire were concerned. Our committee thought that under no circumstances should the Government of the United States ever assume any obligations for either the rebuilding or the repairing of a primary-road system on which Federal funds had been used for building, the reason for that being that if we ever became committed to the policy of repairing primary roads there would be a continuous demand on the Congress every time any primary roads were destroyed to appropriate out of the Federal Treasury for their repair and rebuilding.

The result was that after going over these items very carefully we cut out all reference to primary roads. We do not want to assume any obligations for their repair. We have included Kentucky in the amendment which we have offered to the Senate amendment, and if this amendment be agreed to I shall move to further insist upon the disagreement to the Kentucky amendment, because Kentucky is cared for in the amendment that I have offered as amendment to No. 99. We have made these appropriations entirely a gratuity, based on the emergency, the emergency being that these people suffered a loss that is very extreme, and that the demand on them now is beyond the taxing ability of these various localities to bear. We have gotten away from the responsibility of the Government so far as the repair or rebuilding of the primary roads are concerned. We do not limit the use of the appropriation to primary roads, but make it applicable to roads and bridges, because in the State of Kentucky, as I understand it, a great many of their roads that were destroyed and a great many of their bridges that were destroyed were not on the primary system, but were on the school-road system or the rural routes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that in case of a great disaster to the Federal-aid roads in the Nation, Congress ought not to be committed to replacing those roads?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Absolutely ought not to be.

Mr. WARREN. I might inform the gentleman that a bill has been pending during this entire session having that in view, which has the indorsement of the department and the indorsement of 36 highway commissions in the country.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It naturally would.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Committing Congress to the rebuilding of roads when they are destroyed?

Mr. WARREN. By some great disaster, such as floods.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. That is a matter entirely for the legislative committee. I do not want to approve it in this way.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. While it is true that the gentleman has avoided assuming responsibility, nevertheless these amendments establish the precedent of a gratuity under similar circumstances.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. That is absolutely true.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And unfortunately.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. That is the danger of this amendment. I regret that these amendments were put on an appropriation bill, but they are here, and we have to deal with them. This is an emergency, and the people think they ought to have relief. There is no place where they can go other than to the Federal Treasury to obtain that aid. We have handled the matter in what we think is the safest, sanest way, without fixing a policy that will plague us hereafter.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I think the wording of the amendment proposed by the gentleman is a very great improvement over the Senate amendment. I am glad the gentleman has put it as a straight, square contribution, on account of a great disaster, and then there can be no precedent except under exactly same conditions. I am opposed to the practice of adding these large matters to appropriation bills. The custom has grown up of late that every time some one has something before a committee, or which has been reported out from a committee but which has not been passed, he runs over and gets it attached to an appropriation bill in the Senate. That is absolutely unfair and against the principles of our legislative policy. I do not think the House ought to continually stand for it. I appreciate that this is a serious proposition confronting these people at this time. I shall not oppose this amendment, but as a general policy we ought to insist that these appropriations not come to the House in this way. I know the gentleman agrees with me in that policy.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I absolutely agree with the gentleman.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. The Committee on Roads gave very careful consideration and hearings to the Kentucky and Vermont cases and reported bills favorably by a unanimous vote. Under those bills the money of the Federal Government was to be expended under the directions of the Director of Public Roads.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. That is the case in this amendment, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. But we have gone further than that. We have required that the States shall also match dollar for dollar out of the State funds, not township or county funds, every dollar that we are appropriating here, so that they will have a constructive road-building policy out of these funds rather than patchwork which might occur if we permitted them to use county or township funds.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. How did the committee arrive at these sums to be contributed to these three different States?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. They are set forth in the Budget estimates. It is my understanding that the Budget estimates are based on reports of the State engineers, approved by the Bureau of Roads in the Department of Agriculture, as to what the damages were.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Did the Budget Bureau approve all three of these items?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes; it approved all three of them.

Mr. RAMSEYER. And figured it out to the dollar what each State shall get?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I do not say the Budget Bureau figured it out to the dollar; but I do say that the road departments in the various States made estimates of these damages and certified them to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Does the amount given to each State represent one-half of the damage they have sustained? How did you arrive at the amount?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky to speak with respect to that State.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The State of Vermont, I understand, figured the damage out at something over $7,000,000.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Who figured that out?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I understand the bureau of roads of Vermont and the Bureau of Roads in the Department of Agriculture. Their claim here is limited to $2,654,000. And that is the ratio in the State of New Hampshire. In Kentucky the Federal Bureau of Roads and the State highway commission took the matter up, and Mr. MacDonald, Director of the Bureau of Roads, says the loss there is about 30 per cent of the entire loss. The amount claimed in the Vermont bill and in the Kentucky bill is figured at about 30 per cent of the actual loss to bridges and roads.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Is it not true that the Kentucky Legislature has already authorized an equal amount to that provided in the amendment?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. There were extensive hearings held on these propositions before the Committee on Roads. All of these facts were brought before the legislative committee, and it received the approval of the committee. It is much less than the actual damages, as the evidence before the committee shows.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. What changed the mind of the Bureau of Roads as to the last two propositions, if I may ask? Originally they were not fit for it.

Mr. DOWELL. I do not know what changed the mind of the Bureau of Roads as to the last two propositions.

I want to say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has expressed my views also on the method of making these appropriations. But in this instance there has been a thorough investigation by the House committee, and the facts have been presented in the regular way.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. This consideration, ladies and gentlemen of the House, enters into this matter: Great territories in Vermont and New Hampshire and Kentucky were devastated. Their roads and bridges have been destroyed. The people are hopeless and helpless, and if they are ever going to receive this relief they need it now, and they must have it now. They are not responsible for the items being put on in the Senate. We would have been very glad to have had them considered here. But the Committee on Roads considered the matter carefully, and it was the unanimous report of the members of the committee that these claims were all right.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. HALE. So far as New Hampshire is concerned, Mr. Speaker, the total damage, as estimated by the Federal Bureau of Public Roads, was $2,710,000. The amount of money given in this appropriation to New Hampshire is $653,300, or about 25 per cent of our total damage on our road system. That amount is fixed by the Federal Department of Public Roads as the amount of damage accruing solely and strictly on the Federal highway system. It does not take into account the damage on other roads, and it takes no account of the damage done to life and property elsewhere throughout the State.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] inquired as to how the amounts carried in the amendment were arrived at. The amount, so far as Vermont is concerned, was arrived at through a survey made by the engineers of the Public Roads Bureau of the Department of Agriculture. This survey showed a total road and bridge damage of $7,377,469, or a damage of $21 plus for every man, woman, and child in the State.

Now, the Vermont item carried in this amendment represents just the damage to the Federal-aided roads as determined by this survey, $2,654,000.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House this great cloudburst in the mountains of Kentucky occurred just at the time of the Mississippi flood, and the papers did not carry much about it, but the fact is that 99 lives were lost and $57,000,000 worth of property was destroyed, not counting much personal property. Four hundred and one bridges were swept away and 2,500 miles of highways destroyed or greatly damaged. That gives you some idea of the damage and havoc wrought.

Mr. THATCHER. Is it not a fact that all of these affected counties have already been bonded to the constitutional limit, their money expended on roads that have been swept away, and that they are utterly helpless to raise any more funds?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. That is true. Let me give you one sentence from Mr. MacDonald's (Director Federal Bureau of Roads) report on this matter:

> The greatest and most serious of public and private losses were in the mountain counties. Most of these counties have a low assessed valuation, and those for which we have reports show a decrease of assessed valuation. These counties had issued bonds up to the legal limit of indebtedness to build roads and bridges; the storm came; the roads and bridges are gone, the debts remain, and the people are hopeless and helpless.

This is from Mr. MacDonald's report.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit me to ask a question of the gentleman from Vermont?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman from Vermont please tell the House what the total damage to property of other kinds than that represented in roads was in the State of Vermont?

Mr. GIBSON. The total direct property loss in the State of Vermont, as shown by this survey, was $30,435,000, an amount equal to one-tenth of the value of all property assessed for taxation in the State.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And if the gentleman will permit, in that connection the property loss in Kentucky aggregated $56,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Fifty-seven million dollars.

Mr. GIBSON. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that I did not take into consideration the indirect losses or business losses, which are estimated at about $100,000,000.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Kentucky [Mrs. LANGLEY].

Mrs. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, I want to bring this point to you. While I am a devout believer in and simple follower of the faith and precept that we owe our first allegiance to the constituency that sent us here, and of necessity must conceive it our highest duty to serve their best interests first, yet there is another duty of equal importance—to deal with all problems as if they were our very own. That, to my mind, is the corner stone of representative government. I trust that in dealing with the terrific devastation to post roads and bridges wrought in Kentucky by the May cloudburst of last year, with the grave havoc and death toll which followed in its wake, you, my colleagues, will feel that for the time being the mountains of Kentucky belong to you.

To-day we are confronted with the tragic aftermath of this flood, and in the interest of and love for Kentucky may I not briefly sketch for you a picture of the situation which we find ourselves facing?

To go back to the early pioneer history of eastern Kentucky more than a hundred and forty years ago, the Virginians trekked across the Cumberlands and settled in the valleys along the Big and Little Sandy River and North Fork of the Kentucky. There they built their simple homes and although cut off from the outside world, because of the inaccessibility, lived a God-fearing and law-abiding people, in whose veins flows the purest Anglo-Saxon blood in all the world.

Suddenly, without warning, on the 29th of last May in the middle of the night, following two days of heavy rain, the creeks and rivers began to rise, and by midnight the tide of the Kentucky River was 75 feet high and came rushing down the valley carrying in its wake railroad tracks, bridges, fences, telephone and telegraph wires, houses, débris of all kinds, the most tragic shock being the toll of human lives—60 in four of my counties.

With never a murmur nor complaint, but with calm dignity and brave fortitude, as everlasting as life itself, our people in the stricken area began to carry on; and with the cooperation of thousands of sufferers, each aiding the other, we have gradually returned somewhat to normalcy. I want to mention here the magnificent work done by the American Red Cross and the unparalleled service rendered by the public health department of our State under the personal supervision of Dr. A. T. McCormack and his able assistants. Never in the history of any disaster, I venture to say, has there been given such splendid aid to a stricken community.

But there is one problem in which we must have aid if we are again to go forward in the onward march of civilization. I refer to the rebuilding of post roads and bridges.

I do not lose sight of the fact that under our Federal Constitution there are certain limitations beyond which Congress can not go and beyond which the burden must inevitably fall upon the locality. But with the present heavy bonded indebtedness of our counties we can not meet the damage to our post roads and bridges, and if aid is not given us we are put back at least 50 years. The very lifeblood is taken from us with our means of transportation and intercommunication crippled.

Not only is this a national problem from the standpoint of justice but it is the only practicable way it can be effectively and promptly handled.

You will recall that there was practically no publicity for our mountain flood last year outside of Kentucky, due to the overwhelming newspaper space demanded by the Mississippi flood. The visit of Secretary Hoover, accompanied by Mr. Fieser, of the American Red Cross, attracted quite a good deal of attention to it, however.

While I realize that it is unprecedented for the Federal Congress to build roads and bridges following any kind of a devastation, I feel that this grave national disaster justifies the passage of this amendment.

My people's confidence in the existing governmental instrumentality for handling this matter is not diminished, and I hope it will never be. The stricken counties have reached the end of their tether; they are staggering under a bonded indebtedness. To attempt to make them contribute would not only add a grievous burden to the people already sadly impoverished, but would cripple and render ineffective the progress already made earnestly, hopefully, staunchly, and prayerfully by the beloved and true people of the mountains.

The kind of spirit which has developed this land will carry it on, but if the Federal Government refuses to help them they will feel that the richest nation on earth is unwilling to help her own people, the Government for whom many of them have fought, bled, and died, and they will say: "This is our compensation. When our country needs help, we are eager to go forward and proffer it valiantly, but when we need help they refuse it. We not only gave of our wealth, our time, but of our lives, and our children and our children's children. Does not this fact alone warrant our being assisted when this need is imminent?"

The passage of this token of love given to her stricken children will be a sublime message of devotion and will inspire the hearts of all America with the realization that when grave disaster comes upon us America helps America's own. [Applause.]

> Deep in every loyal heart there burns a tiny flame,
> That glows with added brilliance at the mention of a name;
> Its tiny beams make light the path of weary feet that roam
> And brightens up the winding lane that leads to home, sweet home.

To live lives we leave behind us is not to die.

I earnestly plead, in behalf of Kentucky, Vermont, and New Hampshire, for the adoption of this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I only want to detain the House a moment. I am not against this amendment. I have no doubt but what there is a very great emergency in Vermont, New Hampshire, and Kentucky; and I have no doubt but what this amendment was thoroughly justified before the Senate Committee and before the conferees. I rise to congratulate the Representatives of Vermont, New Hampshire, and Kentucky upon their good fortune and upon their very great diligence both in the House and over in the Senate in securing favorable action upon this amendment and getting these appropriations to repair their roads.

I want to take occasion now, my fellow members, to say that while emergencies existed in these three States, we must not forget that emergencies in varying degrees existed in a number of other States of the Union and that instead of appropriations for caring for emergencies in three States there ought to have been a comprehensive bill reported to the House to take care of all emergencies in all the States because of the disastrous floods of 1927.

I had a similar bill for Oklahoma, H. R. 10800, providing a much smaller amount—to be exact, $230,000. I had an itemized statement that was prepared by the State Highway Engineer of Oklahoma showing in detail the exact damage done on every road in Oklahoma, which thoroughly justified, in my judgment, favorable action upon the bill which I had introduced to take care of the emergency in my State.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. In a moment. I made every effort I possibly could to secure a hearing before the Committee on Roads. Unfortunately, along about this time the chairman was ill, and I am therefore not complaining about it, but anyway, we did not get a hearing; we did not get favorable action, and the bill was not favorably reported out. I am not complaining particularly about that, but I do say that there were emergencies in other surrounding States like Arkansas and Missouri, as well as Oklahoma and some of the other States, and what we should have done and what we should have up now for consideration is a comprehensive bill that would take care of all emergencies where there was road and bridge damage as a result of the disastrous floods of 1927.

I did not want to permit this opportunity to pass without expressing my disappointment, I might say, not that these emergencies are cared for, because I am not complaining about that, but because all emergencies were not taken care of in a comprehensive bill.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MACGREGOR. The gentleman does not admit, of course, that the great State of Oklahoma, with its millions of wealth, could not pay for this small item of expense in the State of Oklahoma. Kentucky and Vermont are entirely different. There a great load was on a people who could not stand it. Down in Kentucky the people could not afford to build any more roads because all of their wealth had been exhausted.

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, if the gentleman would permit the Representatives to come in here now and over in the Senate and picture the distress and the poverty of their respective districts we would be shedding tears all over the House, and of course they would justify appropriations for these States; but I venture the assertion that if you went back to the great State of Kentucky or the imperial Commonwealths of Vermont or New Hampshire and then pictured the poverty of those great States, their splendid citizenship would resent it and they would all boast that their respective States are the greatest and the most prosperous States in all this Union. This appeal made here is for an appropriation from the Federal Treasury and has proved successful.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Oklahoma has some of the richest people in the world in it.

Mr. HASTINGS. We admit it. We have a great, resourceful State with a citizenship unexcelled. That argument is beside the question. What I am trying to point out, all similar emergencies should have been cared for and not just the three States of Vermont, New Hampshire, and Kentucky.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to delay any further the consideration of this measure, because I know the temper of the House. I know the House is in favor of the proposition.

I was a member of the committee that heard these measures, and they were given careful consideration and attention. I disagree with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] in his assumption that the Committee on Roads reported this on the ground of a gratuity.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. I did not make that statement at all. We are reporting it now on the ground of a gratuity.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit, so far as Kentucky is concerned I will say that our bill at all times has been bottomed upon the idea that it is a gratuity following a great national catastrophe which the local communities were unable to wholly care for.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. And I may say that the matter would not be here now being discussed on the floor if we had not accepted it as a gratuity.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the conference report accompanying H. R. 11577 (agriculture appropriation bill) contains the information that the committee of conference had not agreed to amendments 99 and 100 therein. The first amendment appropriated moneys for the relief of Vermont and New Hampshire in the restoration of certain portions of her road system damaged and destroyed by the floods of 1927. Amendment 100 relates to appropriation for Kentucky in the sum of $1,889,994 for the same purpose.

In virtue of the rules governing this body neither of these amendments could be agreed to in conference, but it is necessary to have the amendments submitted to the House for their action. This parliamentary condition obtains for the good reason that items added to an appropriation bill in the Senate which has not authority of law, to which a point of order in the House could have been successfully maintained, if the amendment had originated therein, must be reported back to the House and acted upon by it. This procedure has been followed and subsequent to the reading of the amendments in question, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with the following amendment:

For the relief of the following States as a contribution in aid from the United States, induced by the extraordinary conditions of necessity and emergency resulting from the unusually serious financial loss to such States through the damage to or destruction of roads and bridges by the floods of 1927, imposing a public charge against the property of said States far beyond its reasonable capacity to bear, and without acknowledgment of any liability on the part of the United States in connection with the restoration of such local improvements, namely: Vermont, $2,654,000; New Hampshire, $653,300; Kentucky, $1,889,994; in all, $5,197,294, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the sums hereby appropriated shall be expended by the State highway departments of the respective States, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, for the restoration, including relocation, of roads and bridges so damaged or destroyed in such manner as to give the largest measure of permanent relief, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided further, That the amount herein appropriated for each State shall be available when such State shall have or make available a like sum from State funds for the purposes contained herein.

In order that there may be a logical statement of the facts preceding this action of the House, I take the trouble to record chronologically the steps which have been followed in the enactment of this legislation:

THE HOUSE BILL

On February 6, 1928, my colleague, Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky, introduced H. R. 10565. Thereupon a hearing was held before the Committee on Roads, to which the bill had been referred on February 9, 1928, at which appeared the former Governor of Kentucky, W. J. Fields, Dr. A. T. McCormack, secretary of the State board of health of Kentucky, Judge Noah Bentley, county judge of Letcher County, and the various members of the Kentucky delegation. The bill was given a unanimous report by the committee on March 14, after having amended the bill in some particulars. The bill as amended and reported to the House reads as follows:

A bill to authorize an appropriation for the relief of the State of Kentucky on account of roads and bridges damaged or destroyed by the recent floods

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,889,994 for the relief of the State of Kentucky, to restore and recondition the roads and bridges damaged or destroyed by the floods in said State in the year of 1927: Provided, That any sums appropriated under this authorization shall be expended under the supervision and direction of the Department of Agriculture and Bureau of Public Roads in cooperation with the State highway department of the State of Kentucky: Provided further, That the amount herein authorized to be appropriated shall be available when the State of Kentucky shall make available a like sum, which shall be expended to restore and recondition said roads and bridges: Provided further, That not more than $3,000 per mile on any road and not more than $15,000 on any bridge shall be expended out of any funds appropriated under this act: Provided further, That no part of any sums appropriated under this act shall be expended for rights of way, or damages of any kind or character, or for engineering fees incurred by the State of Kentucky, or any subdivision thereof: And provided further, That no part of any sum appropriated under this act shall be expended for the restoration of any road, street, or highway within any incorporated town or city.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON ROADS

The unanimous report of the committee which was made by Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky, excluding the special reference to the amendments and the draft of the bill as amended, reads as follows:

This bill as amended provides an authorization of $1,889,994 for the relief of the State of Kentucky to assist in the restoration and reconditioning of the roads and bridges damaged or destroyed by unprecedented floods in said State in the year 1927.

It is provided that any sums appropriated under this authorization shall be spent under supervision and direction of the Department of Agriculture and Bureau of Public Roads in cooperation with the Kentucky State highway department; and further that the sums appropriated hereunder shall not be available unless and until the State of Kentucky shall make available a like sum to be expended in cooperation with the Federal Government.

The bill further provides, in accordance with the Federal road act, that not more than $3,000 per mile on any road and not more than $15,000 on any bridge shall be expended out of the Federal funds; and that no portion of the Federal appropriation shall be expended for rights of way, damage of any kind or character, or for engineering fees incurred by the State of Kentucky, or any subdivision thereof; with the further provision that none of the moneys authorized under this act shall be used in the restoration of any road, street, or highway within any incorporated town or city.

Thus it appears that the provisions of the bill follow the language of the Federal road act in respect of the expenditures of the money, excepting that none of the moneys authorized herein may be used within an incorporated town or city.

The flood disaster which hit Kentucky in 1927 did not receive the prominence and publicity which otherwise might have been its lot had it not occurred during the great Mississippi flood. It was the greatest catastrophe of any character that ever visited the State of Kentucky. The cloudburst in the mountains of Kentucky came without warning, in the night. The record shows an appalling situation. The Kentucky River, within a few hours, rose 75 feet above its normal level. Nothing could withstand its onslaught. Hundreds of houses were thrown from their foundations and relentlessly swept on with the flood. Homes, farm buildings, fencing, tillable soil on the hillsides, with the more fertile soil of the narrow bottoms, were swept away. Miles of railroad were destroyed, all other lines of communication totally wiped out, until it was four days subsequent to the catastrophe that its magnitude was given to the outside world.

Ninety-nine persons lost their lives, 401 bridges were swept away entirely or materially damaged. The minimum estimate made by Red Cross representatives for the road and bridge damage is some $3,000,000. Practically 2,500 miles of road were destroyed or materially damaged. Property damage, excluding a great amount of personal property, was $56,790,000. The bridges across the mountain streams having been washed away, hundreds of school children are unable to attend the school of their locality, and accessibility to their churches is likewise hindered. The mail service is tremendously impaired. The engineer from the State highway commission, together with a Federal engineer, have placed their approval upon the estimates submitted as the basis of this authorization. In many instances the estimates are based upon the cost of the roads and bridges in the first instance, whereas the cost of replacement will be materially greater. An emergency is shown to exist which justifies this legislation.

ACTION IN SENATE

It appeared that there would be some difficulty in securing a rule for the consideration of this legislation and the bill, having been objected to on the Consent Calendar, the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] on March 29 was successful in adding the House bill, in the language of an appropriation, to the agricultural appropriation bill, and that bill, with this item included, passed the Senate upon that day.

EXECUTIVE APPROVAL

At the time of its inclusion in the appropriation bill in the Senate the Kentucky item did not have the sanction of the Bureau of the Budget or of the Bureau of Roads. It had been thought by some that, being a legislative policy, it was not necessary to secure this indorsement. I had not subscribed to this suggestion, and after its passage in the Senate the Director of the Budget and the Chief of the Bureau of Roads were presented with the facts surrounding the disaster sought to be relieved in part and their approval secured.

CONFERENCE

In conference the amendment offered from the floor by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] was agreed to as the proper language that the amendment should contain, and the conference report was filed May 5.

STATEMENT BEFORE COMMITTEE

Under the leave granted me I include herewith a statement which I made before the Committee on Roads at the hearing on the bill:

STATEMENT OF HON. FRED M. VINSON, REPRESENTATIVE FROM THE STATE OF KENTUCKY

Mr. VINSON. I represent the ninth district of Kentucky, in eight counties of which the devastating flood of May 29–30, 1927, visited. As graphic and as eloquent as are the statements to which you have listened this morning, the story has never been told. Unless you are acquainted with our mountain country you can not get the picture.

Here it should be stated that in the floods to which reference has been made there were loss of life of 99 persons, bridges badly damaged or totally destroyed to a total of 401, roads badly damaged or totally destroyed aggregating 2,480 miles, a total damage to roads and bridges of more than $2,600,000, with the estimated property damage the stupendous sum of $56,790,000.

The eight counties of my district comprise about one-third of the flooded area; in it is one-third of the total bridges destroyed, one-third of the road mileage involved, and approximately one-third of the loss in life. In my district 24 persons were drowned, 111 bridges were badly damaged or totally washed away, 788 miles of road were likewise damaged or destroyed. The damage of roads and bridges was vastly in excess of $430,650, the amount presented in the estimates of the county officials under the O. K. of the State highway commission.

I repeat that unless one is acquainted with this section of country you can not visualize the damage wrought by this catastrophe. It came without warning in the stealth of the night. Nothing in that section ever approached this flood in its devastating effects upon life and property. Twenty-seven counties of Kentucky were involved in the flood calamity—6 counties in the first congressional district, 2 counties in the second, 2 counties in the seventh, 8 counties in the ninth, 8 counties in the tenth, and 1 county in the eleventh.

Last night a member of the Kentucky delegation not living in the flood area inquired about the damage to the completed roads wrought by the flood. He did not know that in the whole of the flood area in eastern Kentucky at the time of the flood surfaced roads did not exceed 6 miles. South of the Midland Trail, Federal Road No. 60, which runs across Kentucky between Ashland and Louisville, there are but 6 miles of surfaced road in the areas visited by the flood.

I was born in the mountains of Kentucky. I was reared in that hill country. I live there now as a matter of choice. I know something about the conditions that obtain there resultant from the flood and I know something about the characteristics of our people. Every word spoken relative to the inability to reach the school or the church of their locality because of the lack of bridges which were washed out in the flood is true. Further, I state to you that the estimates submitted to this committee from the mountain counties do not state the minimum damage. It is not fair to call their estimate a minimum, because it is below the minimum flood damage.

For illustration, the estimate from one county in my district—Morgan—submitted to me by my good friend C. P. Henry, county judge, shows that 56 bridges were badly damaged or totally destroyed and 323 miles of road likewise damaged. The total estimate to repair this damage is some $37,860—$30,000 for repairing the roads and $7,860 for repairing the bridges; and then appended to the report is a statement that this estimate is based upon free labor to do the job.

Mr. ROBSION. Do you mean that 56 bridges were destroyed?

Mr. VINSON. Fifty-six bridges badly damaged or destroyed and 323 miles of road thus affected.

I say to you that the hill people are a conscientious folk, and have not formed the habit of coming to the Federal father for aid and succor, and in that connection I say to you that there is no spot in the land where the people respect the Federal Government and love the flag more than those who reside among the Kentucky hills.

With your permission, I will discuss the fiscal affairs of the counties in my district within the flood area in connection with the damage sustained. I want to prove conclusively to you that these counties, because of certain legal limitations in our State constitutions, can not perform the task of reconstruction. I would show you the legal status of the State in respect to its inability to do this job.

ELLIOTT COUNTY

Take Elliott County as an illustration. Eight persons were drowned. They lost 5 large bridges, running from 70 to 200 feet in length, and reported 24 miles of road badly damaged or destroyed. Their estimate of loss for the bridges is $102,500; for the roads, $49,000—a total of $151,500. The loss to the bridges is below the minimum cost of replacing them. The Laurel Bridge, 200 feet in length, was washed away. The estimate to replace it is $50,000. The engineers from the State highway commission who are here now state that it would easily cost $75,000.

Relative to the roads, there are 2 miles of a road leading from their county seat which was totally destroyed. When I say totally destroyed I mean that every vestige of the road had disappeared. Ten miles of this road they report as badly damaged. It was in that section that Governor Fields in visiting the region was compelled to dismount from his horse and lead it along the precipices. We would call such a condition destroyed.

Elliott County had in 1920 a population of 8,887 people scattered over an area of 263 square miles. Its total assessed valuation for the year 1927 (as of July 1, 1926) was $1,473,494. The flood damage to property is reflected in the first recapitulation for 1928 (as of July 1, 1927), which gives the total assessed valuation at $1,315,796.

The total income from all sources for the year 1927 was $12,500. This total included a check of some $3,600 which the county received as its portion of the State truck fund. The amount of their road fund, exclusive of the truck check, is $5,500. The statement submitted to the committee shows that the total road indebtedness is $95,000, of which $41,000 is represented by bonds voted by its people. My information is—and if I am incorrect Governor Fields will point it out—a bond issue of $50,000 was voted in Elliott County.

Governor FIELDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. VINSON. When it came to selling these bonds the total assessed valuation would not permit the sale of all of them. In other words, the people voted more than they could legally issue. I believe I am safe in saying that this condition in respect to bond issues obtains in almost every county in the flood area.

MENIFEE COUNTY

I know that it obtains in Menifee County. There a bond issue for $50,000 was voted. Their total revenue is $8,400.40. In that county eight bridges were destroyed or badly damaged and 15 miles of road destroyed. The estimate of their damage is $15,350. This county has a population (1920 census) of 5,779, with an area of 203 square miles. The assessed valuation for 1927 was $1,173,920, with the first recapitulation for 1928, $1,076,587.

MORGAN COUNTY

There were 12 persons drowned in this county, 56 bridges badly damaged or destroyed, 323 miles of road damaged. It is a county having a population (1920) of 16,518, with an area of 365 square miles. The assessed valuation for 1927, $3,955,920, with the first recapitulation for 1928, $3,193,539. The total income from all sources, $23,000. The road fund, $3,500 per year. A road-bond issue of $200,000 was voted, but only $170,000 could be issued as valid securities, they having in addition a floating debt of $90,000. The estimate from this county called for $37,860, but in this amount it is shown that they contemplated the use of free labor in this work of rehabilitation.

Mr. MANLOVE. You say that those estimates come from the counties themselves?

Mr. VINSON. The county officials submitted the estimates. The State highway commission made a survey to see that these estimates were not in excess of the actual need. As I understand it, the State highway commission does not approve these estimates as being sufficient to do the job. Is that correct, Major Helburn?

Major HELBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANLOVE. But that undoubtedly is not in excess of the amount required.

Mr. VINSON. No; it is considerably less than the amount required. Referring again to the road bonds issued by this county, I submit that this expression at the polls in which bonds in excess of the constitutional amount permitted is voted is indicative of the road spirit which prevails in this section.

Mr. MANLOVE. You are in that section of the State which they call the lowlands?

Mr. VINSON. No; I am in the mountains. My home is in Lawrence County, which is situated in the northern part of the mountain section.

Mr. BRAND. You have to have just about as many roads in the poorer counties as in the rich?

Mr. VINSON. Yes, sir; and we need bridges more than in the lower levels of the State.

If you will visualize a deep chasm sometimes 50 feet in depth spanned by a bridge, the church and the school on the one side serves the community on the other. Then have the bridge washed off. You can not jump the creek or the river. Ofttimes you can not get to the creek in any conveyance. It is necessary to go around. Ofttimes it is necessary to go miles to reach the spot where you could have gone in just a few minutes if the bridge remained. Ofttimes it is a fast-moving stream; flood waters will come, and in such condition a passage is not possible, except attended with grave danger.

Mr. ALMON. You can not use ferries on streams like that?

Mr. VINSON. No; they are mountain streams, and you could not use ferries on them.

Major HELBURN. A short time ago a statement was made relative to the cost of roads in the mountain section. Let me say that in Perry County some of the through roads cost two or three times as much as they do in the lower levels.

Mr. VINSON. It is unquestionably more than it would be in the counties in the central portion of the State. If you have good roads, over which the road material may be transported, the cost is very much less, but when you have to haul road material 20 miles over a mountain trail to build a bridge that cost in itself mounts high.

BREATHITT COUNTY

Breathitt County gave up four persons in death as a result of this flood. There were six bridges and 80 miles of road damaged and destroyed. These bridges range in length from 100 to 250 feet, and the estimate submitted for the bridges is $92,000; the estimate for the roads, $80,000, making a total of $172,000.

This county in 1920 had a population of 20,614; its area composed of 483 square miles. The assessed valuation of its property for 1927, $4,160,668. The first recapitulation for 1928 was $3,464,830. I do not have the exact amount of its annual income and its indebtedness, but I do not hesitate to say that it has voted road bonds up to the full amount permitted by law.

ROWAN COUNTY

Rowan County had a population in 1920 of 9,467 persons, with an area of 272 square miles. The estimate submitted in the report is the sum of $20,400 to replace one bridge at Clearfield and 30 miles of road. Seventeen miles of road was totally destroyed and 5 miles practically destroyed. The total income of this county was $18,800 for 1927, of which amount it allocated $4,000 to the road fund, which included a State truck check of around $3,000. Its floating indebtedness is only $10,000, which was created to expend on the roads and bridges damaged by the flood. The assessed valuation for Rowan County for 1927, $3,115,499, with practically the same amount for 1928. Road bonds voted in this county total $150,000. This county has a bond issue, which is only limited by the constitutional prohibition as to amount.

WOLFE COUNTY

This estimate submitted in the sum of $7,000, of which amount $2,000 was to replace two bridges, and the remainder, $5,000, was to repair and replace 25 miles of road. In this county they have a bond issue which is only limited by the constitutional prohibition as to amount. The assessed valuation for 1927 for this county, $1,819,481; the first recapitulation for 1928, $1,419,658. Wolfe County had (1920 census) population of 8,783 with an area of 230 square miles.

CARTER COUNTY

Officials from this county submit an estimate of $35,000 to replace or repair 100 miles of road at the rate of $300 per mile, together with 25 small bridges at an average cost of $200 each. The assessed valuation of Carter County for 1927 was $6,847,569. The first recapitulation for 1928, $5,987,545. Its population (1920 census) was 22,474; its area, 413 square miles. Many years ago they voted a road bond issue, and in recent years, as I recall it, they have voted two additional bond issues for use in the construction of roads. They are up to the constitutional limit.

LAWRENCE COUNTY

The officials in this county submitted an estimate of $13,500 to take care of 6 bridges and 25 miles of road. The total revenue from all sources in this county is $110,000 per year, with a road and bridge fund of $20,000, floating debt of $37,000, and road bonds in the amount of $250,000. The assessed valuation of Lawrence County in 1927 was $7,022,635; first recapitulation, 1928, $6,055,721. Population in 1920 was 17,643, and it covers an area of 422 square miles.

You have heard Major Helburn, of the State highway commission, say that the State will expend $10,000,000 in this flood area within the next few years. The question has been asked here, why can't the State bear this entire burden. In the past eight years there has been a road-building campaign carried on in Kentucky. This is evidenced by the fact that more than 90 counties in Kentucky have voted a bond issue in order to contribute the proceeds thereof to the State for road-building purposes. In practically all these counties the State has either spent three times as much money as the county voted or has promised to expend State funds upon a 3–1 basis, and the funds of the State under these pledges have been allocated for the next several years.

Then there is the constitutional limitation of the State indebtedness. This prohibits the issual of State bonds to meet this emergency. Many of these roads are not on the State highway system, which precludes the expenditure of State funds upon them. I take it that the legislature now in session will look to that end as well as the other legislation necessary to permit the State to do the things required under this bill ere Federal contribution can be had.

My friends, I want to close my remarks by reading an editorial from the Jackson Times, published in Jackson, Ky. Breathitt County is in my district; it possesses a fine type of manhood and womanhood. This editorial, I state to you, is typical of the spirit which prevailed in that section of the country when the friends from the lowlands extended a neighborly hand to their friends of the highlands. This editorial is typical of the minds and the hearts of the Kentucky people.

It is dated June 10, following closely after the flood.

Doctor MCCORMACK. Eight days later.

Mr. VINSON. It is headed, "We thank you." The body of the editorial reads as follows:

"WE THANK YOU

"We Kentuckians in the mountains are grateful to you Kentuckians of the lowlands. You heard our cries of distress and sorrow after our beloved Kentucky River had changed from a limpid, sullen stream and transformed into a raging torrent of might and destruction almost in the twinkling of an eye. The hundred cries of frightened children, the pathetic moans of frantic women, the apprehensive words of anxious men, reached your ears almost as soon as the murky waters receded and left a filthy offering of mud and slime.

"We did not ask for help and you gave it; you gave it. You soothed our sorrows with your sympathy; you matched our every tear with a dollar; you forever dispelled the idea of a Kentucky of four parts with a spontaneous balm of helpfulness and sympathetic interest.

"We are a grateful people and we do not forget; we may be down now but we will pull out. We will stay on our road of progress, however difficult and tortuous the way may seem for a little while.

"We are bearing our burdens as only Kentuckians can. You are making our burdens lighter as only Kentuckians can. We are offering our thanks in that same spirit and know that you will accept and understand."

This is a condition that confronts us. In the language of this editorial, emanating from the heart of the Kentucky mountains, we say to this committee, and we will say to the Congress of the United States, when you heed our cry and answer our call, "We thank you." [Applause.]

AN ACT OF GRACE

Some question has been raised relative to this legislation being bottomed upon a legal basis. I have never attempted to deceive anyone, let alone myself, as to the basis of this appropriation. It is a gratuity, an act of grace. An unprecedented calamity befell a portion of this country and, as ever, the Federal Government responded to the call for help. I submit that it is not a precedent on the part of the Federal Government in the contribution of public moneys to relieve the distressed condition of its people. This is a precedent only in respect to the manner in which the money is to be expended.

It is a precedent for Kentucky—99 lives lost, 401 bridges destroyed, 2,481 miles of road destroyed, $56,000,000 worth of property destroyed; a large section of the State unable to replace the bridges constructed over a period of 50 years; it is the first time that Kentucky has called for help. In so doing her Representatives do not feel that it is charity. An area of 9,000 square miles felt the destroying touch of this unprecedented catastrophe; a half million people live within that area, with homes destroyed, with farms washed away, with the children unable to attend church or school when it be situate on the other side of the mountain stream. As a Representative of nine counties in the flooded area I feel no shame in asking your consideration of this plea for help. The State Legislature of Kentucky has appropriated funds to match dollar for dollar the Federal appropriation. The appropriation is without legislative authority except in so far as your action authorizes it, but it is not a charity. It is justice to a deserving people.

The quality of mercy is not strained;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven.

Mr. WARREN. I assume the States involved will accept it in any way they get it, but my reason for voting to report the bill favorably from the committee was that it is a duty of the Federal Government to replace these roads that have been destroyed by disasters.

Now, commenting on the remarks made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], I wish to say that at the very beginning of this session a general bill was introduced to take care of this situation and to set up an emergency fund of $10,000,000 always to be available to replace Federal-aid roads and bridges that might be destroyed by a disaster in any State. This bill has been indorsed by the bureau and by the State highway commissions of 36 States. A hearing at one time was ordered on it and then suddenly called off, and the only conclusion that I could arrive at as to why it was called off was that it was becoming too popular and they did not want a member of the minority to have a bill of this kind reported out that would be adopted by the House if it ever came to a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 100: Page 82, after line 7, insert the following:

"FLOOD RELIEF, KENTUCKY

"For the relief of the State of Kentucky, to restore and recondition the roads and bridges damaged or destroyed by the floods in said State in the year of 1927, the sum of $1,889,994: Provided, That any sums hereby appropriated shall be expended under the supervision and direction of the Department of Agriculture and Bureau of Public Roads in cooperation with the State Highway Department of the State of Kentucky: Provided further, That the amount herein appropriated shall be available when the State of Kentucky shall make available a like sum, which shall be expended to restore and recondition said roads and bridges: Provided further, That not more than $3,000 per mile on any road and not more than $15,000 on any bridge shall be expended out of the funds hereby appropriated: Provided further, That no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be expended for rights of way, or damages of any kind or character, or for engineering fees incurred by the State of Kentucky, or any division thereof, or for the restoration of any road, street, or highway within any incorporated town or city."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 102: Page 83, line 15, strike out $132,488,849.88 and insert "$139,469,738.88."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$139,138,793.88."

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some misunderstanding as to the House insisting on its disagreement to amendment 100. I want to say that that is the Kentucky item, and it is included in amendment 99, which also provides for Vermont and New Hampshire. The Senate will recede from the Kentucky amendment and accept ours.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Amendment No. 99 has still to be adopted by the Senate?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Yes; it has to be agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. KINCHELOE. It will not have to be further agreed to by the Senate conferees?

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. No.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including a statement with reference to the various items in this bill, giving complete data as to the different items in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CHRISTINE BRENZINGER

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5297, for the relief of Christine Brenzinger, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 5297 and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read and agreed to.

SHOSHONE INDIANS

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill S. 710 for printing in the RECORD under the rule.

POST OFFICE AT PHILIPPI, W. VA.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10799) for the lease of land and the erection of a post office at Philippi, W. Va., and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10799) and agree to the Senate amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was read.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 12875, the legislative appropriation bill, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio calls up the conference report on the legislative appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12875) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 39 and 45.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 41, and 44, and agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 42, 43, and 46.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12875) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and embodied in the accompanying conference report, as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendments Nos. 1 to 33, inclusive: Inserts figures, as proposed by the Senate, making salary increases for certain employees in the Senate in the offices of the Vice President, Secretary, certain committee clerks, post office, and the folding room.

On Nos. 34 to 38, inclusive: Inserts figures, as proposed by the Senate, allowing increases in certain Senate contingent expense items.

On No. 39: Strikes out the language, as proposed by the Senate, allowing reimbursement for expenses of travel of certain clerks.

On Nos. 40 and 41: Inserts figures, as proposed by the Senate, allowing a salary increase for the Architect of the Capitol.

On No. 44: Inserts figures, as proposed by the Senate, allowing an increase of $2,000 in the fund for maintenance, Senate Office Building, for the purpose of repairing the roof.

On No. 45: Strikes out the language, as proposed by the Senate, relative to the compensation rates for employees on leave in the Government Printing Office.

The committee of conference have not agreed to the following amendments:

On No. 42: Transferring an amendment, as proposed by the Senate, with reference to the submission of bids to the Architect of the Capitol in connection with the appropriation for improving the ventilating system of the Senate Chamber and the Hall of the House of Representatives to the appropriation as inserted by the Senate for rearranging and reconstructing the Senate wing of the Capitol.

On No. 43: Inserting language, as provided by the Senate, obviating sections 3709 and 3744 of the Revised Statutes, having to do with the submission and acceptance of bids with reference to the appropriation for improving the ventilating system of the Senate Chamber and the Hall of the House of Representatives.

On No. 46: Inserting language, as proposed by the Senate, making applicable to the Government Printing Office section 91, chapter 5, title 20, of the Code of Laws of the United States, permitting the employment of individuals for scientific purposes.

FRANK MURPHY,
GEO. A. WELSH,
WM. P. HOLADAY,
JOHN N. SANDLIN,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 42: Page 25, line 1, insert: "Senate wing reconstruction: To rearrange and reconstruct the Senate wing of the Capitol in accordance with the report of the Architect of the Capitol contained in Senate Document No. 161, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, with such alterations as the Senate Committee on Rules may from time to time approve, to be immediately available, and to remain available until June 30, 1930, $500,000, to be expended by the Architect of the Capitol, under the direction and supervision of the said Committee on Rules."

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MURPHY moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of Senate No. 42, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: After the word "'Rules," on page 25, line 9, insert the following: ", without compliance with sections 3709 and 3744 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: Provided, That the Architect of the Capitol is authorized, within the appropriation herein made, to enter into such contracts in the market, to make such expenditures (including expenditures for furniture, material, supplies, equipment, accessories, advertising, travel, and subsistence), and to employ such professional and other assistants without regard to the provisions of section 35 of the public buildings omnibus act, approved June 25, 1910, as amended, as may be approved by such committee."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 43: Page 25, line 24, after the word "Capitol," insert: "Without compliance with sections 3709 and 3744 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: Provided, That in carrying out the reconstruction and ventilation of the Senate Chamber and House of Representatives, the Architect of the Capitol is authorized, within the appropriation herein made, to enter into such contracts in the open market, to make such expenditures (including expenditures for furniture, material, supplies, equipment, accessories, advertising, travel, and subsistence), and to employ such professional and other assistants without regard to the provisions of section 35 of the public buildings omnibus act, approved June 25, 1910, as amended, as may be approved by such committee."

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MURPHY moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 43 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the language as proposed by the Senate insert the following: "Without compliance with sections 3709 and 3744 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the adoption of this amendment leaves the situation somewhat inconsistent. If the Senate is going to move their Chamber out to the wall, will we not have to do it on this side of the Capitol in the same way? [Applause.] There is an item in the bill of $300,000 for putting more air in here, I suppose also to take out some of the hot air, but this expenditure of $500,000 on the part of the Senate in moving its Chamber to the wall, it seems to me will destroy the architectural effect of the Capitol.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But it can not be seen on the outside.

Mr. CLARKE. The gentleman will admit that there is a difference in the air in the Senate Chamber and the air in this Chamber?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes; I admit that the air here is somewhat better.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, the remarks made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR] do not need any reply. He is voicing an opinion, which he has a perfect right to give. I have no explanation to make further than to say that if the Members of the Senate seek to improve conditions and by improving those conditions hope to prolong the life of those who are now Members of that body, it would certainly be very bad taste upon the part of the Members of the House not to allow them to do so.

Mr. NEWTON. Does the gentleman think that this amendment will improve conditions at the other end of the Capitol?

Mr. MURPHY. It is hoped so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SNELL. By better air or better what?

Mr. MURPHY. Better everything.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 46: Page 39, after line 14, insert: "Section 91, chapter 5, title 20, of the Code of Laws of the United States is hereby amended so as to include and apply to the Government Printing Office."

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

COORDINATION OF PUBLIC-HEALTH ACTIVITIES

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 11026) to provide for the coordination of the public-health activities of the Government, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statements be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan calls up a conference report and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11026) to provide for the coordination of the public-health activities of the Government, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 14.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That the term of service of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall be for four years: And provided further, That no person who has served for a period of eight years either before or after the passage of this act shall be eligible for reappointment as Surgeon General"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES S. PARKER,
CARL E. MAPES,
CLARENCE F. LEA,
Managers on the part of the House.
W. L. JONES,
CHAS L. MCNARY,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 11026) to provide for the coordination of the public-health activities, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and embodied in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On amendments of the Senate Nos. 1 to 13 and Nos. 16 to 21, inclusive, are either formal or clarifying amendments or amendments limiting or making more specific some of the provisions of the House bill. They do not affect the general purpose of the legislation and for the most part are in accord with it, some of them being already covered by the regulations of the Public Health Service.

On amendment No. 14, from which the Senate recedes, struck out the provision of the House bill permitting the appointment of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service from outside of the service in the discretion of the President. The conferees are of the opinion that the President should not be confined to the service in making his selection for this important position but should be permitted, in his discretion, to select anyone specially qualified for the position.

On amendment No. 15: The House recedes from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 15 and agrees to the same with an amendment. The conferees agree to the amendment fixing the term of the Surgeon General to four years and providing that no person shall be eligible for reappointment who has served as Surgeon General for a period of eight years. This will not affect the present term of the present Surgeon General but will apply hereafter. The conferees struck out the language in the amendment which seemed to contemplate that the Surgeon General might be relieved before the completion of the term for which he might be appointed.

JAMES S. PARKER,
CARL E. MAPES,
CLARENCE F. LEA,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF EMERGENCY OFFICERS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 188

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 777, an act making eligible for retirement, under certain conditions, officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed five hours, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes provisions for the consideration of the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill for the retirement of emergency officers of the late war. I do not think the bill needs any introduction by me to the Members of this House or to the American people. The bill is controversial. For that reason the rule provides for five hours of general debate. Some of those who have been most interested in advancing legislation for the soldiers of the late war are opposed to this bill. They desire to have full discussion of it. On account of the long time for general debate, I do not intend to take any more time at present in the discussion of the rule, but yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I think the membership of the House ought to be here to hear this argument on the rule. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 76]

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and twenty-nine Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I am so earnestly in favor of the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill that I do not feel like consuming the time of the House, and I shall only do so for a very few moments.

In the first place, we should bear in mind that we are dealing with wounded officers, about 3,000 in number. The bill concerns not, of course, all of the men who were drafted into the service, but it provides for the retirement only of the wounded emergency officers of the World War.

Objection is made because the bill does not provide equal treatment for all who were drafted from civil life. This objection could be made to the pay these men received during the war. Some were officers, others could not be officers. The salary of the officers always has been and probably always will be larger than the pay of the enlisted men.

I believe the enlisted man wishes his officer from civil life—that is, the wounded officer—treated exactly as the officer of the same grade from the Regular Army is treated. I do not admit that there is any precedent which ought now to govern America in dealing with the men who saved the civilization of the world. [Applause.] The World War has no precedent or parallel in the history of mankind, and, for my part, I shall not be governed by precedent in dealing with the men who were drafted into the service. It will be difficult for America to discharge the debt of gratitude she owes to these men, no matter what she does. I have been told that amendments would be offered to this bill for the purpose of killing it. I believe an overwhelming majority of this House favors this legislation. For one, as a friend of the bill, I shall vote against all such amendments. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I think no mistake will be made in putting the wounded officers from civil life on an equality with the wounded officers of the Regular Army. It is easily conceivable how the officer from civil life may have made even greater sacrifice for his country than the officer of the Regular Army. This bill treats them all equally. There should be no partiality shown to either class.

Of course, all who saw service offered their all for their country; but it is also true that the officers and soldiers of the Regular Army were pursuing their life work. The casualties among the junior officers particularly were very, very large.

A friend of mine, Mr. Sterling J. Joyner, now in this city, had a conversation last summer in a club in Paris with three of the French generals, outstanding generals in the French Army—General Petain, General Neville, and General Foch. In discussing the American soldiers this gentleman asked General Neville, "Just what do you think of the American soldiers and the part they took in the World War? How were they as soldiers?" He paused a moment, and then said, "I tell you, never in the history of the world have finer soldiers stood in the ranks of war. The only criticism I would make of them is that they were too careless of danger." [Applause.]

And that is the reason—that is one reason—why we are here to-day dealing with a measure which concerns so many wounded officers of the World War. They were not men who said, "Go." They were men who said, "Follow me." And for that reason the casualties among them were very large.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not take up more time of the House. I believe the House desires the opportunity to vote on this measure. It has passed the Senate time and time again. Consideration has been put off, lo, these many years. The American Legion has indorsed it time and time again. I believe the people of America are behind this bill, and I believe the House will do itself credit by passing the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it has been my pleasure to support every item of legislation which has been brought before the House of Representatives in behalf of the disabled service men of the World War, except the rider placed on the appropriation bill by the Senate in 1920 which discriminated between officers and privates in the naval service and Marine Corps. Upon this, as I shall later show, there was no opportunity for an independent vote.

I have friends, political and personal, who have most earnestly and persistently urged me to support the pending bill. I do not recall ever having had more pressure brought upon me in behalf of any measure than has been for this one. Letters and telegrams have flooded my desk, not only from my State but from the entire country, and in numerous personal contacts I have been urged to vote for it.

I should be less than frank did I fail to admit the embarrassment which these requests and—I may say in some instances—demands have caused me. But I have been unable to reconcile myself to the support of the principle involved in the bill, and I wish briefly to state the reasons for my position.

First, let us see just what the bill is. It is designated in common parlance as the World War emergency officers' retirement bill. I think, however, that no frank advocate of the measure who really understands it will claim that it is anything other than a proposal to establish a system whereby disabled men of the World War who were officers will receive compensation—which up to the World War was called "pension"—according to rank. It is a pension bill based upon rank.

Under the terms of the bill emergency officers with a 30 per cent disability will receive compensation for life as follows:

Brigadier general	$375.00
Colonel	250.00
Lieutenant colonel	218.75
Major	187.50
Captain	150.00
First lieutenant	125.00
Second lieutenant	93.75

The ordinary enlisted man with a 30 per cent disability will continue to receive just $30 per month.

It is needless to say to those familiar with the pension laws of the past and present that this proposal is one which will completely change the traditional national policy of preserving equality in the volunteer and emergency armies, so far as pension or compensation is concerned.

No one can tell what the cost will be with any fair degree of accuracy, but I am not now worrying about the matter of cost. The principle involved causes the question of cost to pale into insignificance.

Let me first direct attention to the discrimination which the bill makes among the officers themselves.

The changed compensation will apply only to those officers who have a permanent disability of at least 30 per cent. Those officers who have less than 30 per cent will continue to draw on an exact equality with the private. Why should this be if we are to change the national policy and grant pension based upon rank?

We understand perfectly well what it will eventuate in. At next Congress the officers who are less than 30 per cent disabled will demand that this discrimination be removed and that their compensation be also based upon rank. If I were a supporter of this bill I can think of no legitimate reason why, should I be a Member of that Congress, I could refuse to support such a demand.

I learn from the minority report that this bill will favor 3,297 emergency officers whose disability is 30 per cent and above and will leave 6,972 emergency officers whose disability is less than 30 per cent upon the same basis of compensation as the enlisted man. It is further stated therein that there are 69,386 enlisted men who are disabled to the same degree as the 3,297 emergency officers who are to benefit and 173,842 whose disabilities are rated at less than 30 per cent permanent.

Second, let us look to the situation as regards the dependents of those officers who were killed or died in the service and since the war. This bill makes no provision to change their situation. The dependents of those dead officers will continue to draw compensation upon equality with the dependents of privates.

If we are to change the national policy and base compensation upon rank, should we not think of the dependents of the dead as well as the votes of the living? [Applause.]

These two glaring discriminations as between the emergency officers themselves seem to me to condemn the bill.

But it is urged that Congress is only being asked to place the emergency officers upon the same basis as officers of the Regular Army, and it must be said that this has doubtless been the most appealing argument or plea which has been advanced to the enlisted men to secure their indorsement of this measure. They have been asked at their Legion meetings, "Do you not feel that your officer who went out as you did from civil life should be treated as well as the Regular Army officer?" and it was the most natural thing in the world for the enlisted man to answer "Yes." In nine cases out of ten, I dare say, the enlisted man never gave consideration to the great question of national policy involved. He compared his emergency officer, whom he may have loved, with the Regular Army officer, whom he may not have loved so much, and compared them as officers. He did not, for the moment, think to compare the emergency officer with himself on the basis of citizenship. The enlisted man will come to think of this bye and bye, and just what, I wonder, is he going to say to us when he does? I believe I know. He is going to say, "Those emergency officers and I went out from civil life together. We sacrified our businesses alike; we took the same hazard; we suffered the same tortures; we returned together to civil life and became equal again in the great mass of American democracy, equal in rights before the law, though for a time that man was an officer and I a private in the ranks." And when the enlisted men have worked this out in their minds they are going to cry out in bitterness, "Our Congress has done an undemocratic thing; they have overturned the traditions of our national life lasting down through a century and a half; they have discriminated between citizens, civilians now, if you please; they have engrafted a new principle upon the practice of the Republic; they have for the first time exalted rank!" [Applause.]

But let us see, for a moment, about the retirement of the officers of the Regular Army.

That system was instituted long before any Member of this Congress sat upon this floor. But we sitting here now can at least comprehend the reason which prompted our long ago predecessors to adopt it as a governmental policy, although it may not be popular as a campaign shibboleth.

We can imagine the early proponents of the system arguing in about the following language: "Ours is not a military Nation. God forbid that it shall ever become so. We maintain but a small standing Army, but we have to have officers for this Army and good ones. Those who become officers in the Regular Army, whether by way of West Point, as most of them do, or from the ranks, as sometimes happens, are men who make this their life work, their profession. They have no other avocation. Rare indeed does the opportunity present itself for one of them to accumulate financial means. We have to have them and, in order to have them competent and efficient, their life must be devoted to the profession. Naturally provision must be made for them when their period of usefulness has passed. The private in the Regular Army enlists for a brief period and at its end is at liberty to return again to civil life, and become again of its democracy."

As to whether the logic of the argument was entirely sound there may yet be some difference of opinion, but be that as it may, the system then adopted has come down to us through many, many years, without serious effort on the part of any Congress, so far as I am aware, to abolish or materially change it.

So much for the Regular Army comparison. I submit the practice furnishes no precedent for this proposed bill.

But the insistence is made that a precedent is to be found in the treatment which has been accorded disabled officers of the Navy and Marine Corps. Let us see exactly what has been done in that regard, and how it was done.

When the naval appropriation bill of 1920, as it had passed the House, was under consideration in the Senate, an amendment was adopted by that body which carried legislation upon this subject.

It will be recalled that at the time the Budget system had not been adopted, nor had the present rule of the House been applicable to legislation upon appropriation bills. It therefore frequently happened in those days that the Senate would put legislative riders upon the supply bills, and it was within the power of the House conferees to accept such riders and make them an integral part of the conference report without returning to the House for a separate vote upon them as is now required.

That happened in this instance, and the conference report, which was a very long one covering many matters, carried this provision:

That all officers of the Naval Reserve Force and temporary officers of the Navy who have heretofore incurred or may hereafter incur physical disability in line of duty shall be eligible for retirement under the same conditions as now provided by law for officers of the regular Navy who have incurred physical disability in line of duty. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 2d sess., vol. 59, pt. 8, p. 8092.)

In the Sixty-seventh Congress—act of July 12, 1921—there was a repeal of this law in the following manner:

The Senate again attached a legislative rider to the appropriation bill dealing with this subject, and as agreed to by the conferees the language was the same as above quoted, but at the end there was added the following:

Provided, however, That application for such retirement shall be filed with the Secretary of the Navy not later than October 1, 1921.

There has been no further general legislation upon the subject.

It will be seen, therefore, that the law permitting this discrimination between the naval and marine emergency officers and the enlisted men of those organizations was in effect for just 15 months.

It will further be seen that this legislation was never considered by the House, or so far as the records show, by any committee of the House, as an independent piece of legislation. Both times it was placed upon the naval appropriation bill by the Senate as a rider, and came in the conference report, which under the rules had to be voted upon as a whole and without amendment.

The proviso inserted in the 1921 act acted as a repeal of the law of 1920, as of date October 1, 1921, and is the last expression of Congress upon the subject.

I am indebted to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS], one of the distinguished ex-service men of the House who is opposing this legislation, for the information that during the 15 months the law was in operation there were retired under its provisions 228 naval officers and 56 marine officers, and he further informs me of the significant fact that each and every one of these 284 men was in the service at the time he was retired.

The emergency Army officers whom it is proposed to favor by this bill were discharged long ago and are now in civil life. The naval and marine officers who benefited by the legislation quoted were retired from the service itself.

I doubt if this fact has been known to any considerable number of the emergency Army officers and their friends who have so earnestly appealed for this discriminatory legislation. They have honestly thought that a precedent had been set, when, as a matter of fact, Congress actually repealed the law by limiting its tenure to October 1, 1921. And so whatever of precedent there was has been wiped out, and we are at liberty to consider the legislation upon its merits alone.

I may say in passing that it is proposed in this bill to restore the naval and marine officers to the status they had for the 15-month period, and that is quite logical from the standpoint of those who favor discrimination between officers and enlisted men.

I return now to the principle underlying the proposed legislation. Ours is a democratic government founded upon a constitution designed to insure equality before the law. True to the fundamental spirit of such a Nation we have never maintained a large standing Army. When we have had to defend ourselves with arms we have drawn our soldiers from civil life. It was their own country they were asked to defend—theirs in possession and their children's in heritage. They have never failed to respond and lift the sword of America to the heavens as it shimmered with glory in the sunlight—the fine sharp sword of democracy. [Applause.] Some became officers, most remained privates. At the end of each emergency those who survived returned to civil life and the every-day duties of the work-a-day world, and officer and man, released from the necessary rigors of military discipline and relations, became again equal as citizens.

Two young men went forth from the same town, the same business house, the same law office, the same farm. One became an officer, the other a private. They suffered alike; they were wounded upon the same battle field or contracted the same dread malady in the service. They were discharged together. Together they went back to the same business house or law office or farm, and to the extent that their physical condition admitted reengaged in the work of life. Do you tell me that I can by any process of reasoning justify voting to give one of them $150 per month and the other only $30 as compensation for the disability each suffered? I have been unable to find the justification.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I know, Mr. Speaker, it is now and then hinted privately that there must have been some sort of mental superiority in those who became officers. This is never publicly urged, but privately it will be said many of them made greater sacrifices of business, and so forth, than did the privates. There may be instances in which this was true, but after all, sir, each sacrificed his all, each offered his all, each dared his all. I submit that Congress can not search among the 4,000,000 men called to the colors and reach any just conclusion as to relative sacrifices and sufferings.

Remember this principle of retirement was not adopted for emergency officers of the Spanish War, the Civil War, the Mexican War, the War of 1812, or the Revolutionary War. It has remained to be demanded for the first time now. Are we ceasing to be a democratic Republic?

I trust no one will for a moment entertain the thought that I speak with any feeling toward the emergency officers save one of profoundest respect and gratitude. I should be most happy to support the bill did I not feel the principle involved to be inconsistent with the very fundamentals of our democratic Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON]. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I will start exactly where my distinguished friend left off. He referred to two young men going out from the same town, suffering the same hardships, coming back, and one being discriminated against in favor of the other. That is exactly what inspired me to introduce the first bill looking to this relief, the first one that was ever conceived or ever introduced into this Congress.

Two young men in business in the same block in a neighboring town, but not in my district, went to a training camp together; they were trained together; they were graduated as second lieutenants together, and they went to France together; but one took his commission as a provisional lieutenant in the Regular Army, and the other took his commission in the National Army. In the course of that terrible conflict the man who took his commission in the National Army, on the 8th of November, just before the armistice, in leading his men to the front, as he had been doing ever since the push began, lost his right arm and was disabled in such a way that he could not follow his occupation in life. The young man who took his commission as a provisional lieutenant in the Regular Army was assigned, I believe, to the Quartermaster's Department, and he had the misfortune to fall off a truck and injure his knee, and he came home with a stiff knee. I was called on by friends of the young man who had lost his arm and who was at Walter Reed Hospital to go out to see him, and, being a friend of his people and of himself, I went out to see him, and then I found they were both there. But what was the situation? The young man with the right arm gone, the young man who had been facing German bullets while the other was in the Quartermaster's Department, was receiving compensation at the rate of $15 a month for the loss of his right arm, while the other was eligible for retirement, and did retire, at $125 a month for a stiff knee.

Now, when you talk about equality you must look at both ends of the proposition. [Applause.] Gentlemen, you can not require absolute and rigid equality when you come to deal with human rights, human passions, and human suffering.

You have got to remember that there is humanity in us and in the people of this country. I came back here and introduced the bill H. R. 6688, in the Sixty-sixth Congress, providing:

That any officer who has served in the military forces of the United States during the war with Germany and who does not belong to the Regular Army shall have the right, provided they have incurred disabilities while in the service during the said war, to be retired on the same terms and on the same compensation as like officers of the Regular Army.

I asked for equality between that young man with his right arm gone and the young fellow with a stiff knee.

What did I meet? They said, "It will never do to retire such men; the retired list is a sacred list, in which are written only the immortals who belonged to the Regular Army, and we can not have that." I said, "All right, give us the same compensation," and I introduced H. R. 10835, which provided:

That any officer who has served in the military forces of the United States during the war with Germany and who does not belong to the Regular Army and who incurred disabilities while in the service during the said war, shall be entitled to the same compensation as like officers of the Regular Army receive on being retired for an equal disability.

In other words, I did not put them on the retired list, but I gave them a square deal, and that is all I asked.

In the next Congress I introduced the bill again, got a favorable report, and got a rule for its consideration, which Hon. Philip P. Campbell, then of Kansas, kept in his pocket until Congress adjourned. This is what was known as a pocket veto. The bill was numbered 15804 and the report was No. 1284, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session. Then the Veterans' Committee was appointed and I surrendered the field to it, but have never lost interest in the subject and take great pleasure in its prospective passage.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I might well say, as the gentleman from South Carolina said when taking the floor, that he would begin where the gentleman from Tennessee left off, that I also might well begin where the gentleman from South Carolina left off. The gentleman from South Carolina described very feelingly how he found on two cots in the Walter Reed Hospital a Regular Army officer and an emergency officer. I should like to pass on with him to the next cot where we should probably find a private soldier who had left home at the same time as the other two, who had endured the same service, and who had incurred the same disability. Then I should like to make the same comparison between the emergency officer and the enlisted man that the gentleman from Tennessee so eloquently and so convincingly made as he emphasized the discriminatory features of this bill in its present form.

I am very glad to take the time that I shall use in speaking on this bill on the adoption of the rule, because one suggestion I shall make bears directly upon the proper procedure in the consideration of the bill. Rather than vote the bill up or vote it down I think the best course to pursue now is to recommit the bill to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation for a very thorough and drastic revision, eliminating its most glaringly discriminatory features. It is a most unpleasant duty for any of us to be forced to vote against a bill providing compensation for disabled soldiers. We have not been in the habit of doing that in this House, but on the contrary where the disabled soldier is affected we have all vied with each other in making a generous response to his needs. I say that it is a very disagreeable duty, if it should become such, for anybody to vote against reasonable compensation for disabled soldiers, and so we have voted with gladness and satisfaction for such compensation when the occasion has been presented to us.

In this instance, however, as this bill now reads, in order to vote for compensation, justifiable in some instances, we must vote for compensation which is not justified for others if measured by the same standards.

As the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] so thoroughly demonstrated, this is not in any sense a retirement proposition. Retired from what? These former officers are not now in the service, and most of them have not been for about nine years. They are all in civil life again, most of them back at their old vocations. By no legitimate stretch of the imagination can this bill be called a retirement bill. It is purely and simply a disability service pension. But on what is it based? Purely on rank and nothing else. It is certainly not based on the degree of the disability suffered. Under this bill the second lieutenant suffering from a disability of 30 per cent receives $93.75 per month, as I am informed. The second lieutenant with a total disability receives no more, just $93.75. Is this fair? A colonel having incurred a 30 per cent disability will be placed on the compensation roll for life at $250 per month. He may recover his health completely, but there is no way provided in this bill for ever getting his name off the pay roll. And what about another colonel? I have one now in mind. One of the finest and most unselfish men that ever breathed, whose health was completely destroyed in the Great War, a case of total disability. Does he receive more? No; he receives just the same as the other. Can anyone justify deliberately creating such inequality? I can not.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I just want to say that the gentleman is correct in his statement that this is a compensation bill instead of a retirement bill. I received a letter from a doctor in Texas urging me to support the bill. I looked up the minority report which has been filed on this bill, and he is listed as now drawing $16.50 per month, and will immediately draw $187.50, according to the report that has been filed.

Mr. TILSON. Fellow Members, we can never justify this bill at the bar of equity, justice, or square dealing, and I predict now that any who vote for it out of a sincere desire to adequately compensate worthy men for disabilities incurred will have difficulty in making answer in the years to come when one of the millions of enlisted men who gave themselves just as freely to the service of their country as did their officers, who endured the same hardships and suffered the same degree of disability, comes to one of us and says, "For a disability equal in degree to my own you have given an officer $150 or $187.50 or $250 per month, or perchance, if he were lucky enough to wear the star of a general, $375 per month for life; what are we to expect in the way of compensation?" What can we say?

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. While the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut are worrying about the enlisted man, why do they not bring the enlisted man up to where all of these officers are?

Mr. TILSON. A general officer, I believe, is to receive, under this bill, $375 per month. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts undertake to say that we should place every man who served in the military or naval forces of the United States during the war and incurred a 30 per cent disability, or who hereafter may be declared to have a 30 per cent disability, on the compensation rolls for the rest of his life at $375 per month? It would be necessary to do this if there is to be equality.

Mr. CONNERY. No; but I say that $150 a month would be a little fairer than $30 a month.

Mr. TILSON. There might be some difference of opinion as to what it would be practicable to do for so large a number of men, but I am willing to go with the gentleman as far as is practicable and reasonable if for equal disability we give equal compensation regardless of rank.

In the early days of this Republic, borrowed from older countries, it was the rule to make a difference between the pensions allowed to officers and to enlisted men. As our great Republic grew and we developed a policy of our own we abandoned the principle of discriminating in pensions according to rank, and after the Civil War it was entirely abandoned—and who were instrumental in its abandonment? The very officers who, having served in the Army, came to this House and served here in very great numbers. Their sense of fairness to the enlisted men who served with them and under them caused them to be in large measure responsible for giving up forever, I hope, the idea of pensions based on rank.

Mr. CONNERY. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. I was an enlisted man. I was not an officer, but an enlisted man——

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman was a good and valiant soldier whichever he happened to be.

Mr. CONNERY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. TILSON. But in my judgment he ought not to be entitled, in case of disability, to any greater compensation if he had been a major general than what he should be entitled to as an enlisted man. This is my view of it. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Does not the gentleman believe that these emergency officers who, as everybody knows, fought the war in the trenches, should get equal justice with a man who perhaps stood on the deck of a battleship or who fought a tough war out in Kansas City and is now getting retired pay?

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman has reference, I suppose, to a few Navy and Marine officers who were retired under a rider carried on a Navy appropriation bill which was in effect for only 15 months and was then repealed.

Mr. CONNERY. I am referring to the Regular Army and not to the emergency officers.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] so thoroughly explained the difference between the status of the Regular Army and the emergency officers that it needs no further explanation.

In an emergency every able-bodied man of proper age who is needed should be a soldier, every one should do his bit. It is his duty as a citizen. The Regular Army is entirely different. There is no analogy whatever between the Regular Army and the emergency officers. The conditions are entirely different and we should not confuse matters by attempting to put the Regular Army and the emergency officer on the same basis. The condition of actual war changes the situation completely, and no man, in my judgment, should have retirement privileges for having served in an emergency.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. I have heard it said it is going to be a difficult thing to have to explain to the enlisted man why we voted for an emergency officers' bill. I think we would have a harder time explaining to the enlisted man why we give retirement to a man in the Regular Army who stayed back at Chaumont and fell off his horse and hurt his knee and deny this to a man who fought in the front-line trenches and was disabled in line of duty.

Mr. TILSON. Retirement in the Regular Army is a story that goes back into our history of maintaining an Army in time of peace. It has been found necessary, or at least those who have gone before us as legislators have thought it necessary, to have a system of retirement in order to get and keep good officers, but it should not serve as a precedent and ought not be considered even as analogous to the service of an emergency officer in time of war. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF OFFICERS AND FORMER OFFICERS OF THE WORLD WAR

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 777, and pending that I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided between the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 777, and pending that asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LAGUARDIA in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 777, 70th Cong., 1st sess.

An act making eligible for retirement, under certain conditions, officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who have served as officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War, other than as officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who during such service have incurred physical disability in line of duty, and who have been, or may hereafter, within one year, be, rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability by the United States Veterans' Bureau for disability resulting directly from such war service, shall, from date of receipt of application by the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, be placed upon, and thereafter continued on, separate retired lists, hereby created as part of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, to be known as the emergency officers' retired list of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, respectively, with the rank held by them when discharged from their commissioned service, and shall be entitled to the same privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided for by law or regulations for officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps who have been retired for physical disability incurred in line of duty, and shall be entitled to all hospitalization privileges and medical treatment as are now or may hereafter be authorized by the United States Veterans' Bureau, and shall receive from date of receipt of their application retired pay at the rate of 75 per cent of the pay to which they were entitled at the time of their discharge from their commissioned service, except pay under the act of May 18, 1920: Provided, That all pay and allowances to which such persons or officers may be entitled under the provisions of this law shall be paid solely out of the military and naval compensation appropriation fund of the United States Veterans' Bureau, and shall be in lieu of all disability compensation benefits to such officers or persons provided in the World War veterans' act, 1924, and amendments thereto, except as otherwise authorized herein, and except as provided by the act of December 18, 1922: Provided further, That all persons who have served as officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War, other than as officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who during such service have incurred physical disability in line of duty, and who have heretofore or may hereafter be rated less than 30 per cent and more than 10 per cent permanent disability by the United States Veterans' Bureau for disability resulting directly from such war service, shall, from date of receipt of application by the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, be placed upon, and thereafter continued on, the appropriate emergency officers' retired list, created by this act, with the rank held by them when discharged from their commissioned service, but without retired pay, and shall be entitled only to such compensation and other benefits as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulations of the United States Veterans' Bureau, together with all privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulations for officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps who have been retired for physical disability incurred in line of duty: And provided further, That the retired list created by this act of officers of the Army shall be published annually in the Army Register, and said retired lists of officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, respectively, shall be published annually in the Navy Register.

SEC. 2. No person shall be entitled to benefits under the provisions of this act except he make application as hereinbefore provided and his application is received in the United States Veterans' Bureau within 12 months after the passage of this act: Provided, That the said director shall establish a register, and applications made hereunder shall be entered therein as of the actual date of receipt, in the order of receipt in the Veterans' Bureau, and such register shall be conclusive as to date of receipt of any application filed under this act. The term "World War," as used herein, is defined as including the period from April 6, 1917, to July 2, 1921.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, nine years of energetic action have elapsed on the part of the American Legion, composed of 90 per cent of enlisted men, to right a wrong. What is the wrong? Why, the United States Government and Congress, realizing in 1917 that this country had an emergency to meet, passed an act and invited into the Army men of mature years, men of responsibility, men who had acquired positions in life and experience which would fit them to become officers of a great emergency army. Preference was given by law in selecting officers to those who were 31 years of age and over.

EQUALITY PROMISED

Equality for all officers and enlisted men was promised in the selective service act of May, 1917. This equality has been granted to all classes of enlisted men and to eight of the nine classes of officers. The disabled emergency Army officers alone have been denied the fulfillment of this promise, made by the Congress 11 years ago.

Section 10 of the selective service act of May, 1917, provided as follows:

That all officers and enlisted men of the forces herein provided for, other than the Regular Army, shall be in all respects upon the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades and length of service in the Regular Army.

How that has been evaded is a matter of public scandal, which the American Legion with its overwhelming personnel of enlisted men is seeking to set right. It is not a matter of discrimination between officers and enlisted men, but a discrimination between officers where enlisted men are not concerned. All enlisted men have been treated the same.

Retirement for officers was provided originally by the act of Congress of August 3, 1861. Why? To eliminate superannuated and inefficient officers in the time of the Civil War. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has shown that he is unacquainted with and actually opposed to the settled policy of our democratic but noncommunistic country, from the Revolutionary War times down. It gives an opportunity to set this Congress right. The Republican floor leader evidently knew that the gentleman from Tennessee was in error when the latter stated on the floor of the House that it was against the policy of this country to discriminate between officers and enlisted men. This is the first open communistic and socialistic utterance that I have heard for many a long day on this floor.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. DAVIS. Did I understand the gentleman from Ohio made reference to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. To the statement he made.

Mr. DAVIS. I challenge that statement as being unjustified and unwarranted.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I am glad to meet that challenge, and I will show how it is easily justified and absolutely warranted. The United States Army was composed of officers and enlisted men. It is necessary that the officers be chosen because of riper years, greater experience, and training. The officers are paid more. There is always a necessary discrimination. Officers have ever been chosen for responsibility because they had responsibilities; the enlisted personnel was chosen under the draft act because of their lack of responsibilities. In the World War the officers average 12 to 15 years older than the enlisted men.

Men were taken for officers who had wives and children, who had made a success in life, and who had positions of responsibility, who had already demonstrated their fitness for command.

	Number who applied for admission	Number admitted	Number commissioned
First camp, May 15, 1917	200,000	43,000	27,341
Second camp, Aug. 29, 1917	200,000	23,000	17,247
Third camp, December, 1917	----------	18,437	11,657
Total	400,000	84,437	56,245

The personnel of the third camp was made up exclusively of enlisted men already in the service.

SELECTION OF OFFICERS

Here are some extracts from a War Department memorandum of June 4, 1917, which instructed officers of the regular service on the methods they were to follow in selecting candidates for the officers' training camps. These show the emphasis placed upon age, experience, and character:

GENERAL PLAN

To provide officers for * * * the National Army the War Department has adopted the policy of commissioning all new officers of the line (Infantry, Cavalry, Field and Coast Artillery) purely on the basis of demonstrated ability after three months' observation and training in the officers' training camps. Thus the appointment of officers of the new armies will be made entirely on merit and free from all personal or other influences.

* * * Also, in connection with these camps, it is to be noted that mature and experienced men are needed to fill the higher grades (first lieutenant, captain, major, and a few lieutenant colonels).

QUALIFICATIONS

* * * In order to obtain the experienced class of men desired preference will be given to men over 31 years of age, other things being equal. Because of the anticipated large number of applications, it will probably be difficult for men under that age to qualify except in instances where the applicant has preeminent qualifications or unusual military experience.

CHARACTER OF MEN DESIRED

Since the special object of these camps is to train a body of men fitted to fill the more responsible positions of command in the new armies, every effort will be made to select men of exceptional character and proved ability in their various occupations. While it is desired to give full opportunity for all eligible citizens to apply, no man need make application whose record is not in all respects above reproach and who does not possess the fundamental characteristics necessary to inspire respect and confidence.

While on the other hand those who were called for service under the draft act to serve in the enlisted personnel of the Army were those with least responsibilities. Those were exempt who had responsibilities, and only those were taken who were footloose, who had no reasonable ground for exemption. Of the 400,000 who applied for training to be made officers in the two first training camps, only 44,588 were commissioned, less than one-eighth, while of those summoned under the draft act an enormous majority were rejected because of family ties and responsibilities.

ENLISTED SITUATION DIFFERENT

The World War enlisted men were chosen for their lack of responsibility. Out of each 350 men who passed the required physical examination for service, 250 men received exemption because they had dependents, and 100 men were accepted for service through their lack of dependents. It was the desire of the Congress that the enlisted personnel be men without family obligations, and that the spirit of this desire was fulfilled is shown by the foregoing exemptions granted to those who had passed the physical examination.

EXEMPTIONS

The final report of the provost marshal general of the Army to the Secretary of War, dated July 15, 1919, shows in Table 4, page 24, that 2,780,576 men were actually inducted into the service during the World War, as compared to Table 2, page 20, of the same book, which shows that 6,964,229 men received exemption from their local boards because of dependency.

This means that for every 100 men actually inducted into the service 250 men were exempted because of dependency.

This action was in line with that portion of the selective service act which authorized the President to exempt among others the following:

Those in a status with responsibilities to persons dependent upon them for support which renders their exclusion or discharge advisable.

It is apparent from this act that Congress desired its fighting forces to be made up of men without family responsibilities. The figures quoted show that this wish was followed by the local boards.

One of the chief reasons for the difference in pay of officers and enlisted men of all armies and for all wars has been because of the difference in their ages and responsibilities. These same responsibilities continued after the emergency officers were disabled and crippled. If this difference in pay was proper when the emergency officer was well and sound, how much more necessary to continue it after he has been permanently disabled and thus prevented from earning a livelihood for the family which was dependent upon him prior to his war disability.

A FALLACY EXPOSED

Occasionally opponents state they can not see the justice in a disabled officer receiving a higher rate of compensation for his disability than a disabled enlisted man. They cite as an example of this two brothers of approximately the same age, just out of college, one attending an officers' training camp and obtaining a commission, the other enlisting and serving in the ranks. Both become equally disabled in the service. Why should one receive a higher rate of compensation for his disability than the other? This is the stock argument advanced by opponents.

There would be justice in this argument provided it were typical of the situation. It is not typical. The fundamental merits of the legislation are due to the fact that this illustration is very far from the true situation.

The officers were older than the enlisted men by an average of 12 to 15 years. They were in midcareer in civil life. A large proportion of them were married and had families dependent upon them. Many of these officers could not have accepted commissions but for the pay which they received as officers; otherwise they would not have been able to support those dependent upon them while they were in the service.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. I know that one place in the bill we are about to work a hardship on some officers.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. That is another mistake.

Mr. GREEN. In other words, some of them get $100 a month now, and under this new retirement they will get only $93.75 a month. I would like to see that corrected.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] made a mistake. In the first place, no one need come under this bill unless he chooses.

Mr. GREEN. He can remain at the hundred dollars under the other, if he desires?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes; but a second lieutenant under this retirement bill will not get merely $100. He will get $106 and something, because he will be retired under the pay act which was in force at the time that he was injured and disabled.

Mr. GREEN. Then he can retain his hundred dollars and get that instead of having to take $93.75?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. And get all of the benefits of this act, and he will get more than $106 instead of $93.75, as suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut. It has been suggested that the idea that we must treat officers and enlisted men alike is communistic. When we go into court on a claim for personal injury, suppose the plaintiff be a workman in a factory or a man employed on the street, and he has been injured, do we treat them all alike? Why no. The very first thing that is inquired into when the damages are to be determined is what was the plaintiff's earning power at the time of the injury. It is the earning power of the individual in this great democracy of ours that has not yet been degraded into a communism.

We say that we will compensate the man in proportion to his loss, and we promised by the law of this country that we would treat these emergency officers as we treated the officers of the Regular Army. It has been the accepted policy of this country from the beginning to accept the rank of the officer in the Army as a guide as to what should be paid him for compensation in the case of a pension.

Mr. ABERNETHY. And how many of these emergency officers are there?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. About 3,397.

Mr. ABERNETHY. And what will be the cost to the Government?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Two million two hundred and ninety-four thousand dollars a year, rapidly diminishing because of the high death rate; 122 died last year.

Mr. ABERNETHY. And that is all that is involved?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes. We are not taking a cent from any enlisted man. There is no discrimination. I would like to have some of those who are so interested in the enlisted man try to do something for the enlisted man here in this House. There is plenty of opportunity for them to do something constructive.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. In reference to this question of cost, the gentlemen's estimate, I believe, is based on those emergency officers who now are on the rolls at 30 per cent permanent disability, but the bill provides for those who have that rating within one year after the passage of the act. Has the gentleman made any estimate as to those who have approximately 30 per cent disability, who may come within the provisions of the act?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. No; except that I know that 122 of them died last year waiting justice and the fulfillment of the obligation of the law by this House. There is very little likelihood that those who are temporarily disabled 30 per cent or more who will be put on permanent rating, and I think they would be entitled to it if they are, within the next year will equal the number that will die before we get this law under operation.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. The gentleman said that he wished some of the Members who are so concerned about the enlisted men would try to do something for these men.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. I think the gentleman from Ohio has had the same experience that I have had, and that every other Member of the House has had, in respect to the tremendous difficulties we face in trying to do something for the men who are really deserving of something in the line of compensation, by reason of the hard-boiled decisions of the medical board and the board of appeals and the various other organizations connected with the Veterans' Bureau, and the difficulty of proving the illness is of service origin. The fact is that many of our boys came home from service determined to show some degree of courage, and did not want to ask Uncle Sam for any support, did not consult a doctor when they were really in bad shape. When they finally were compelled to make their applications for compensation when they were finally forced to demand something the board then said, "There is no record of medical attendance upon the applicant between the date of his discharge and the date of filing his application." We all would like to do something for some of these enlisted men. I shall probably vote for this bill, but I say to you I think it is extremely unfair in some of its provisions. I know of an officer, a professional man, who suffered a shrapnel wound in his shoulder blade. It does not hinder his earning capacity so far as his profession is concerned. He is now getting $30 a month. Under this bill he will get $125 a month for life. Right around the corner is a little fellow who was so crippled in the service that he can hardly perform manual labor of any description. All he gets is $35 a month compensation, and that is all that he will get so long as he lives under the present law.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does not the gentleman think that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] is rather severe in his indictment of the Veterans' Bureau boards requiring evidence, when it is because of the laws that Congress has passed that certain evidence is required before the Veterans' Bureau can make a favorable adjudication? When Congress has failed to liberalize those laws, and the specific provisions of the law require certain evidence before compensation can be paid, I do not believe that any Member of Congress should come on the floor and hurl a general indictment at the medical boards of the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. No. I shall answer the gentleman. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] has had too much experience with the Veterans' Bureau not to know that he has had to devote hours and hours and days and nights and weeks of his time in getting justice for the boys from Wisconsin. He knows what I have done, and he knows how difficult it sometimes is to enlist sympathy from these men in the Veterans' Bureau. The bureau is inclined to construe the laws strictly and perhaps they feel that they must.

Mr. SCHAFER. And the gentleman from Wisconsin knows that each case presents great and involved problems, and that the boards can not allow compensation in a great many worthy cases because of limitations written into the law by Congress. When Congress enacts specific laws requiring certain medical evidence before compensation can be paid, no one, particularly Members of Congress, should condemn the bureau boards for requiring such evidence before compensation is paid.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one short question?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. KEARNS. I have often thought about it and wondered why we do not put into this bill the emergency Spanish-American War officers.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. One reason is because our World War Veterans' Committee here has no jurisdiction over that. I would be glad to do it otherwise, if it is desired by the veteran officers of the Spanish War. Another reason is that the United Spanish-American War matters are handled by their own association, and their representative in Washington is ex-Senator Means. I understand that he is opposed to having them included, not regarding it as beneficial.

Mr. KEARNS. Is he opposed to your bill?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. No. Every patriotic organization in the United States is in favor of this bill. We have 11,000 posts of the American Legion, or 13,000 with the auxiliary, and we have, as I said, the support of the Disabled Veterans of the World War. Ninety per cent of them are enlisted men.

Mr. KEARNS. Do you tell me that the committee, if it wanted to, could not include the wounded emergency officers of the Spanish-American War; that they would like to, but could not do it?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. It could not do it under our committee's jurisdiction. If you will introduce a bill for the Spanish-American War veterans, I will back you in every constructive measure you may introduce in their behalf. I would like to back you in any measure you would favor in their behalf.

Mr. KEARNS. I am opposed to all of them, but if this becomes a law I can not see why the Spanish-American wounded veterans should not be included.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I am trying to induce this House to fulfill its legal obligations to these men who relied upon the promise made to them that they were to be treated without discrimination.

Mr. KEARNS. I would not introduce a bill of that kind, because I am opposed to all of them.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. We are trying to destroy the discrimination now existing between the officers of the Regular Establishment and the emergency officers who were promised the same treatment in this regard. There are only five West Point officers who have been retired for battle casualties of the hundreds and hundreds of officers retired since the war. There are 123 emergency officer battle casualties to 1 of the West Point officers.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. I understand this same recognition has been conferred upon disabled emergency officers of the Navy and Marine Corps.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes; and they had 15 months to come in under it; and we are now opening the door to let them come in for another year.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman says there is discrimination between the Navy and Marine Corps on the one hand and the emergency Army officers on the other?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes. There is discrimination. These disabled emergency Army officers constitute 93 per cent of our officer battle deaths during the war. These emergency officers furnished 90 per cent of our combat officers during the war.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. I wanted to remark, Mr. Chairman, concerning this controversy between the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] that if you can bring into the House a measure that will liberalize the medical administration of the Veterans' Bureau I would like to support such a measure. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I have prepared a statement on this bill which will take to read at least a large part of the time that has been granted to me in the debate, and I therefore request that I be not asked to yield until I have finished that which I have prepared; and then, if any time remains after that, I shall be glad to answer any questions that Members of the House may wish to ask.

The so-called disabled emergency officers bill has been before Congress in some form every session since the war. During the six years that I have been a member of this body it has been pending before the World War Veterans' Legislation Committee. It is proper that we review its lack of progress during those six years.

In the Sixty-eighth Congress I was a member of the Veterans' Committee. Before coming to Congress I had been adjutant of my home American Legion post and later was department commander of the American Legion for Nebraska. I know the organization. I believe firmly in the high ideals on which it is founded. I believed that the American Legion would sponsor no legislation that violated those ideals. I had read the propaganda that had been sent out from Washington about this bill. I believed, without more investigation, that the facts stated about the bill were true, that the bill did what its sponsors said it did and I believed the statements and arguments made in its favor. None had been made against it. I was a member of a subcommittee of four that reported favorably to the World War Veterans' Committee on this bill. I then started out to see if we could not secure its passage. I found first that there was not a unanimous opinion in favor of the bill, although the committee seemed to be for it. I asked the reasons for the opposition.

I studied the bill, its history, the history of other bills, and finally reached the conclusion that the bill was wrong in principle, that its proponents among the service men had been misled by erroneous statements of fact, that it created a series of unjustified discriminations, that the emergency officers themselves had been misinformed as to its effects, and as to the status of fellow officers, and finally that the bill should be defeated. Having reached that conclusion, I advised the American Legion men of my State, and on April 6, 1926, addressed the House in opposition to this bill. Of the four men who signed the subcommittee report in the Sixty-eighth Congress for this bill, two are on the floor now working and will be voting against it. I refer to Mr. MILLIGAN of Missouri and myself.

What has happened in that committee during these years? The bill was reported to the Sixty-eighth Congress without a minority report. In the Sixty-ninth Congress four World War veterans signed a minority report against it. The bill is before Congress to-day by a vote of 8 to 7 from that committee, and the chairman of that committee, Mr. ROYAL JOHNSON, of South Dakota, himself a distinguished World War emergency officer, refusing to sponsor it in its present form and favoring many amendments.

I stated two years ago, and now repeat that—

> The men who organized the Legion with far-sighted purpose declared that the Legion would be all-inclusive, representing the officer and enlisted man; the disabled and the overseas veterans stood side by side with a buddy whose duty kept him in the United States—all were comrades—binding themselves in an organization all for one, one for all, in the continued service of God and country. The American Legion fought the battles of the service men in the organization of the Veterans' Bureau, the establishment of hospitals, the passage of liberal compensation laws, based on service-connected disability, the passage of the adjusted compensation act, and much other beneficial legislation. Throughout it all the Legion made no distinction and asked that none be made between the service men of America. The Legion kept its determination that there would be no distinction or discrimination on account of rank among the veterans.
> This bill is the only legislation that the Legion has advocated contrary to that policy; it is the only legislation that Congress has repeatedly refused to approve.

Many Members of Congress, relying on statements made by veterans' organizations, and without further investigation, have promised to vote for this bill. It becomes important then to consider the arguments advanced for the bill. If they are shown to be erroneous and untrue, then Members who have promised to support, in reliance upon those statements, should consider themselves free to vote their convictions on this legislation.

Let us consider, then, the arguments advanced by the committee's report for the bill.

The committee in charge of this bill over the objections of 7 out of 15 members refused to hold hearings on it. It is before the House, then, without testimony or printed hearings.

No departmental report is available on it. Those of us who wanted to know facts about it have been compelled to do our own investigating and secure our own information. What we have been able to secure we believe to be accurate and true. If it is not, the fault lies with the committee that refused to investigate the bill fully and refused to furnish the Congress with full information on it.

One of the reasons given for the passage of this bill is that—I quote from the report of the World War Veterans' Committee on H. R. 500 filed March 29, 1928:

> There were nine classes of officers who fought in the World War. These were the regular officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps; the provisional officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps; and the emergency officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. Eight of these nine classes have been heretofore retired by the Congress for wounds and disabilities incurred in line of duty. The only officers for whom the Congress has failed to provide retirement are the disabled emergency Army officers.

Again:

> Retirement should be extended to the disabled emergency Army officers of the World War, as these officers, out of the nine classes, are the only ones which the Congress has discriminated against.

Those statements are not true. The proponents of this measure hope by constant reiteration to make them true. And they were succeeding fairly well until the Senate passed S. 777 which included 201 disabled emergency officers of the Navy and Marine Corps. Then the same committee comes back and blandly "points out that the Senate act—S. 777—includes those disabled emergency officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, 201 in number, who did not obtain retirement under the act of June 4, 1920."

Then, without blushing, they go ahead and incorporate their report on H. R. 500, which again states that only the Army officer has not been retired. What are the facts? In the naval appropriation act of 1920 authority was given to retire the emergency officers then in the service the same as regular officers were retired. In the next bill for 1921 that act was amended so that only those applying up to October 1, 1921, should be benefited by it. During that year 284 men were retired. With the exception of those men who were then in the service, Congress has not retired the emergency officer of the Navy and Marine Corps. The Veterans' Committee admits it now by accepting Senate amendments that do retire them. There were on September 30, 1927, 565 emergency naval officers and 77 emergency marine officers drawing compensation from the Veterans' Bureau for war disabilities who were not retired, and of that number more than one-half of them will continue to draw compensation the same as enlisted men, even should this bill become a law. So it is now admitted by the Senate and by the committee handling this bill in the House that the statement that only the emergency officers of the Army have not been retired is not true. May I point out to you further this very important distinction between the Navy and marine officer who has been retired and the emergency Army officer?

The Navy and marine men who were retired under the act of June 4, 1920, were men in the service at the time of their retirement. I quote Secretary of the Navy Wilbur:

All temporary and reserve officers retired under the general laws affecting those classes were either in the service at the time of retirement or retirement proceedings had been instituted prior to their separation from the service. With reference to the reserve force several officers were retired who had been relieved from active service but whose enrollment in the reserve had not terminated.

So that this fact now is clear—only those emergency officers in the Navy and Marine Corps when the act of June 4, 1920, was passed have been retired. Emergency officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps who were discharged from the service have not been retired, and have not been given greater compensation than their comrades in the service. The emergency Army officer for whom this bill was drawn, for whom the propaganda has been sent out that they were the only emergency officers out of nine groups not retired, were discharged from the service. Those Navy and marine officers who were discharged from the service draw now, and have been drawing exactly the same compensation that the discharged emergency Army officer draws. All three classes of discharged emergency officers, to wit, Army, Navy, and Marine Corps have been treated exactly alike.

The statement, then, that only the emergency officer of the Army has not been given retirement is disproved by the record, by the statement of the Secretary of the Navy, and by the bill now under consideration, which specifically covers all three classes—the report showing that it covers 201 naval and marine officers. That argument then fails when the facts are known.

Again reference is made to General Orders, No. 75, of the War Department, August 17, 1918. The quotation made in the report is from General Order No. 73, dated August 7, 1918, but that is as accurate as are many statements in the report.

The report sets out the first two paragraphs of the order. There are six paragraphs of the order, and I am at a loss to know why the entire order was not set out, unless the reason is that to have done so would have shown that the intent and purpose of that order was entirely different from that which the proponents of this measure would have you infer from the part that is quoted.

The entire order is as follows:

(General Orders, No. 73)

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 7, 1918.

1. This country has but one Army—the United States Army. It includes all the land forces in the service of the United States. Those forces, however raised, lose their identity in that of the United States Army. Distinctive appellations, such as the Regular Army, Reserve Corps, National Guard, and National Army, heretofore employed in administration and command, will be discontinued, and the single term, the United States Army, will be exclusively used.

2. Orders having reference to the United States Army as divided into separate and component forces of distinct origin, or assuming or contemplating such a division, are to that extent revoked.

3. The insignia now prescribed for the Regular Army shall hereafter be worn by the United States Army.

4. All effective commissions purporting to be, and described therein as, commissions in the Regular Army, National Guard, National Army, or the Reserve Corps, shall hereafter be held to be, and regarded as, commissions in the United States Army—permanent, provisional, or temporary, as fixed by the conditions of their issue; and all such commissions are hereby amended accordingly. Hereafter during the period of the existing emergency all commissions of officers shall be in the United States Army and in Staff Corps, departments, and arms of the service thereof, and shall, as the law may provide, be permanent for a term, or for the period of the emergency. And hereafter during the period of the existing emergency provisional and temporary appointments in the grade of second lieutenant and temporary promotions in the Regular Army and appointments in the Reserve Corps will be discontinued.

5. While the number of commissions in each grade and in each staff corps, department, and arm of the service shall be kept within the limits fixed by law, officers shall be assigned without reference to the term of their commissions solely in the interest of the service; and officers and enlisted men will be transferred from one organization to another as the interests of the service may require.

6. Except as otherwise provided by law, promotion in the United States Army shall be by selection. Permanent promotions in the Regular Army will continue to be made as prescribed by law.

By order of the Secretary of War:

PEYTON C. MARCH,
General, Chief of Staff.

Official:

H. P. MCCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

It will be noted that the purpose of the order was to wipe out the "distinctive appellations" of "Regular Army, Reserve Corps, National Guard, and National Army" and to substitute in lieu thereof the term "the United States Army."

Orders referring to the "origin" of "component forces" were revoked. The insignia of the Regular Army was to be worn by all.

The inference of the report is that the distinction between the Regular and emergency officers was abolished by this order, paragraph 4, which is not copied in the report, but which I set out herein shows that it was the different forces that were merged and that commissions in the Regular Army, National Guard, National Army, and Reserve Corps were to be regarded as commissions in the—United States Army—permanent, provisional, or temporary as fixed by the conditions of their issue.

Note, then, that this General Order 73 not only did not wipe out the distinction between the Regular and emergency officer, but it distinctly pointed out and restated those distinctions. Again paragraph 4 provides that—commissions of officers * * * shall as the law may provide, be permanent for a term or for the period of the emergency.

Paragraph 5 shows that the purpose of the order was to make the administration and the movement of troops easier.

Paragraph 6 states that—

Permanent promotions in the Regular Army will continue to be made as prescribed by law.

Why did not the proponents of this measure who drafted the report set out the order in full? The answer is obvious. To have done so would have been to have disproved the thing they wanted to prove.

The "amplification" of the selective service act to which the report refers by this order shows that the War Department considered and maintained the distinction between the regular and emergency officer, and sought by that order only to wipe out the different "component forces" for administrative reasons only.

The analysis I have made of this general order is sustained by the War Department. I wrote the Secretary of War asking the reasons for the issuance of the order. He has replied that:

This order was issued during the existence of a great national emergency and with the apparent underlying idea of the simplification of administrative details, particularly those relative to the classification, assignment, and promotion of personnel.

I am sure that you must realize the vast amount of detail incident to the administration of an army of several million men and how greatly this work was increased by the necessity for segregating the records of the several distinct categories of personnel.

The records of the War Department indicate that the results attained by the order, from an efficiency standpoint, fully justify its issuance.

So the argument that the War Department recognized the basis of this bill and favored it by that order fails when the full facts are shown.

Again the claim is made in the report that the war Congress intended to do this thing for the emergency officer, but was unable to express itself clearly, and therefore failed. That statement is coupled with the statement that—

Retirement based upon earning capacity is the only fair standard of recompense. It is the measure of damage in the courts of law and it is the standard by which injured workmen are recompensed in civil life.

Fortunately we are able to determine from the RECORD just what Congress intended to do. An examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that the war Congress not only did not intend to give these benefits to the emergency officer but also specifically refused to apply the principle of compensation based on earning capacity to the soldiers who came to their country's service.

Reference is made to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 55, part 7, first session, Sixty-fifth Congress. The date is September, 1917. The matter under consideration was the war risk insurance act. The administration had had a bill prepared. It was reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The bill as reported provided for compensation for death or disability of the commissioned officer and enlisted man. It provided—page 6751—that in the event of death of a soldier, commissioned or enlisted, that the widow should receive compensation based on a percentage of the soldier's pay, but not less than certain amounts. It further provided that in the event of disability of the soldier, commissioned or enlisted, the compensation should be based on a percentage of his pay. The bill became the subject of debate for days. It was pointed out that the bill discriminated against the enlisted men and in favor of the officers and their widows and dependents. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] discussed the matter at length.

On page 7061 is the amendment offered by Mr. BLACK, now a Member of this body, who may and will correct me if I am in error. The amendment placed all widows' allowances on an equality. He pointed out—page 7073—that the purpose of his amendments was to—remove distinction and discrimination from the benefits conferred by the bill.

He illustrated repeatedly that officers and their dependents would receive more than enlisted men and their dependents under the bill as drafted by the committee. Members of this House should read his speech at that time.

On page 7075 Mr. Alexander stated that the bill was—framed on the theory of compensation for services and is based on the pay received by the commissioned officers and enlisted men.

Mr. McKenzie, whom many now in the House will remember, then spoke—page 7076—and stated, among other things, that—

It is true that these officers should get more pay when in the service, but when this war is over the thousands of them that we are now making officers of and giving commissions to will go back home and become private citizens again. * * * The wife and children of an officer have no more rights than the wife and children of the private. This provision in this proposed law is in contravention of the very principles for which these boys are going forth to fight.

If you want to destroy the morale of this great American Army that we are building, if you want to bring dissatisfaction into millions of homes in this country, stand by the committee report. But if you want to be true Americans, if you want to stand by that equality upon which our country was founded * * * vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas. Let us serve notice on all the world that this is a democracy, where we treat our citizens alike.

[Applause.]

The question was there put, and Mr. BLACK'S amendment, wiping out all distinctions between widows and children of officers and men, was carried on a division by a vote of 139 to 3. [Applause.]

The next section dealt with disability compensation as this bill we are now considering does. It proposed compensation based on pay and gave an officer greater disability compensation than the enlisted men could receive. Mr. BLACK offered an amendment—page 7077—striking out the percentage of pay provisions and making all pay the same for the same disability to all soldiers—officers and enlisted. He stated—the amendment I have offered cuts out percentages paid to the men so that there will be no distinctions and discriminations in the benefits paid to the officers and privates for the same class of injuries.

Mr. Campbell, of Kansas, spoke in approval of the amendment.

The amendment was carried without a division.

Mr. Edward Keating, then a Member from Colorado, was active in the debate. He extended his remarks on this bill, and among other things stated—the House, by what was practically a unanimous vote, decided that, so far as pensions are concerned, officers and privates, or their dependents, should be placed on an exact equality. Ours is an army of democracy, and at the very threshold of the great struggle we should do what we can to wipe out class distinctions.

These speeches clearly show what the war Congress intended.

Congressman Edward C. Little, of Kansas, a distinguished soldier in the war with Spain, charged that—the bill was drawn by men in touch with officers, and with officers only.

He vigorously attacked the insurance features of the bill, as did many others, because of the fear that it would give officers more insurance than enlisted men.

In the Senate Senator SMOOT, speaking on these provisions, stated—we ought to see that the provisions of the bill are such that there will be no discriminations between soldiers and officers.

All ought to stand on the same footing. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 7738, October 4, 1917.)

The RECORD then clearly shows that the war Congress not only did not intend to give the disabled emergency officer more compensation than the enlisted man but that it specifically and almost unanimously refused to do so and rejected the basis of this bill that compensation should be based on the salary of the soldier.

Millions of men served America under those provisions. Those disabled have since been compensated under that law. Why now depart from it for the benefit of a few of the many who served?

Secretary of War Weeks, when discussing this very proposition, said:

It should also be remembered that the law relating to compensation for emergency personnel, which was enacted before the emergency officers accepted their commissions, makes no distinction between commissioned officers and enlisted men of the emergency forces as to disability compensation. The commissioned officers understood these conditions when they accepted their commissions, and as a matter of fact they were apparently glad to accept them under these conditions. Most of them, especially the junior officers, were subject to the draft and many of them would have been drafted as enlisted men had they not volunteered and qualified as commissioned officers. It is, then, a question about which I have in my mind a great deal of doubt as to whether any distinction should be made in regard to benefits that should be given to the temporary commissioned officers from that which is given to the temporary enlisted men. Certainly, it was perfectly clear in the minds of Congress when it enacted the laws that there should be no distinction.

The report says—

thus by the terms of the selective draft act the contractual rights of the emergency officers were based upon those of the Regular Army officers.

Those of us who have opposed this bill have not relied upon the contractual basis for our opposition. Its proponents have seen fit to argue that the Government is under a contract to pay this increased compensation to these men. Both the law and the facts disprove their claim. Congress very plainly intended that there should be no distinction between the emergency officer and the emergency enlisted man so far as compensation for death or disability was concerned.

It has not been my desire to place this on a contract basis, but since the proponents of this measure have charged that the Government has and is violating its contract, no one should criticize us for determining the facts. The contract between the United States and the emergency officer was that the emergency officer should receive disability compensation on the same basis as the enlisted men. The "officers understood those conditions when they accepted their commissions" and accepted subject to that condition. The United States has not only fully complied with its part of that agreement but has from time to time increased the benefits payable to the emergency officers.

The proponents of this measure now demand that the contract be broken on the part of the emergency officer and at the same time make the baseless charge that the Government is breaking its contract.

Again the report states—the congressional policy of retiring our disabled officers is therefore well established.

The Adjutant General of the Army states that many bills have been introduced in both Houses of Congress at different times authorizing the appointment on the retired list of the Army of those officers who served in the volunteer army in the Civil War, but none of them has ever been enacted into law. Likewise, he advises me that no legislation of this character has ever been passed for the benefit of the emergency officers who fought during the war with Spain.

Admittedly no such legislation has passed for the emergency officers of the World War, save the naval riders to which I have referred, under which less than 300 men were retired, men not on the same status as those referred to in this bill. Why, then, this difference between the committee's report and The Adjutant General? The reason is that this bill is called a retirement bill in order that something like a parallel case might be set up to that of the Regular officer who is retired and in order that the prejudice which the proponents of this bill try to create against the Regular officer might be exploited to the benefit of the emergency officer.

The proponents of the measure have taken all the advantages that can be taken of that argument, and now, in order to find a precedent for this bill, cite not retirement acts but service pension acts. The service pension acts, to which reference is made, have long since been superseded by Congress through the enactment of pension legislation, giving equal pension to all, and to-day the men of the Civil and Spanish-American Wars are all pensioned on the same basis as the men of the emergency establishment are all compensated on the same basis—that of their disability, and not on the basis of rank.

The retirement of an officer means his withdrawal from active service. You can not retire the men that this bill seeks to benefit, for they have already been discharged—their connection with the service ended. The bill then is not a retirement bill, but a compensation bill, whose sole purpose is to compensate a small group of officers not on the basis of their disability, but their rank—and as such creates the bitterest kind of discrimination.

The report states that the bill benefits 3,251 emergency officers. There were on March 31, 1928, 10,269 emergency officers drawing disability compensation, some of them with a far more serious disability than those whom this bill benefits. Why discriminate between these officers?

There are 243,028 enlisted men drawing disability compensation, of whom 69,386 are permanently disabled 30 per cent or more. Why discriminate against them? Did they not also serve?

The bill holds out hope of additional compensation to 7,000 disabled emergency officers. It holds out no hope to disabled enlisted men.

To sum up, it brings benefits to 3,297 out of the 253,297 now receiving compensation from the Veterans' Bureau.

Members have been told that this bill is of minor importance. The precedent sought to be established here is of great moment.

Disability pension bills are pending before Congress. Within a few years the first of them will be pressing for consideration, and then will come the general pension bill. When that time comes, are they to be based, as pension laws now are, on an equality, or will they be based on rank?

The Congress in this bill, if it passes, will set the precedent for pensions based on rank. If the Congress can not resist this measure, what hope is there that pension laws based on rank will not pass? There were 243,981 emergency officers in the three services during the World War. This bill, if it becomes a law, will bind the Congress to pensions based on rank—and that is the basic issue involved. So that when you vote for this bill you are voting to commit the Congress to a pension policy based on rank, and as such are dealing with a quarter of a million officers.

Again the statement is made in the report that—

> The Congress has continued its established policy of retiring emergency officers of the Navy and Marine Corps by enacting in 1922, 1923, 1924, and 1925 private laws providing retirement for naval and Marine Corps officers who had not availed themselves of the benefits of the act of June 4, 1920.

The plain inference of that statement is that the Congress since 1921 has continued to grant retirement privileges to all naval and marine officers needing retirement. What are the facts?

In addition to the men retired as above stated under the act of June 4, 1920—> one temporary officer and four reserve officers of the Navy have been retired by special act of Congress.

The quotation is from a letter of the Secretary of the Navy dated May 3, 1928.

Why should not those who reported this bill tell the truth about it? The answer is that they have not investigated it and so do not know the facts. The bill should be sent back to the committee for hearings, full and complete hearings.

The bill provides that all persons who can meet the following four conditions shall come within its provisions:

First. They must have served as officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the war.

Second. During such service they must have incurred physical disability in line of duty.

Third. Either now have or within one year have been rated at 30 per cent permanently disabled.

Fourth. Apply for the benefits of the act within one year.

These are the conditions; any emergency officer who can meet those conditions will be entitled to the benefits of the bill. What does it mean?

I pointed out to the Rules Committee and again on the floor of the House on March 30, 1928, that this bill in its present form did not exempt dishonorably discharged officers from its benefits, and that there was little doubt that in the absence of that inhibition that dishonorably discharged officers would be entitled to its benefits.

That opinion is supported by a brief which I have here for inspection by Members who care to see it. I am not going to insert it in the RECORD.

Section 23 of the World War veterans' act provides that—

> The discharge or dismissal of any person from the military or naval forces on the ground that he was guilty of mutiny, treason, spying, or any offense involving moral turpitude, or willful and persistent misconduct, of which he was found guilty by a court-martial, or that he was an alien, conscientious objector who refused to perform military duty or refused to wear the uniform, or a deserter, shall bar all rights to any compensation under Title II, or any training, or any maintenance and support allowance under Title IV.

There is no such limitation in this bill. There should be such a limitation. Certainly the officer who is guilty of these offenses should not be compensated. If it were necessary to make that exception for all service men, then it is common sense to make it for these officers. And yet after it has been called to the attention of the proponents of this measure, word has gone out from Washington that Congressmen must be urged to pass this bill "without amendment." Many Members have received such letters.

Why are you urged to do that? The men and women at home do not approve of the dishonorably discharged officers receiving these benefits. They have been told to send in these letters.

Will the veterans' organizations approve their Representatives here urging them to ask for this legislation which by any chance could benefit those who have dishonored the service? I do not believe they will; neither do I believe that the service men at home, when they know the facts, will censure Members for voting to perfect this bill. My judgment is that when the service men at home do know the truth about this bill they will approve those who favor changes in and defeat of it.

This bill benefits only the emergency officer who is living, his wife, and children. But what of the officer dead, his widow and orphan? There are 2,151 widows and 2,257 children of emergency officers drawing compensation by reason of the death of the husband and father. Congress has said that they should receive the same compensation as the widow and orphan of an enlisted man, just as Congress has said that the emergency officer should receive the same compensation as an enlisted man. The widow and orphan of an officer killed in battle are left by this bill in their present status; they have lost not only the comfort and care of the husband and father but his earnings and support as well. They have given absolutely everything and get nothing by this bill. Those still living and still able to earn demand for themselves a great increase of pay, leaving the widow and orphan of a brother officer killed in battle without increased benefits. Is the officer living so much better than the officer dead that the Congress must aid the one and not the other?

This is the worst discrimination of all the unjustified discriminations in this bill. It has been called to the attention of the proponents of the measure. Their answer is given in the report that—> the existing law which cares for these dependents is in no wise changed by this act.

In other words, they say to the widow and orphan, "We are not interested in you and yours; your husband and father is dead; he is no longer here to fight for you nor to care for you. You take what the Government promised him it would give you. We are not willing to do that. We are going to get more than that for ourselves and can't be bothered with you."

This sentiment will be denied; but the cold, naked truth remains that that is just what this bill does and does not do for the emergency officer who served and came back and lives, and the emergency officer who served and did not come back and does not live.

The reason for the retirement of the Regular officer is well set out in the minority report. I quote, as they do, Secretary of War Lindley M. Garrison:

> The privileges of the retired list of the Regular Army constitute a consideration granted by the Government for the consecration of lives to its military service and the volunteering for life for such service in any exigencies that may arise, whether in peace or war. The military relation requires the officer to give up ambitions which are the rightful portion of every man in the great world outside, and for a measure of compensation which does not exceed what is barely sufficient to maintain himself and family in the status which the military service demands; and the law has said that when he serves a prescribed period of time, or has reached a certain age, or is disabled by injury or disease incident to the service, he must withdraw from active service and give way to a younger man better fitted for the rigors of military life. As the officer has not been trained for a business career or for any career in civil life he finds himself at the end of his service, certainly in the vast majority of cases, not only without a profession but without a competency.
> Congress has thus far restricted the privilege of retirement to members of the permanent Military Establishment; that is, to those only who have consecrated their lives to the military service. This is true not alone of the officers but of the enlisted man, who may retire only when he has served a sufficient time to indicate that he has adopted the military service as a life career. To those who have thus pledged their services for life to the Nation, in peace or in war, Congress, as a matter of keeping faith with them, has provided by law that they shall be secure in their calling throughout their lives, and when they have performed what is deemed a life service shall be relieved of some of the active duties of service and be permitted a living pay for the remainder of their lives.

The statement has been made by proponents of this bill that its purpose is to give to the emergency officer the same rights and privileges as are had by the Regular officer. But this bill discriminates against the Regular officer and gives the emergency officer decided advantages not now had by the Regular officer in at least two material ways.

First. The Regular Army officer retired for disability during the World War was retired at the permanent lower rank and not at the higher emergency rank to which he had been temporarily promoted during the war. The emergency officer, on the other hand, having only an emergency rank, will be under this bill retired at his emergency rank, thus giving a decided advantage to the emergency officer over the Regular officer.

Second. The retired Regular officer is still in the service; he is subject to military discipline and court-martial; he may be recalled to duty with his consent in time of peace, or at the discretion of the President in time of war. It is a well-known fact that hundreds of retired officers were placed on active duty during the World War. The Regular officer who is retired is then subject to a very binding military obligation. The emergency officer, whom this bill benefits, is out of the service, and while receiving more benefits under this law than the Regular officer is not subject to any military obligations.

Under this bill emergency officers once placed on this list are there for life, receiving all the benefits and subject to none of the obligations of retirement. They may entirely recover and still continue to draw this pension.

And may I point out here that that in itself creates one of the rankest discriminations that this bill sets up. At the present time a soldier may have a rating in the Veterans' Bureau of permanent and total disability, but that rating may be changed and entirely taken away from him if the facts justify. But under this bill the officer who squeezes out a rating of 30 per cent permanent and gets on this list is there for life, without regard to what his health later on may be. He may entirely recover but his compensation will go on. On the last figures there were 10,269 disabled emergency officers; this bill benefits but 3,297 of them. It gives the right of retirement only to that emergency officer whose disability is 30 per cent or more permanent. The officer whose disability is but 29 per cent permanent receives no benefit. The emergency officer whose disability is 100 per cent temporary receives no benefit. So that the bill creates at once a discrimination between the emergency officers themselves. If this bill were to become a law, a brigadier general with a 30 per cent disability would receive $4,500 a year; a colonel, $3,000; lieutenant colonel, $2,625 a year; a major, $2,250 a year; captain, $1,800 a year; first lieutenant, $1,500 a year; second lieutenant, $1,125 a year; and the enlisted man from sergeant major to buck private would receive $360 a year. A study of these figures will indicate the very evident injustice of the bill.

This bill benefits 3,297 emergency officers; it gives no benefits to 7,000 additional emergency officers, many of whom are disabled more than those benefited. This bill benefits 3,297 emergency officers; it gives no additional benefits to the 69,386 emergency enlisted men who are rated 30 per cent or more permanent—the same rating as had by the officers whom it seeks to benefit.

This bill holds out the possibility of additional benefits to 7,000 emergency officers, who, if given ratings of 30 per cent or more permanent, can come within its provisions. It holds out no hope of additional compensation to approximately 243,000 disabled emergency enlisted men.

To sum up, it brings immediate benefits to less than 3,300 disabled service men out of 254,000 now on the rolls.

One of the reasons advanced by some in favor of this legislation is that the officers were generally older, better educated, and accustomed to more of the material things of life, and therefore his pay from the Government should be greater. That, I submit, is a dangerous theory for this Nation to accept. The necessities of life cost just as much for the family of a disabled enlisted man as for those of an officer. The dollar compensation paid the officer and the enlisted man have the same purchasing power. But assuming their reasons to be correct, the educated emergency officer is far better able to overcome his disability than is the emergency soldier or officer who must supplement his compensation by physical labor. For example, the lawyer who has lost a leg can continue to practice law; the farmer who has lost a leg can follow a plow, but his handicap is far greater.

The statement is made in the report that the passage of this bill has been persistently urged by both the American Legion and the Disabled American Veterans, but from that it does not follow that the rank and file of the membership of those great veterans' organizations either know of its provisions or approve of its passage.

I know something of the American Legion and its membership. It has honored me highly in the past; it has been my great privilege to serve its membership both before I came to this body and since. I hope to continue to serve its membership. I respect the American Legion and its wishes. It is not easy to go against its declared policies. The American Legion Monthly is sent from national headquarters to every member. It carries Legion news, outlines Legion policies, and builds Legion sentiment. Yet never once during the years that this bill has been before Congress has the American Legion Monthly told the full truth about this bill. The views of those who honestly oppose this legislation have never been stated. The membership of the Legion has not been told that this bill discriminates against 70 per cent of the disabled emergency officers of the Army. They have not been told that it discriminates against the widow and orphans of the officer dead. They have not been told that it discriminates against all of the disabled emergency enlisted men.

The American Legion's representatives have made no effort to tell the service men all the facts about this bill. Their effort has been entirely to use the prestige and good name of that great organization in an attempt to force this legislation through this body without regard to its merits, its discriminations, or the policies that it overthrows.

Since I have been a Member of this body Congress has passed pension legislation for the men of the Civil War, the Indian wars, the Spanish-American War, and for their widows and orphans. Every one of those men and their organizations asked that Congress treat them all exactly alike without distinction as to rank, and Congress has so legislated.

Congress, since the World War, has passed considerable legislation for the benefit of the veterans of the World War. We have granted compensation to those men whose disabilities were traceable to their service. We have presumed service connection in cases of disease such as tuberculosis and many other cases and awarded compensation. Congress has granted increased compensation to the widow and the orphan of the service men who gave their lives to the Nation. The doors of the hospitals of the Veterans' Bureau have been opened to the service men, and treatment and care is provided at the expense of the Government. All of this freely and gratefully given—but, mark you again, all of it has been without discrimination one from the other as to rank.

Four years ago Congress passed over the veto of the President the adjusted compensation bill. It was supported by public opinion, urged by veterans' organizations, and passed as an act of justice. But its benefits applied alike to enlisted men and commissioned officers up to and including the rank of captain. Beyond that no benefits were conferred. Why, then, should we change now the fixed policy of the Government that has been uniformly followed for these many years in the treatment of the citizen soldiers of the Civil, Spanish-American, and World Wars?

I am not going to take the time of the House to discuss a great number of cases. Some days ago I briefly discussed this bill and called the attention of the House to a list of beneficiaries inserted in the Senate debate by Senator BINGHAM, and since that time incorporated in the minority report on this bill, stating at the time I called attention to the list "in order that Members may study the list, as it shows the men in the States who are beneficiaries of" the bill and in order that they might "know definitely" what they were voting for.

The American Legion's representatives in Washington have sent out a bulletin in which they charge that what I did that day was "unjust and misleading." Is it "unjust and misleading" to call the attention of the House to the benefits they are asked to confer on individuals and to ask that they know what they are doing before they do it? A statement had been made in one of the House committees and reiterated by several Members that the "golf champion of South Dakota" was a beneficiary of the bill. I determined the name of the man to whom they referred. He has a 35 per cent disability and would, if the bill becomes a law, draw $218.75 a month according to the Veterans' Bureau report. His name is William A. Hazle, of Aberdeen, S. Dak. I wired a friend in Omaha, Nebr., to get me Mr. Hazle's golf championship record. He wired Aberdeen and received a reply, which was sent to me, that Mr. Hazle "holds nearly all amateur championship titles north part of the State." That, of course, confirmed the statement that had previously been made here about him, and accordingly I made that statement in discussing this bill.

The following day I received a telegram from one E. B. Harkin of Aberdeen, S. Dak., stating in denial of the telegram that had been sent the previous day and upon which my statement was based that Mr. Hazle is not a golf champion and that "I am sorry that you were misled and that you in turn misled your auditors." Colonel Hazle has also denied that he is a golf champion. There is no denial that he plays golf. Neither is there any denial, and there is an admission, of the other facts as stated by me. Inquiry at the War Department discloses "that he was discharged June 16, 1919, at which time no physical defects were reported." He holds at this time a commission as a colonel in the Adjutant General's Department Reserve, and is presumed to be fit for duty. I am also advised that he is at the present time adjutant general of South Dakota. And yet by this bill it is proposed to increase his compensation from $35 a month to $218.75 a month.

Members can go through the list. There is a general now drawing $60 a month, who, if this bill becomes a law, will receive $375 a month for life.

There is the New York judge now on a salary of $12,000 a year who is to be "retired for disability" if this becomes a law, but will continue as judge.

There is an employee of the Veterans' Bureau drawing a salary of $3,000 a year with a 31 per cent disability who will receive $3,000 a year additional by way of compensation. The list of beneficiaries has been furnished you. Take it for your State. Compare the officer, partially disabled, who receives these great benefits with the enlisted man, totally disabled, who receives $100 a month—or the man with his eyes gone who gets $150 per month. Compare these men in that great list of beneficiaries with those men sick in body and soul for whom you have tried to get compensation these years and failed. Study the list of beneficiaries, with all of its glaring injustices and discriminations, and decide if you want with your vote to approve what it does.

Again, the same American Legion Bulletin, still referring to me, says:

> A true friend of the officers who fought the World War could cite the instance of hundreds of them still on their backs as a result of their war service, and whose children have been brought up in comparative poverty because of the sacrifices made by their father.

I am trying to be a "true friend" not only of the officers, but also of the enlisted men who fought in the World War. I can cite the "instance of hundreds of them still on their backs as a result of their war service." To be exact, on September 30, 1927, there were 573 emergency officers with a rating of temporary total disability, emergency officers for whom this bill does absolutely nothing, to whom it gives no increase of compensation, outcasts in the opinion of the backers of this bill, and yet "they also served."

I remember visiting with some of them at Oteen Hospital three years ago. Bedfast for four years, but with a temporary rating, and therefore not among the elect that this bill benefits. I can "cite the instance" not of "hundreds," but of over 7,000 emergency officers now drawing compensation from the Veterans' Bureau whom this bill does not aid because they have temporary or less than 30 per cent permanent ratings.

And yet those of us who oppose this bill and ask for equal treatment to all of America's men who became disabled during the emergency are charged with not being "true friends" of those who served.

And again, these men who assume to speak for the American Legion and its membership refer to those officers "whose children have been brought up in comparative poverty because of the sacrifices made by their father."

Is the pinch of "poverty" more severe on the child of an officer than on the child of an enlisted man?

Is the pinch of "poverty" more severe on the child of an officer who is living than it is on the child of an officer who is dead?

Is the obligation of the Government to the one greater than to the other?

Have those who thus assume to speak for America's service men so soon forgotten the appeal they made for $5,000,000 to endow a fund to aid the orphan of their buddy who has "gone west"? Obviously so, for the child of the officer and enlisted man dead, for whom they then appealed, is entirely overlooked by this bill.

They have forgotten that enlisted men have children, that temporarily disabled officers have children, and they have forgotten the children of the officer dead, for whom there should be the greatest solicitude.

Will the American Legion approve this discrimination, this forgetting—I take it not.

In an American Legion bulletin of April 21, 1928, the statement is made that those of us who are opposed to this bill have—> neglected to state that 3 of these badly crippled officers wear the congressional medal of honor, while 82 were awarded the distinguished-service cross for gallantry in action beyond the call of duty.

All honor and credit to those officers. There is not a person on this floor who would detract one iota from the glory that is theirs. But here, again, the question comes of a discrimination between two groups within one class.

There are 90 medal of honor men in the United States, identified survivors of the World War. Are the 3 who were emergency officers entitled to greater consideration than the 87 remaining who likewise hold the coveted medal of honor?

There were 6,042 distinguished-service cross awards made for World War gallantry beyond the call of duty. And in addition 115 oak leaf clusters were awarded to those already holding the distinguished-service cross, or a total of 6,157 awards. Again, may I ask are the 82 disabled emergency officers whose great service has been recognized by that award entitled to more consideration than the 6,075 who rendered the same distinguished service and received the same award?

Is the Congress going to pick out of that small group of honored men a still smaller group to whom increased compensation shall be given?

I do not believe that those men—honored as they have been and now are for their exceptional service—would ask that they be treated differently than the greater group of those who hold similar awards, the large majority of whom were enlisted men.

What argument is there left for the bill? Just one—several of the great veteran organizations have indorsed it. But they have not known the facts; the committee handling this bill this Congress refused to hold hearings on it, refused to allow opponents and inquiring Members to investigate it—and now it is before you by a committee vote of 8 to 7—without a word of testimony for you to consider, no hearings, nothing on which to act. And yet you have received letters, telegrams, telephone calls, and personal calls from your constituents demanding that you pass this bill without amendment, "without the dotting of an i or the crossing of a t," demands that the membership of this body ignore their duty to consider legislation, that they surrender their rights as Members of this body, and blindly obey orders of whom? You are receiving these communications from your home people, but they do not originate there. They originate here in Washington.

I have here some of the bulletins on this matter sent out by the national legislation committee of the American Legion. I shall read quotations from some of them. Members may examine the bulletins. I now quote:

> This is a session of Congress when nearly everything that they do * * * can be used against them.
> You ought to see to it that these Congressmen are pledged * * * to support this legislation, because once they are elected then comes the "lame-duck" session of Congress and they can break their promises.
> I have received a lot of letters from different men * * * assuring me our "Senators and Congressmen are with you." That does not mean a thing. What we have got to have is the individual Congressman by name and the individual Senator by name that is for our particular legislation, and then we can put them down in the "yes" column.
> When we send out the word to send telegrams to Congressmen and Senators, come down just as fast and hard as you can make them come down.
>
> I have said before, and it is just as true as can be, these fellows listen to the voice of the folks back home.
> I am going to ask you, as you get our bulletins which we send out each week * * * lay out definite plans * * * so that you can put pressure on the different Senators and Congressmen.
>
> From time to time it is the intention of the legislative committee to call upon the various departments and members of the Legion for assistance in developing public sentiment. There are two principal methods by which this support can be evidenced in such a way as to have a compelling influence upon Members of Congress:
> First, mass meetings * * * in the district of those members who are in opposition to our program. The second method is by way of letters to the various Members of Congress.
> Form letters to Members of Congress are not to be encouraged. The members of the post, when requested to write letters should develop their own letter. It is far better to have a hundred letters, * * * expressing an interest in certain legislation and a desire for its enactment, than to have a thousand form letters received which are usually discounted as having all come from the same interested source.

Here is the weekly bulletin for January 12, 1928, of the national legislative committee of the American Legion. I quote from it:

The enactment of legislation is accomplished more by constructive education * * *. This is especially true during a "presidential session" when legislators are more keenly alert concerning their constituents' wishes than at other times. * * *

Education now is, therefore, more productive of results than normally. Legion officials should therefore keep in mind this imperative matter of education.

January 21, 1928, this bulletin was sent out regarding this bill:

Legionnaires must keep in mind, that although the opponents of this measure are few in number they have unusual ability * * *. Legion officials should watch the progress of this legislation closely and keep in constant communication with their Senators and Congressmen so that your legislators may not be allowed to forget the intense interest which the World War veterans have in this legislation.

On March 22, 1928, a "special retirement bulletin" was issued, stating:

The friends of the bill in the committee considerably outnumber its opponents.

The report states the committee vote was 8 to 7.

The bill must be reported favorably on Monday—and without amendment.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. I regret I can not yield.

Mr. CROWTHER. I would like to know who signs those.

Mr. SIMMONS. John Thomas Taylor.

Mr. CROWTHER. You say John Thomas Taylor?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. That was on the 22d of March.

They were after the World War Veterans' Committee in this bulletin.

The members of the committee are overwhelmingly loyal to the cause of the disabled; but some of them are misled by the whisperings of opponents. Let them know that you are not misled and want them to push on straight ahead to victory.

Then follows a list of the committee by name and State, with instructions to "write and wire the ones from your State."

March 24, 1928, two days later, another bulletin went out, stating:

Committee members are already hearing from legion officials * * *. The showdown will come Monday morning, March 26, at 10 o'clock, when the committee votes whether or not the Tyson bill shall be immediately reported without amendment.

I am not prepared to say how much the committee was influenced by these bulletins, but on March 26 the committee refused to hold hearings on the bill, and by a vote of 8 to 7 ordered the bill reported without amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. The committee was called together to give hearings on the bill, but for some unknown reason they came to the conclusion to report the bill out.

Mr. SIMMONS. On March 31, another bulletin was issued. I quote:

Write your Senators and Congressmen immediately. Explain the Legion's program in detail. Show them the justice of our measures.

April 14, another bulletin about this bill stated:

"No amendments from the floor" must be the Legion's watchword on this measure. See to it that your Congressman understands this thoroughly.

Insist that your Congressman resist all amendments proposed from the floor so that after its passage by the House it will go straight to the President for approval.

Again in the bulletin on April 21, 1928, this appears:

The friends of the bill will resist every amendment proposed from the floor. Let your Congressman know this. * * *

Victory will come through pressing on toward our objective with an unamended bill. So insist that your Congressman vote against all amendments offered from the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for 10 minutes more.

Mr. SIMMONS. After all this carefully planned propaganda on the part of the national legislative committee of the American Legion, after all these instructions have gone out to American Legion officials "to see to it that Congressmen are pledged"; that when "we send out word to send telegrams to Congressmen and Senators" to "come down just as fast and hard as you can," to "put pressure" on Congressmen; "to have a compelling influence" on Congressmen; "to write letters" but not "form letters" to Congressmen; that "education" of Congressmen "is imperative"; instructions not to allow Congressmen "to forget the intense interest" which the World War veterans have in the bill; instructions to "see to it" that Congressmen "understand" that there shall be no amendments, to "insist" on that. After all that has been going out for weeks from Washington in the name of the national legislative committee of the American Legion, and as a result Congress has been flooded with propaganda for this bill; after all of that there is issued this bulletin of April 28, 1928, sent out over the signature of the vice chairman of that committee, stating—evidences of organized propaganda against the disabled officers' measure heretofore carried on under cover are coming more and more to light—inspired letters are being received from other sources, showing that our opponents are working at top speed.

These men who have fostered and organized and conducted for years a propaganda for this bill now set up a straw man and then condemn the very practice that they themselves have developed and followed.

Then they charge that we who oppose this bill are "striving to defeat the American Legion and to weaken its influence at the Nation's Capital" and that we are fighting the "disabled officers and the Legion." Those statements are not true. This fight is not a fight against the disabled officers. It is a fight for equal justice to all disabled men of the World War—officer and enlisted. It is not a fight against the American Legion. This bill is not the American Legion, neither is the American Legion this bill, and the fight is against this bill. Neither is the person who issues these bulletins the American Legion. The American Legion is bigger and finer, cleaner and stronger than any man or set of men. [Applause.]

No one opposed to this bill wants to weaken the "influence" of the American Legion in "the National Capital." For six years I have fought here for the American Legion, its ideals, and the bills carrying out its declared principles. I am fighting this bill because it is entirely out of harmony with every ideal of the American Legion. If there is anything that will weaken the influence of that great organization in Congress it will be not only the support of bills of this character but, more than that, the methods that have been used by those who temporarily serve the American Legion here in the support of this bill.

But why this sudden shift? Heretofore the proponents of this measure have allowed the bill to stand on its own merits—but now the proponents of the bill attempt to push the bill to one side and put the American Legion in its stead. The bill has failed to withstand attack. Now they attempt to change the issue from one against the bill to one against the Legion. The only purpose of the charge that we are fighting the American Legion is to try and bring about a situation where the issue when we vote on this bill will not be "Shall the bill pass?" but will be "Are you for the American Legion?" That move also will fail, the fight will continue to be against the bill; it will not be, is not, and never has been against the American Legion, and every Member of this House knows it.

The bulletin further states:

The Legion should meet the propagandists and whisperers with a clean, vigorous, honorable fight * * *.

I agree that the Legion should, but will it? The propagandists and whisperers are those who claim to speak here in Washington for the American Legion. The House has been deluged with the result of their efforts. Those of us who have opposed this bill have done so in the open, speaking against it on the floor of the House, in the committees, in committee reports. Personally, I have spoken against this in American Legion conventions. Why then charge us with being "whisperers and progagandists"? The Legion should, and in my judgment would, if it knew the facts, meet "propagandists and whisperers with a clean, vigorous, honorable fight." When it does there will be a change in personnel in the national legislative committee, and a change of procedure of the American Legion's representatives in Washington. When that is done there will be no more misrepresentation of the American Legion in the Nation's Capital, and the prestige and influence of that great organization will be strengthened thereby.

The man who issued these bulletins sits in the gallery smiling, watching. The letters that he asked for have been written. He watches to find out whether or not the membership of this House will obey his instructions to pass this bill without amendment. We shall see as the bill progresses to what extent

Members have surrendered their right to consider, to weigh, and pass on legislation to the dominance of these few men who claim to speak for America's veterans.

I realize that there are Members of the House who have pledged to vote for disabled emergency officers' legislation. But surely no Member has pledged to vote for any bill that may be offered, surely no Member is pledged to vote for this particular legislation "without amendment," and surely no Member has pledged to surrender entirely his duty to consider, weigh, and act on amendments to this bill with the same full consideration that is accorded all legislation in this House. Personally I do not believe that the membership of this House will refuse to consider amendments to this bill.

President Lincoln closed his second inaugural with these words, which are particularly applicable here:

> Let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the Nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and his orphan.

Lincoln's policy of one for all, all for one, with no distinction as to rank, has been the American policy from that day to this—this Congress should not depart from it. [Continued applause.]

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON]. [Applause.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, it has rarely happened in my brief service in Congress that I have found myself in disagreement with my colleague from Tennessee, a man for whom I have not only a great respect, but an unbounded admiration; but in this case, much as I regret it, I can not agree with the distinguished gentleman. So much opposition seems to have recently developed regarding this bill that I am forced to believe the reason must be that it does not carry a sufficient amount of money. I believe if it carried many hundreds of millions of dollars instead of less than $3,000,000, and had a rich lobby supporting it, it would be passed without a record vote, and yet no legislation before this Congress is more important than this bill providing for the relief of disabled emergency officers of the World War.

I feel quite sure that it never has been the intention of Congress, or the American people, to discriminate against any officer who suffered for his country in that world conflict. We know most of these men gave up responsible positions at great personal sacrifice to answer the call and fight for the safety of America.

This measure is important, not only to the men directly interested in it, but to the country as a whole; for the Nation owes a debt of honor to these men, a debt which Congress so far has neglected to recognize.

This bill would allow the disabled emergency Army officers, who served in the United States Army during the World War, the same rate of retirement for their wounds that has been allowed the other eight classes of American officers who fought in the war.

I refer to the regular, provisional, and emergency Navy officers, the regular, provisional, and emergency Marine officers, and Regular and provisional Army officers—all who have retirement—but please note that the emergency Army officers are omitted from this list. Why discriminate against these brave men?

The selective service act of May, 1917, put all officers and men not of the Regular Army on the same footing as regards pay, allowances, and pensions with officers and men of the Regular Army. Yet for almost eight years there has been a discrimination against the emergency officers.

I am speaking on the moral side of this question, leaving the financial end of it to Mr. FITZGERALD, who has fully explained it to the satisfaction of all—but the obstructionists. It is time for them to step aside.

This story has been told many times before in the last few years, but it will bear repeating; in fact, it must be kept in the public mind until the present unjust discrimination against the disabled emergency officers has come to an end.

I am informed that efforts have been made in every session of Congress since 1920 to right this wrong. Twice bills have passed the Senate by large majorities, only to be sidetracked in the House, without even permitting it to come to a vote.

As a member of the Veterans' Committee, I have voted to report this bill out in the Sixty-ninth Congress and again in the present Congress. It seems unthinkable that Congress will fail again in so plain a duty.

It is not true, as asserted by the obstructionists, that the enlisted men are opposed to this bill. Ninety per cent of the American Legion served in the ranks, and ten times the Legion has approved the principle of the proposed legislation.

Seven times the Disabled American Veterans have recorded their commendation. Personally, I have had representatives from several other organizations call upon me, urging me to use my influence (little as it may be) to bring this measure to a vote in the House. I am glad the bill has finally arrived here after being caged in the Rules Committee for so long. Organizations, such as the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the United States Blind Veterans' Association, the Military Order of the World War, the National Guard Association, the Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense, composed of 33 national patriotic women's organizations, indorsed it at their conference last year; which conference I had the honor to address. The General Federation of Women's Clubs, speaking for 7,000,000 women, indorsed it at their national convention. These are only a few of the splendid organizations which have voiced their approval of this worthy bill.

Who are the opponents of this bill? Who is leading the opposition to this bill and prevented it from coming to the floor of the House for so long a time? Why does not the opposition show itself?

Some of the feeble opponents of this bill—for they seem afraid to voice their opposition or be recorded against it—whisper that it is "class legislation." If this is class legislation, so are the eight other grade of officers already cared for, class legislation. Why discriminate against the last class, the volunteers?

These men were not professional soldiers. They had not been singled out, educated, and provided with economic security for life by the Nation. They went in from patriotic motives and for the war period, and they suffered disability in proportion to their number.

It is said that 93 per cent of the Army officers killed in action were emergency officers. It is further stated that the Government is now paying out in annual compensation to these disabled officers the sum of $2,841,960 through the Veterans' Bureau. Deducting that amount from the actual estimated expense to the Government of this bill, if enacted into law, which would be $4,985,100 annually, would leave the sum of $2,143,100 annual increased cost of retirement. This covers all officers found to be 30 per cent permanently disabled, including the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. I believe 3,251 officers in all.

These men are asking you for simple justice. They were volunteers in the great service and as important a part of the Army of the World War as were the regular officers. Our work will not be complete until these noble volunteers are recognized and receive the same benefits as the other officers.

I recall that the Secretary of War, Mr. Davis, gave his sanction to the bill in a letter to the chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee. Mr. Davis, however, wrote that the Director of the Budget had advised him that "the proposed legislation" was "in conflict with the financial program of the President."

Surely, arguments of economy do not hold in this instance, for there are only a small number of men involved, and a correspondingly small amount of money.

Other bills, involving hundreds of millions, have been passed by this Congress, some without even taking time for a record vote; but they were sponsored by big business and sustained by powerful lobbies, representing the great financial interests of the country, while the emergency officers of the Great War, who brought a new freedom and prosperity to America, control only a lobby of grateful men and women who remember their sacrifices, their sufferings, and their renunciation of everything that life held dear and sacred.

I am sure, gentlemen—appreciating that I do not need to appeal to the gentlewomen—that you will heed the concentrated voice of this human lobby, for many of you sitting here to-day voted to send these men to war. It was a solemn moment, but not more solemn than the moment to-day—when, by your vote, on this bill, you shall or shall not justify that other vote.

I can not believe that President Coolidge would veto this bill, if it finally passes the House, in spite of the obstructionists. The country does not want money saved at the expense of those noble men of the World War.

Let us pass this bill as our small tribute to their great courage and loyalty to America and to the flag that has never known defeat. [Applause.]

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMBS].

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have listened with very deep interest to the closely reasoned arguments of both the gentlemen from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS], but I can not resist the belief that both of them have missed the genuine issue involved in this controversy.

At the time the United States entered the World War the selective service act was adopted by the Congress of the United States and the bill which is before us to-day is nothing more than the redemption of a valid and binding pledge made by the Congress of the United States at that time. If you will permit me to read the wording of section 10 of the selective service act of May, 1917, you, perhaps, can follow more closely the argument I should like briefly to make upon it:

SEC. 10. That all officers and enlisted men of the forces herein provided for other than the Regular Army shall be in all respects on the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades and length of service in the Regular Army.

Whatever distinction there may have been between the officers of the Regular Army and those who were designated as emergency officers was abolished by the express phraseology of the selective service act of 1917.

The gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] told you a moment ago that there were three classes of officers affected. Briefly, the disposition that has been made of the retirement problems of these classes is as follows:

The provisional officers of the Army were given absolute equality with, and the same retirement privileges enjoyed by, the Regular Army officer, by the act passed in the summer of 1918. The second class composed of the officers, provisional, regular, and emergency, of the Navy were expressly cared for by the act of 1920. In this connection I would call your attention to the fact that this bill was sponsored by the Navy Department and was championed throughout its legislative course by the Secretary of the Navy in the year 1920, showing that there was a clear understanding on the part of the Navy that all of its officers should be recognized as on a complete parity and equality with those who were of its regular officer personnel. Now, the last class comes before you asking recognition. If we are to discharge the obligation expressly assumed by this Nation in the terms of the act of 1917, there is no other course we can pursue but to grant this relief.

The American Legion, my colleagues, I believe, needs no apologist. It is thoroughly representative of the service men throughout this country. Its representatives have fully as much right to petition this Congress as have the representatives of any industrial or business group. [Applause.] They have come here asking the membership of the House to fulfill a definite obligation which this Government owes to a single class of officers for which provision has not yet been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. COMBS. In conclusion, let me say that the bill has been here in various forms for six or seven years. If there is any discrimination in it, it at least has never aroused the animosity of the rank and file of the service men of this country. I was an enlisted man myself. I held no commission during the war, and I think I can speak without partiality or prejudice. The enlisted men, represented by the American Legion, have heartily indorsed this bill because they believe it to be equitable and fair in its provisions. [Applause.] If there had been any discrimination in the bill which these men believed reflected unfairly upon them and their services to their country it would certainly have come to a head within the seven years' time that this bill has been pending here. The fact that it has not is eloquent proof that the rank and file of the Legion and of the ex-service men of this country are solidly behind this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMBS] quoted part of section 9 of the selective draft law of 1917 and then stated that on account of this language these men should be pensioned.

This is practically the same language we had in 1812 and is the same language practically that we had for the Mexican War, the Civil War, and the war of 1898, word for word, and nobody will contend that the volunteer officers in the War of 1812 were entitled to pensions or increased compensation above the enlisted men.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman know that they did receive exactly what was promised them? There was not any retirement until the Civil War.

Mr. JAMES. Let me read the language.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. But Congress fulfilled its obligation, and they got it.

Mr. JAMES. Let me first read the language with respect to 1812:

And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to form the corps of Volunteers into battalions, squadrons, brigades, and divisions, and to appoint thereto, by and with the consent of the Senate, general, field, and staff officers, conformably with the Military Establishments of the United States, and who shall be entitled to the pay and emoluments of a similar grade in the Army of the United States.

For the Mexican War there was the following provision:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That whenever the Militia or Volunteers are called and received into the service of the United States under the provisions of this act, they shall have the same organizations of the Army of the United States, and shall have the same pay and allowances.

Now, what happened in 1898 when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] and others enlisted? What did that law provide? It was as follows:

SEC. 12. That all officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army, and of the militia of the States when in the service of the United States, shall be in all respects on the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as that of officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades in the Regular Army.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. I yield.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. And no officer of the Spanish War has ever even asked for this, not to speak of claiming it as a matter of right.

Mr. JAMES. That is quite true.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Let us put the emphasis upon what is the fact, that the very language that has been quoted to sustain this argument, negatives it. If it was intended that these emergency officers should be admitted to retirement privileges, why, of course, the act would have said so because we had a retirement act as to Regular Army officers, and there is nothing at all said in the language quoted as to retirement. It is perfectly true that the pay and allowances of emergency officers was to be exactly the same as the pay and allowance of officers of the Regular Army, but I have seen nothing in the law providing for the retirement of emergency officers, especially for a disability no greater than 30 per cent. I have always supported equality of compensation between officers and enlisted men. It is a Democratic principle.

Mr. JAMES. Here is the language with respect to service on the Mexican border:

Officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States under the terms of this section shall have the same pay and allowance as officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army of the same grades and the same prior service.

The provision with respect to the war of 1861 reads as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, that the officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates, organized as above set forth, shall in all respects be placed on the footing, as to pay and allowances, of similar corps of the Regular Army.

Do these provisions mean that in 1898 when men were enlisted as privates and others enlisted at the same time as officers, that when they came out of the service and went back into civil life, as we all did, that the officers were to go on the pension list under a different grade from those of us who went in from civil life as enlisted men, leaving good positions? Why, not at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman please read what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMBS] just read?

Mr. JAMES. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The law under which these officers enlisted.

Mr. JAMES. It is section 9 of the selective service law and is as follows:

SEC. 9. That all officers and enlisted men of the forces herein provided for, other than the Regular Army, shall be in all respects on the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades and length of service in the Regular Army.

In other words, in 1812, 1846, 1861, 1898, and during the Mexican border expedition and during the World War the language has been practically the same, word for word. There has never been any provision under which the volunteer officers were to be treated any differently from the volunteer enlisted men, and they ought not to be now. I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY].

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I can not say much in three minutes. I was not in the war, I did not have the privilege of getting into it, I was too old to get into it; but I want to say now that whenever a person who did go into it and went across the sea and was wounded and comes to this Congress and wants relief, I for one am not going to get behind some specious argument to try to keep him from getting that relief, when at the same time we are giving it to the Regular Army officers.

The real folks who are opposed to this bill are the General Staff and we might as well call a spade a spade and a shovel a shovel. The men who are in the Regular Army are the ones who have defeated this legislation for seven or eight years and for one I do not think it is fair, because it is only a mere pittance that they are asking.

There are two men in my town who would be beneficiaries under this legislation, one who is a Republican postmaster and the other is a Democrat. The man who is a Democrat was shot all to pieces and is now wearing an ear taken from a dead German. [Laughter.] You can laugh at that, and, of course, it may seem a funny thing to some of you, and that is the manner in which some of you are approaching this legislation. There is nothing too good for this man. Under this bill he gets only $125 a month, and he is shot all to pieces. He is a man who was 41 years old when he went into the Army. I refer to that brave officer, Lieut. Tom C. Daniels.

Mr. SMITH. How much compensation does he draw now?

Mr. ABERNETHY. He draws about $85 a month and under this bill he would get $125 a month.

There are only five men in my district who are interested in this legislation. Is that any reason why I should be against it?

The American Legion post of my city passed on this very matter a few weeks ago. Out of 84 members present 7 were officers and 77 enlisted men. There was but 1 vote against this legislation.

I voted for your flood relief bill $325,000,000. We voted out a million and more dollars for a monument out in Indiana for one George Rogers Clark, who went out through the Northwest in the early part of our history. Now, there is the gentleman from Alabama, Major JEFFERS, as brave an officer as ever went to war—ask him how he feels about this legislation. Then there is another officer, Major REECE. Ask him how he feels about it. I tell you it is nothing but exact justice for these men, and I can not figure out how we will get by the proposition without granting them this relief, and you who are opposing it will have more to explain than I will for I am for the legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the House, as I stated in my questions to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] I was an enlisted man during the war. I enlisted as a private in Company A, One hundred and first Infantry, what was formerly known as the Fighting Irish Ninth Massachusetts Regiment, and later I became a color sergeant of that regiment.

It seems to me, as my distinguished colleague and buddy from Missouri [Mr. COMBS] said, we have been missing the crux of this matter. I like to listen to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and I like to hear from the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] when they stand up here and give us wonderful talks about the Constitution of the United States and why we should not pass legislation that is going to tear up the foundations of the Republic. I have listened to that kind of talk for five years, and to use a common expression, it is a lot of bunk. [Laughter and applause.]

I say that advisedly, because some men who have talked here to-day tell us they would like to do something for the disabled men and for the enlisted men, but these are the same men who were responsible for making the Veterans' Committee cut $20,000,000 off the bill which General Hines said would take $39,000,000 to take care of the disabled men.

Mr. O'CONNELL. What did General Lord say?

Mr. CONNERY. General Lord never agrees with the Veterans' Committee on anything. I was an enlisted man. I had the honor and privilege—one of those glorious privileges [sarcastically] they talk about—of standing in the front-line trenches and fighting the cooties and the rats, and the glorious privilege [sarcastically] we had on the front of fighting the Germans, and I saw these disabled emergency officers that legislators are telling us should not be discriminated in favor of—I saw many of the 93 per cent of the emergency officers of the World War who went into the trenches and over the top with the enlisted men, wounded and shot down, while only 7 per cent of the officers of the Regular Army were casualties in battle. Ninety-three per cent of the officer casualties were emergency officers. I did not see the Regular Army officers at Chaumont because we could not get that far back, those men that the late Hon. James Gallivan called the "highly tailored staff"—they were at Chaumont, way back of the front line. And note they come under the retirement act. If they had fallen off a horse, they could get retirement pay; but men like Lieut. Arnold Brewer and our beloved Lieutenant Harriman, who had a wife and little daughter—who went over the top—was shot six times whilst saving his men from a flank attack in a trench at Humbert Plantation in France, would not be entitled to retirement pay because it would be a discrimination [sarcastically].

Now, my colleagues, do not get it into your heads that the enlisted men do not want their buddies, these disabled emergency officers, taken care of. I have the highest respect for the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS], my colleague, my brother service man. I believe he is sincere. I believe all the rest of the service men who are talking against this are sincere. They think it is a discrimination against the enlisted men, but it is not. I was looking over the minority report, and discovered something that I have never known before. I find out that every man from my district—that is, every one of these disabled officers—is permanently and totally disabled under the Veterans' Bureau. Under that they are entitled to $100 a month, and under this bill they will be entitled to $125 a month. I claim that I am speaking for as many service men as is the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska, and the opponents of this bill. I was in a division that saw some fighting in France, the Twenty-sixth Division, the division that President Wilson had Christmas dinner with, because that division had served longer at the front in France in the front lines than any other division. So we saw some fighting. I knew those men. I saw these emergency officers in battle. They had courage and leadership to the *n*th degree. Their men would follow them anywhere and into any danger. They were heroes of the highest order. They went into battle leading their men. They were wounded. They are disabled. Every officer in the Marine Corps, every officer in the United States Regular Army and in the Navy has this retirement feature except the men who, to my mind, fought the war, the men who fought the war alongside of their buddies. You can not find an enlisted man who was in the Forty-second Division, that wonderful Rainbow Division, or in the Twenty-seventh Division, that great New York division, or a man who was in the First or Second Division, or in the marines, or in the Third Division, the Fourth Division, or the Seventy-ninth Division, or the Thirtieth Division, or in any of those fighting divisions that went up to the front—you can not find any enlisted man in any of those divisions who would tell you to vote against this bill. They know better than that.

They know that their officers, their second lieutenants, had a harder time to live on the pay that they got than the sergeants. They had to buy their own uniforms. They had many incidental expenses in their mess, and in respect to their food, that the sergeants did not have. In the Army we sergeants used to say that we were much better off financially than the second lieutenant. These men shared all the hardships of the enlisted men and we believe they are entitled to this retirement pay now.

We have heard a lot about friendship for the enlisted man to-day. The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] said that he would like to see something done for the disabled men by correcting conditions in the Veterans' Bureau. The service men have no better friend than Mr. CROWTHER. He was the man, a Republican who was game enough, on the Ways and Means Committee, to vote against his party for a cash bonus for the soldier, or to give him his choice between cash and that undertaker's bonus we got—and an undertaker's bonus is what it is, something with which a man's widow can pay the undertaker after he has gone. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] is a friend of the service men, and a real friend, because it takes courage to go against your party. He said that he would like to see something done for the men who are up against the Veterans' Bureau at the present time, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] said it was a matter of legislation. I think both gentlemen are partly right and partly wrong. The trouble lies in both directions. We need legislation to take care of the disabled men, and we need humanity in the Veterans' Bureau, because we have some of these horse doctors, as I have called them before, down there, who declare a man has active tuberculosis to-day and to-morrow say that he has bronchitis.

We need to get rid of those men and get real doctors in there—and remember I do not say that all the doctors in the bureau are horse doctors. Some are A1 doctors and are doing great work for the disabled men—and, on the other hand, we need to get some legislation out of the veterans' committee which will take care of cancer and diabetes and put diseases under the presumption clause which are not under that clause now. In conjunction with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING] I have been fighting for that for five years. We have been trying hard to get that through. The distinguished lady from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] and the distinguished lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] and other members of that committee, have tried to get such legislation put in the statutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman notice the salaries of these men in the Veterans' Bureau he is talking about, and what they will draw under this bill?

Mr. CONNERY. If a man who was disabled 30 per cent were getting $10,000 a year, I would say to give him this retirement. He has earned it. Look at the men who scratched the desks in Washington with their spurs during the war. Some of them are getting $20,000 a year. To use the doughboy vernacular, "They fought a 'tough' war."

Mr. RANKIN. I will excuse the gentleman with that statement.

Mr. CONNERY. I would be willing to give the disabled emergency officers anything that the Regular Army officers get or that the Navy officers get, or the officers in the Marine Corps.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Or the enlisted man.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does not this bill take care of certain disabled emergency officers who had their spurs on the desks in Washington?

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, no; this has got to be connected with service, to be wounded in battle——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no; oh, no.

Mr. CONNERY. It says connected with the service. Perhaps you did not have to get it in battle, but practically all of the disabled emergency Army officers were disabled in battle; but so far as the Regular Army man is concerned it would not make any difference. If he stubs his toe, he gets it.

Mrs. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Certainly. With pleasure I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS. The Members of the House ought to know what an extremely gallant record the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] had in France. The men of his division, the Yankee Division, have told me of his great bravery, of his unfailing cheer, and of his fighting. We all know in the House how he can fight for a cause. The Yankee Division men have told me of his unselfishness. They have told me that three times he refused to become an officer because he felt he could be of more assistance if he stayed in the trenches with the men. He was the color sergeant of the One hundred and First Infantry of the Yankee Division, which was formerly known as the "Fighting Irish Ninth Massachusetts." When his colonel, Edward L. Logan, on three separate occasions asked him to go to the officers' school, he said that he preferred to remain a color sergeant as he could stay in the trenches and help keep up the courage of his buddies. Before the war Mr. CONNERY had been on the stage for two years, and every one who has heard his stories knows what an actor he was and always will be. He can make every one laugh and forget for a time. Hundreds of men in his division have told me that BILLY CONNERY, as they affectionately called him, did more to keep up their morale in those days of horror and dread waiting than anyone else could possibly have done. We have every reason to be extremely proud of our colleague. If you could hear his comrades cheer him, you would know how deeply they love him and respect his sacrifice.

He served in every battle and in every engagement from the time they went into the trenches on February 6, 1918, until he was sent to the hospital in October, 1918. The One hundred and first Infantry fought in the Chemier des Dames sector, the Toul sector, at Chateau-Thierry, at St. Mihiel, and in the Argonne Forest. Larry Connery, our color-sergeant colleague's brother, who was top sergeant of A Company of the same regiment, in conjunction with three privates, captured 39 German prisoners in the St. Mihiel drive. They were the first prisoners captured by the Twenty-sixth Division in that drive.

As Larry Connery and BILLY CONNERY are the only two boys in the family, Mr. and Mrs. William P. Connery, of Lynn, Mass., gave to the World War 100 per cent. Both boys' records were 100 per cent. And both these enlisted boys want this bill enacted 100 per cent.

I know the gentleman would not discriminate against the emergency officers who had to remain in this country, who had the flu, and were disabled as a result of that, and who had tuberculosis, and who were injured and sick in this country, and who were never able to go to France. They are included in this bill, and the gentleman would include them I know. While they did not have service in France, they also served.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; many officers and men who tried hard to go to France were refused that opportunity; I honor and respect them, and I say that one of my ideas in trying to get this bill through is that the Congress of the United States will eventually see the justice of bringing the enlisted disabled service men up to a higher point of compensation and not discriminate against the disabled emergency officer of the Army.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Certainly. Then I will yield to our able Democratic leader, the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman realize that in the over 28,000 employees of the Veterans' Bureau there are 49 of those men who may be prospective beneficiaries of this act who are forced to continue their employment in order to keep a roof over their heads, and that with this money which they would receive they would be able to pay the interest on the mortgage that is held on their homes?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; I can realize that; and there are many just like them in other walks of life. Now I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it the purpose to bring the enlisted men up in compensation to this same level?

Mr. CONNERY. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that from my knowledge of the workings of Congress since I have been a Member here, I will take everything I can get for the soldier when I get a chance, because you know the soldier gets little enough at best; and if this is something that will help the disabled and wounded officers it may serve also to help my disabled buddies in the enlisted ranks by giving them a higher rate of compensation. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is fine. The gentleman has been a great advocate of this bill, and a very intelligent advocate of it.

Mr. CONNERY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But it means that this is the wedge under which eventually he expects to bring the enlisted man up to the level of the officer?

Mr. CONNERY. I hope so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is what the gentleman says?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. I hope to see my buddy, who served in the ranks with me in the Army, brought up where he belongs, and not continue to get only $30 a month for 30 per cent disability.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I wonder if the gentleman now would be willing to accept an amendment to do that?

Mr. CONNERY. I will say that, knowing the workings of Congress, as I said before, I do not want to see anything put on that will kill the bill, because I have seen bills killed before in the House, and I have seen bills killed also in committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not trying to kill the bill. I am against the bill, of course, but I do not seek through any parliamentary maneuver whatever, to destroy the bill. I wish that Members who have inadvertently committed themselves to the proposition may have the opportunity of carrying out their promises.

Mr. CONNERY. When I say that I hope that this bill will prove to be a wedge to bring justice to the enlisted personnel of the Army and Navy and Marine Corps, I mean that I would like to see this bill pass, and, as a result of its passing, get results.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This involves a change of policy in the law that will probably exist for 10 or 15 years. There have been few measures pending within the House during the gentleman's service, and in my time, that involved so great a change of policy as this.

Mr. CONNERY. Well, if it is a change of policy, I think it is a change of policy in the right direction, because when we get a change of policy in this Congress that will give the soldier his just deserts, then we will be on the right track. I hope that kind of policy will be adhered to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. When the gentleman says "soldier," does he mean a soldier or an officer?

Mr. CONNERY. I mean both; because a good officer, I believe, is a good soldier, and a good soldier would be a good officer if he had the opportunity. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Ohio use some more of his time.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will take five minutes for myself.

I am glad to take this opportunity, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, to call the attention of the House to a decision of the Judge Advocate General's office, which determines the status under retirement and by which we may interpret the law and the obligation which the Congress and the country entered into with those men when it promised them that they would be treated absolutely as officers of the Regular Establishment were treated. But some one suggests that they did not use the word "retirement." Retirement pay is a form of pension just as surely as compensation paid by the Veterans' Bureau is a form of pension. The decision of the Judge Advocate General we find on page 13 of the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs in the Congress of 1920, and the opinion is from House Document No. 545, page 494. I read:

Retired officers as such do not hold public offices. They are, in fact, pensioners. The position and pay given them constitute a form of pension.

It is a pension. Compensation is a form of pension, although we may use a different term to distinguish it from pensions that we have heretofore provided under different acts to be paid through the Pension Bureau of the Interior Department.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes; I will be very glad to yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In the final analysis, is not this a bill to grant pensions based upon rank?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I would think it might be so construed. I do not want to be committed beyond that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman what is his own construction?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. In my construction this is the fulfilling of the obligation which the United States entered into with these officers when it passed the selective service act, and it is a form of pension, as all retirement pay and all compensation under our Veterans' Bureau are, properly classified under the generic term of "pension."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Did not the gentleman state before the Committee on Rules that it was a distinction based on rank, and did not the gentleman from Nebraska follow him and repeat that statement?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. No; he put that construction on it, and I do not believe he was beyond bounds when he did so. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee has talked about the settled policy of the United States. The settled policy of this Government from the beginning down to date, including the Spanish-American War, has been to compensate those injured in the service in accordance with their rank; to compensate them for disabilities incurred in service by pensions based upon rank, and based upon the settled policy of this democratic and not communistic country from the beginning.

I want to call particular attention to these laws, beginning with the Revolutionary War.

DISABILITY PENDING RATES FOR OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN

(NOTE.—Page numbers given refer to "laws of the United States governing the granting of Army and Navy pensions" in effect March 5, 1925, published by the Government Printing Office, and compiled under the direction of the Commissioner of Pensions and published in accordance with the provisions of section 4748, Revised Statutes.)

REVOLUTIONARY WAR

Page 9: Rate of pensions for known wounds incurred during the Revolutionary War are as follows under the act of April 10, 1806:

"Commissioned officers: One-half of the monthly pay legally allowed at the time of incurring said disability, but no pension shall be calculated at a higher rate than one-half pay of a lieutenant colonel.

"Enlisted men: $5 a month."

CAMPAIGN ON WABASH

Page 10: Act of April 10, 1812, the same provisions as the foregoing Revolutionary pensions are made applicable to the campaign on the Wabash.

WAR OF 1812

Page 10: Act of April 24, 1816, the persons on the pension rolls on April 24, 1816, had their pensions increased for all ranks of first lieutenant and under, as follows:

First lieutenant	$17
Second lieutenant	15
Third lieutenant	14
Ensign	13
Noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates	8

This act of April 24, 1816, further provides that all laws and regulations relating to pensions of officers and soldiers of the Regular Army shall relate equally to the officers and soldiers of the militia while in the service of the United States.

BLACK HAWK WAR

Page 10: Act of June 15, 1832, officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates raised for the protection of the frontier, in case of disability by wounds or otherwise incurred in the service, shall be entitled to like compensation as allowed to officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates in the Military Establishment of the United States.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS IN FLORIDA

Page 11: Act of March 19, 1836—that the volunteers or militia shall be entitled to all the benefits conferred on persons wounded or otherwise disabled in the service of the United States.

CREEK WAR

Page 11: Act of May 23, 1836—the volunteers shall be entitled to all the benefits which may be conferred on persons wounded in the service of the United States.

MEXICAN WAR

Page 12: Section 4730, Revised Statutes: Officers and enlisted men whether of the Regular Army or volunteers, for total disability by reason of injury received or disease contracted, while in line of duty in service in the war with Mexico, shall receive half of the pay of their rank at the date on which the wound was received or the disease contracted, not exceeding half of the pay of a lieutenant colonel.

CIVIL WAR

Page 30: The act of July 14, 1862, states that the beneficiaries for disability shall be officers of the Army, including regulars, volunteers, and militia, marine, and enlisted men, however employed in the military or naval service [in the Civil War].

Page 31: Section 4695 gives the rate of pensions for total disability for the persons mentioned in the preceding paragraph:

	Per month
Lieutenant colonel and officers of higher rank	$30
Major	25
Captain	20
First lieutenant	17
Second lieutenant	15
Certain other officers and warrant officers	10
All enlisted men	8

Page 175: Subsequent enactments as given below increased the pay of the disabled enlisted men through the medium of general-service pensions, but these enactments did not reduce the pay of the disabled officers, and the rate of pay of the disabled officers was not reached by the enlisted men through the enactment of service pensions until the act of May 11, 1912, which gave a general-service pension of $30 a month to all officers and enlisted men of the Civil War who had reached the age of 75 years, and served two years or more.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR

The officers and enlisted men who incurred disability in the Spanish-American War, whether volunteer or regular, received pensions under the general pension law of July 14, 1862, which set the maximum for an officer at $30 a month, and the enlisted personnel at $8 a month for total disability.

The disabled emergency officer of the Spanish-American War continued to receive more than the disabled emergency enlisted men of this war until the act of June 5, 1920, when the enlisted men were granted a service pension with maximum payments of $30 a month, a sum equal to the pay being received by the disabled officers with the rank of lieutenant colonel and above.

The laws to which I have referred show the settled policy of this country from the beginning, as fixed by our fathers. It has been the policy of this Government to fulfill its promises and its obligations to its people. It has been the standard of our courts of justice to pay compensation for injuries not based upon rank but upon that which measures the loss and the damage, and rank is the arbitrary rule we have in the Army which conveniently measures the earning capacity.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. In reference to the question of pensions: One of the propositions which has bothered me has been this provision in the selective draft act where the words "pay, allowances, and pensions" are used. That is, that emergency officers shall have the same pay, allowances, and pensions as officers of corresponding grades in the Regular Army. A few minutes ago the gentleman from Michigan cited the Spanish War provision of 1898, where identically the same language was used in reference to the volunteer officers in that war. The volunteer Spanish War Army officers——

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Let me interrupt the gentleman right there. Every officer in the Spanish War was a volunteer officer.

Mr. NEWTON. Not the Regulars.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Every one of them. They were all discharged and reenlisted over again.

Mr. NEWTON. Not those who were in the Regular Army.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. They were all volunteer officers.

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman is wrong.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Well, we differ about that.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman will permit, that is true to this extent, that all of the men enlisting in the Regular Army volunteered. There was no draft law at that time, and that is the distinction.

Mr. NEWTON. But a West Pointer who was in the Army——

Mr. MICHENER (interposing). Was a volunteer.

Mr. NEWTON. He was a volunteer in the sense that he volunteered to go to West Point, but he was what we all know as a Regular.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. But all of the Regulars were discharged and enlisted over again.

Mr. NEWTON. Oh, no.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Well, we differ on that.

Mr. NEWTON. The Spanish-American War volunteer officers were never considered to be eligible for retirement, although the provision relating to "pay, allowances, and pensions" is practically identical with the provision in the World War selective service act, which the committee cites. It seems to me to raise a distinction as to whether or not pensions are really retirement pay.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Well, we have here the only legal decisions that I know of on the subject which say it is true, but the gentleman's suggestion is not a logical deduction. Because the Spanish war soldiers or officers were promised the right of retirement and did not get it, that therefore this promise should not be kept in this case, if a promise was made.

I may say to you that the one who represents the United Spanish War Veterans in legislative matters to-day is ex-Senator Means. He is thoroughly conversant with the matter, and he has stated, I am informed, that it is not to the advantage of the Spanish war officers to have retirement.

Mr. NEWTON. But the purpose of the question was to ascertain whether the gentleman had any other authority as to the construction of the word "pensions," because of the different way in which the Spanish war volunteer officers have been treated under the same provision.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. If the gentleman will yield to me to put a question to the gentleman from Minnesota, is it not so that in considering and discussing retirement or pension matters generally that compensation by way of retirement has come to be considered as equivalent to compensation by way of pension? In other words, retirement compensation and pension compensation are practically synonymous.

Mr. NEWTON. I do not disagree with that; but the purpose of my rising and asking the question was to try to obtain some information in reference to the meaning of the word "pensions," and as to whether there was in effect a contract by reason of the provisions of section 10 of the selective service act.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. My purpose in putting the question was to see whether the difficulty had not been removed on account of the word "retirement" not being mentioned in the selective draft act. If compensation by way of retirement and compensation by way of compensation are synonymous, what difference does it make?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Judge Advocate General decided that very question.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I must call attention to two erroneous suggestions made in his earnest address by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS].

First. By accepting retirement under this act the widow and children would be thereafter deprived of their rights and benefits under the Veterans' Bureau act. This is not true, for all their rights are preserved. None is surrendered. No one can be worse off by reason of the passage of this bill.

Second. Dishonorably discharged officers might get the benefits of this act. This also is untrue. No officer can be retired under this act unless he "be rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability by the Veterans' Bureau for disability resulting directly from such war service" (see section 1 of the bill), and no one may be so rated "in accordance with law" by the Veterans' Bureau unless he have an honorable discharge. No compensation may be paid to any veteran who lacks an honorable discharge.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAGUARDIA, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill S. 777, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CRAMTON (at the request of Mr. MAPES), indefinitely, on account of illness.

MINORITY VIEWS ON THE BILL H. R. 13509

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit a supplementary statement to the minority views expressed by me on Report No. 1574, accompanying the bill H. R. 13509.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What bill is that?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. The promotion and retirement bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman desire the statement printed along with the minority views?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. It is for that purpose I am offering it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MINORITY VIEWS ON THE ED HINES HOSPITAL BILL

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may have five legislative days in which to file minority views on what is known as the Ed Hines hospital bill, reported from the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this will be without reference to its condition on the calendar?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not suppose it would have any effect on it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I have no objection if it will not affect the reporting of the bill or its place on the calendar.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not suppose it would be subject to consideration until we got our report in.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is never so. The filing of minority views never affects the prospect for consideration of a bill.

Mr. RANKIN. I would not want to interfere with the legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all those who have spoken or may speak on the bill (S. 777) may have the right to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman, if he is going to make the request, might just as well make it for everybody to have a certain number of days to extend their remarks, but I presume the gentleman can do that to-morrow as well as to-day.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I am perfectly willing to enlarge the request.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will permit, I am not sure it is a wise policy to throw this open for the extension of remarks generally. I am willing for the gentleman's request to go through at the present time, but I would not like to open up the other proposition until a later day.

Mr. O'CONNELL. What disposition is the gentleman going to make with respect to the Members who do not get an opportunity to talk on the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. We will try to give them an opportunity to discuss the bill. If there is any Member who wants the privilege of extending his remarks he can come in and make the request, and I will perhaps not object to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD].

Mr. TILSON. It is the understanding the request is with respect to any Member who has spoken or may speak on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Yes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred in concurrent resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. Con. Res. 30. House concurrent resolution to provide for the printing of additional copies of the hearings held before the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives on bills relative to capital punishment in the District of Columbia.

H. Con. Res. 33. House concurrent resolution to print and bind the proceedings in Congress, together with the proceedings at the unveiling in Statuary Hall of the statue of President Andrew Jackson presented by the State of Tennessee.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

Bills, joint resolutions, and a concurrent resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred to the appropriate committees, as follows:

S. 363. An act for the relief of Louise M. Cambouri; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 456. An act to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Edward I. Gallagher, of New York, administrator of the estate of Charles Gallagher, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

S. 513. An act for the relief of the Hottum-Kennedy Dry Dock Co., of Memphis, Tenn.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 652. An act for the relief of Edgar Travis, sr.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1182. An act to provide for the naming of certain highways through State and Federal cooperation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Roads.

S. 1433. An act for the relief of J. C. Peixotto; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1643. An act for the relief of Joseph J. Baylin; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 2304. An act for the relief of M. Seller & Co.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

S. 2738. An act for the relief of C. R. Olberg; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 2802. An act to provide for the appointment of midshipmen at large by the Vice President of the United States; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 2894. An act for the relief of Robert O. Edwards; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3779. An act to authorize the construction of a telephone line from Flagstaff to Kayenta on the Western Navajo Indian Reservation, Ariz.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SENATE

FRIDAY, May 11, 1928

(Legislative day of Thursday, May 3, 1928)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11577) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 98 to the said bill and concurred therein; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 56, 59, 80, 84, 85, 86, 99, and 102, and agreed thereto severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; and that the House further insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 100.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12875) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 46 to the said bill and concurred therein; and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 42 and 43, and agreed thereto each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4664) for the relief of Capt. George R. Armstrong, United States Army, retired.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 3598. An act authorizing Dupo Bridge Co., a Missouri corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a combined highway and railroad bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Carondelet, Mo.; and

H. R. 11026. An act to provide for the coordination of the public-health activities of the Government, and for other purposes.

COTTON-PRICE PREDICTIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into last evening the Chair lays before the Senate Calendar No. 866, the bill (S. 3845) to prohibit predictions with respect to cotton prices in any report, bulletin, or other publication issued by any department or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "cotton," to strike out the words "corn (maize), wheat, rye, oats, barley, flaxseed, or other grain, or" and to insert the word "or," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any officer or employee of any department or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government to include, or cause to be included, in any report, bulletin, or other publication issued by such department or establishment any prediction with respect to prices of cotton, or to cause to be published any such report, bulletin, or other publication containing any such prediction, or to authorize the publication of any statement or interview containing any such prediction which is based upon information received from official sources. Any such officer or employee who violates the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have just been reminded that at 3 o'clock this afternoon the Senate will engage in memorial services for the late Senator Willis, of Ohio. I do not desire to make a speech, therefore, at this time. I am willing to have a vote on the bill.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I promise the Senate I shall detain it but a few moments to make a brief statement in regard to the bill now pending.

First, I wish to invite attention to the fact that on March 29 last the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the very able and broad-minded Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], called up for further consideration House bill 11577, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill. After full consideration of that important appropriation bill the committee, through its chairman, had reported it, with certain amendments.

The first amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Office of Secretary, salaries," on page 3, line 14, before the word "cotton," to insert "wheat and," so as to "make the further proviso read."

The proviso as amended by including "wheat," which many deemed wise, took on this form and passed the Senate in this form, namely:

Provided further, That no part of the funds appropriated by this act shall be used for the payment of any officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture who, as such officer or employee, or on behalf of the department or any division, commission, or bureau thereof, issues or causes to be issued, any prediction, oral or written, or forecast with respect to future prices of wheat and cotton or the trend of same.

The Senate, presumably made up of thoughtful men who think of more things than one, deemed it wise to add to the House bill the words "wheat and," so that those predictions in respect of prices, considered harmful, should not be made in respect of either of those two great agricultural products—wheat and cotton. In that form the bill passed the Senate and went into conference, and not until this morning have we received the report of our committee on conference. I was advised but a moment ago that for reasons which I do not now understand the conference committee has eliminated the words "wheat and," so that the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, in so far as the proviso which we have under consideration is concerned, remains as it came to us from the House and applies only to the prediction of prices in respect of cotton. I am not quarreling and I never have quarreled over this proposition, but in order that the RECORD may stand for anyone who hereafter may be interested in looking it over, I have sought an opportunity to state what I have said and now proceed to say.

The appropriation bill passed the House about March 3. Coming to the Senate it passed the Senate, as I have stated, on March 29, containing the proviso as an amendment by this body. The Senator from Alabama, feeling—I must assume and I do assume—that he was rendering a public service, a few days later, on March 30, introduced the bill which is immediately before us, Senate bill 3845—I have been told, and the Senator has so stated, and if he had not so stated I might have logically inferred—that he introduced this bill in order further to safeguard and prevent the doing of that which the proviso said might not be done. The proviso was to the effect that no money appropriated by the bill should be devoted to the payment of the salary of anyone who should do this inhibited thing. That may not have been a sufficient safeguard against a violation of the law, though I take pride in saying that I am not one who assumes that men violate the law or that sworn officers will trample upon the law when it is plainly written in the statute.

However, I do not complain of further safeguarding where it is deemed wise to prevent the doing of a given inhibited act. So the Senator from Alabama introduced Senate bill 3845, which provides:

That it shall be unlawful for any officer or employee of any department or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government to include, or cause to be included, in any report, bulletin, or other publication issued by such department or establishment any prediction with respect to prices of cotton, corn (maize), wheat, rye, oats, barley, flaxseed, or other grain, or to cause to be published any such report, bulletin—

And so forth. Then it provides a penalty for the violation of this contemplated statute.

When this matter was brought up a few days ago, I was curious to know why, if it be wise economically to prohibit by penal statute the putting forth of predictions as to future prices of cotton, it was not equally economically wise to prohibit by penal statute the putting forth of like predictions in respect of future prices of wheat or other agricultural products mentioned in the Senator's bill as by him introduced. I was made curious because the Senate had three days before amended the House appropriation bill, upon the theory, I must assume, that the Senate thought it equally harmful and economically unwise to make predictions in respect to wheat as in the case of cotton.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. When the bill came before us——

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to remind the Senator that there are only a few more minutes left, and I should like to have one of those.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I understood the Senator to say that he did not desire to make any remarks, but I imagine that a few more minutes will be allowed us to consider and dispose of this matter. I have taken very little time on this or any other matter and I am about through.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I wish to ask the Senator a question, in view of the fact that I have not gone into this question very fully. I am in doubt as to why there should not be an absolute prohibition as to the prediction of prices. I think we ought to have all the facts connected with production, but I do not see why there should be any prediction of prices in any case. I am in doubt about it myself.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, the appropriation bill which is now awaiting the signature of the President inhibits price predictions only as to cotton, for I observe by the conference report that the provision as to wheat has been stricken out.

Mr. HEFLIN. I can tell the Senator the reason why that was done. The Senators from the grain-growing States preferred not to go into this question at this time. They wanted an opportunity to look into it and draw a bill to suit the situation as to grain. I will join with them and vote for such a bill at any time they may bring it before us.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. To make an end and not to violate or to ask to have a violation of the consent agreement, for reasons which the Senator has not been given an opportunity to state he eliminated from his bill all farm products except cotton; and I say to him now that my purpose the other day in objecting "for the moment," as the RECORD shows I said, was that we might develop this question to ascertain why the Senator apparently had consented to eliminate from his bill all farm products except cotton.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit one short question?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; certainly.

Mr. EDGE. I understand the Senator to take the position that the provision in the bill under consideration is already contained in the appropriation bill now awaiting the President's signature?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. In the agricultural appropriation bill as it passed the Senate the provision was that no part of the moneys appropriated should be paid to anyone who issued or caused to be issued such predictions as to wheat or cotton. The bill introduced by the Senator from Alabama goes further and imposes a penalty, a money fine and a prison sentence, for a violation of the statute.

Mr. EDGE. Then the difference is simply as to the penalty; is that it?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; the appropriation bill withholds the salary, and the bill under consideration punishes by fine or imprisonment, or both, of anyone making prediction as to cotton prices. But what I have desired to make clear is that the appropriation bill as it passed the Senate prohibited prediction of prices of wheat or cotton, and that Senate bill 3845 as introduced prohibited like predictions as to "cotton, corn (maize), wheat, rye, oats, barley, flaxseed, or other grain." The conference report just now read strikes out the words "wheat and," and Senate bill 3845 has been amended in the manner I have stated, so that both bills prohibit and make unlawful preductions as to prices of cotton.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator, on reflection, will have to correct his answer to the Senator from New Jersey. The provision contained in the appropriation bill is purely a limitation and applies only to the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made, while the bill of the Senator from Alabama becomes permanent law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask what is the penalty provided for in the pending bill?

Mr. HEFLIN. In my bill the penalty is a $10,000 fine and five years' imprisonment, either or both.

Mr. BORAH. I am informed that the bill provides a penalty of not less than a fine of $10,000, in addition to imprisonment. Is that the case?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is the language of the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Personally, I should favor a fine of $100,000, because the cotton price prediction they made last year in the Agricultural Department cost the cotton producers between $250,000,000 and $400,000,000. If a Government official shall be permitted to make price predictions as to grain or cotton and can be considered as having that authority, he could make $25,000,000 a year by selling out. I can not escape the conviction that the prediction last September was brought about by corrupt influences. It looks bad. My bill contains a provision which will prevent the repetition of that crime. The penalty for such a crime should be severe.

Mr. BORAH. I think the penalty provided for the Senator's bill is a little drastic; that is all. I am inclined to view the principle for which he is contending favorably, but I should hesitate to vote for a fine of "not less than" $10,000.

Mr. HEFLIN. The bill provides as a penalty a fine of not less than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than five years or both. I hope that Senators will not object to that. This is a very important matter so far as the cotton producers are concerned.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If the bill provides a penalty of not less than $10,000 the court might assess a penalty of $100,000, might it not?

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, what we want to do is to make it absolutely impossible for such a thing ever to happen again.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize that, but it does seem to me that the penalty provided in the bill ought to be a little more definite.

Mr. HEFLIN. Here is the point, if the Senator will permit me: The bill is designed to prevent outside interests approaching any Government official or employee and undertaking to get him to do this wicked thing as was done in a somewhat similar matter in the case of Hyde and Holmes, employees of the Agricultural Department in 1904, they were paid $40,000 for their crime. One of them fled the country and is now in Europe. If we make the penalty severe a man will hesitate before he will go into this sort of corrupt deal, particularly if he knows that he is liable to be fined not less than $10,000 and imprisoned for five years. Under those circumstances he will not betray the great producing classes in this country engaged in the cotton business. I want the penalty severe. I do not think we ought to make it easy or in any way shield those who would do such a corrupt and criminal thing. I think we ought to punish them to the limit; that is the way I feel about it. That price prediction in September, 1927, was an awful blow to the cotton growers of the South and also to the merchants and bankers, and there ought to be something done to stop this thing immediately.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I wish to propound a question. If the Senator desires now to answer, well and good; if not, he may answer later. I was curious to know, if it is wise and right to prevent by a penal statute these predictions in respect of cotton, why the Senator does not stand firm for the bill as introduced and presented as to other agricultural products?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am in favor of that. I put them in; but when the grain growers wanted a chance to investigate the matter regarding grain and to prepare a separate bill for grain and other western products themselves I agreed to it and struck out that provision at their request. Very frequently the Senators from the cotton-growing South vote with the Senators from the grain-growing West on measures that affect the grain grower, and they usually vote with us on questions affecting cotton, and so forth. I struck it out at their suggestion, and I am ready for a vote.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I should like to offer an amendment to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment is in order first. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 1, line 8.

Mr. NORRIS. Let it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 8, the committee proposes to strike out "corn (maize), wheat, rye, oats, barley, flaxseed, or other grain, or" and to insert "or," so that, if amended, it will read:

> Any prediction with respect to prices of cotton or to cause to be published any such report—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Maryland proposes, on page 2, line 6, to strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500"; and in the same line to strike out "five years" and insert "two years."

Mr. NORRIS. That will not make any difference. If it is "not less than $2,500," why could it not still be a million dollars?

Mr. BRUCE. I simply propose to change the figure "$10,000" to "$2,500" and the word "five" in connection with the number of years to "two"; that is all.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but the language is "not less than $2,500." It seems to me we ought to have a maximum limit. I do not know what it ought to be; but we ought to fix it, anyway.

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; that is true. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to that. I did not observe it. I move, then, to substitute the words "not more than" for "not less than" in each place in connection with the years and in connection with the amount of pecuniary penalty.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be rejected. If we are going to pass a bill here to protect and encourage this sort of conduct in the Government service, very well; but the idea of not wanting to impose a penalty of $10,000 on a Government employee whose strange and reprehensible conduct has cost the cotton producers $400,000,000 on one crop and which has caused them physical discomfort, financial embarrassment, and many of them the loss of their homes and farms is something I can not understand. Every witness before the Agricultural Committee except the Government employees has sworn that this cotton-price prediction broke the price of cotton and caused this loss. I am willing to submit the matter for a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 12.30 o'clock p. m. having arrived, the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "less" and insert "more"; on line 6 to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$2,500"; and, on the same line, to strike out "five" and insert "two," so that if amended it will read:

> Any such officer or employee who violates the provisions of this act shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $2,500 or imprisoned for not more than two years, or both.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment in the form of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Maryland providing that the fine shall be not more than $15,000, and the imprisonment not more than five years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. SMOOT. I call for a division.

On a division, Mr. HEFLIN's substitute amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, do I understand that the amendment just adopted makes the penalty not less than $15,000?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; not more.

Mr. TYDINGS. Not more than $15,000 and not more than five years' imprisonment? Then I suppose, under that, a man could be fined $1,000 and given six months' imprisonment?

Mr. HEFLIN. It could be done by the court but I do not think it would be.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is not debatable.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania and Mr. HEFLIN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. In his absence, and not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. Not knowing how he would vote on this measure, I shall have to withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. COPELAND. I have a pair on this matter with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BRUCE (after having voted in the negative). I desire to change my vote from "nay" to "yea." I have favored this bill from the beginning. I simply thought the penalty was too high. I tried to reduce it and failed.

Mr. ASHURST. The junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is unavoidably detained on an important matter. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BRATTON. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I rise to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is necessarily and unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] has a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

The result was announced—yeas 65, nays 9, as follows:

YEAS—65

Ashurst	Fletcher	King	Shipstead

So the bill was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to prohibit predictions with respect to cotton prices in any report, bulletin, or other publication issued by any department or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government."

LEGISLATIVE ESTABLISHMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to the legislative appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
May 10, 1928.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 46 to the bill (H. R. 12875) entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes," and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

After the word "Rules," on page 25, line 9, insert the following: "without compliance with sections 3709 and 3744 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: Provided, That the Architect of the Capitol is authorized, within the appropriation herein made, to enter into such contracts in the market, to make such expenditures (including expenditures for furniture, material, supplies, equipment, accessories, advertising, travel, and subsistence), and to employ such professional and other assistants without regard to the provisions of section 35 of the public buildings omnibus act, approved June 25, 1910, as amended, as may be approved by such committee."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the language as proposed by the Senate insert the following: "without compliance with sections 3709 and 3744 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, what is this new power which is given the Architect of the Capitol?

Mr. WARREN. It is the perfection of an amendment that was adopted in the last hours of the consideration of the bill, to expend $500,000 in remodeling the Senate Chamber. On the floor, under unanimous consent, another amendment was added. Upon the matter going to the House, they felt that it was imperfect. They have perfected it, and we propose to concur in their action.

Mr. DILL. It does not change the effect of the amendment?

Mr. WARREN. It makes it better; that is all.

I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 42 and 43.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPAGANDA IN FAVOR OF PUBLIC UTILITIES

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have on more than one occasion had incorporated in the RECORD summaries of testimony given before the Federal Trade Commission of the investigation now being conducted by it under a resolution of the Senate concerning public utilities. I invited special attention to the fact that books, pamphlets, and other literature, prepared by paid agents of the utilities companies, had been introduced in the schools for the purpose of poisoning the minds of our youth.

I have learned that considerable indignation has been aroused over these revelations in the State of Connecticut, so much so that a pamphlet referred to as a "public-utility catechism" has been banned from the schools of a number of cities of Connecticut and particularly from the Bridgeport schools. The Bridgeport Times-Star of Monday, May 7, 1928, had a ringing editorial upon this menace, which I ask may be read from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the editorial, as follows:

[From the Bridgeport Times-Star, Monday, May 7, 1928]

NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND

The teaching body of Bridgeport must be practically of one mind concerning the action of their superintendent, Carrol R. Reed, in banning the Willard public-utility catechism from the curriculum of our public schools. The time-honored phrase, so universally quoted throughout American life, that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty" never more truly applies than in such instances as these.

Our school officials should set themselves against such traps, because the woods are full of wily, cunning schemers, who are well paid by private plutocratic agencies, to play up their particular brand of propaganda.

Our children are entitled to know the facts of life and the lessons which may fairly be drawn therefrom. It is not fair to fill them with half truths or permit the teaching to them of deductions drawn by those who have special interests to serve. There ought to be no chicanery practiced in this department of life. Our prospering and dividend-enriching public utilities, most of which, by the way, enjoy a monopoly of their service in their own field, do not need to resort to such practices. They are entitled to have their view of what they conceive to be the evils of municipal or public ownership of utilities publicly paraded, but they err if they assume they are entitled to an exclusive hearing. The opponents of their views have an equal right to be heard. Our public schools are not intended to be used as a feeding ground for such exploitation. These are problems for the more adult. Hitherto they have been fought out in legislative halls or in the forum of the press and in public addresses.

Wealth, power, and privilege organized are forces in American life which can not be denied. But none of these nor all combined are now or ever will be powerful enough to destroy the fundamental principle underlying free and popular education.

Know the truth that the truth may make you free, stands to-day as it has since the inception of our Republic. We submit that teaching such as it was sought to convey in these partisanly prepared pamphlets is against the ethics of this cherished principle.

In banning this propaganda from our schools Superintendent Reed will be upheld by all fair-minded people. It is to his credit that when apprised of what was going on here, he acted with firmness and promptness.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I offer for the RECORD, without reading, another editorial from the same paper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the editorial will be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Bridgeport Times-Star, Thursday, May 3, 1928]

EDUCATING THE PUBLIC

Clarence G. Willard, of New Haven, contributed some illuminating information to the Federal Trade Commission before which body he was called on Wednesday to tell of his activities as a publicity agent for various public utilities of Connecticut. Mr. Willard is the author of the Connecticut Public Utility Catechism, which, he said, is in use in some 70 high schools of the State.

Such public utility corporations as the New Haven road, the telephone company, the Connecticut Co., and the Connecticut Light & Power Co. furnish most of the financial sustenance for the employment of Mr. Willard, who is the secretary of the Connecticut committee on public utilities.

Connecticut newspapers, according to Mr. Willard, have used his "boiler plate" and clip-sheet stuff without disclosing its source.

These oracles of public opinion will find it a bit awkward to give three cheers for the sentiment expressed by Mr. Willard in a letter which he wrote to a fellow public utility press agent in a larger field. This letter was identified by Mr. Willard as one he wrote. In it he said:

"Connecticut has a good public opinion of utilities and is not bothered by public or political opposition on the whole.

"We can show exceptional newspaper cooperation and exceptional high-school cooperation, and in taking good care of both of these matters we apparently are more than satisfying our company membership."

We hasten to congratulate Mr. Willard upon his success as an evangelizer.

We do not know whether the success he has achieved in soft-pedaling opposition to the priceless charter privileges which this State has conferred, without remuneration, to numerous groups abiding without its confines is due to the efficacy of his school catechism or to his boiler plate and clip sheet.

Either one of these two fountains of embellished intelligence is in line for congratulations. Which shall it be? Perhaps the boiler-plate and clip-sheet users may inform us.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. More recent testimony discloses that similar literature has been introduced into the schools of Ohio, Georgia, and Florida. An article in the Washington Herald of May 10, by Mr. Clapp, tells about the revelations concerning the introduction of this matter into the schools of Ohio. I offer that for the RECORD, without reading, and I do so particularly because it discloses that a book, gotten out by the paid agents of the utilities company, has been circulated under the pretended authority of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator refers to Mr. Wyer?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to offer, later in the day, a letter from Mr. Wyer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

EVIDENCE GIVEN OF PROPAGANDA PUT OUT UNDER FEDERAL FRANK—PAMPHLET ATTACKING CANADIAN PLANT SHOWN ISSUED AS A SMITHSONIAN PUBLICATION—$3,000 PAID TO DOCTOR WYER—190,000 TEXTBOOKS ATTACKING PUBLIC OWNESHIP ISSUED TO PUBLIC SCHOOLS IN STATE

By Edwin J. Clapp

Ohio Day was celebrated yesterday at the big fair being held in the hearing room of the Federal Trade Commission investigating the operations of the organized power interests in getting control of schools, press, and legislature.

The Ohio gang disclosed themselves as being fully as capable as their brothers in Pennsylvania and Connecticut, who testified last week.

SMITHSONIAN USED

The central figure in to-day's testimony was Dr. Samuel S. Wyer, who in 1924 "agreed to accept" from the National Electric Light Association $3,000 and expenses for writing a pamphlet attacking Government ownership in general and the Ontario hydroelectric power commission in particular. Wyer succeeded in getting the pamphlet put out as a publication of the Smithsonian Institution, to the great subsequent embarrassment of that institution.

Publicity Director George F. Oxley, of the National Electric Light Association, testified he had no doubt Wyer received the money as agreed. Managing Director Aylesworth, of the National Electric Light Association in 1925, stoutly denied his association had paid a cent for writing the pamphlet. It was hastily put out in January, 1925, and sent through the country under Government frank, just at the time the Muscle Shoals bill was up for vote.

RESENTED BY CANADA

An international incident was made of the matter when Sir Adam Beck, head of the public-owned Ontario hydroelectric bitterly attacked Wyer's statements and arraigned the Smithsonian for sponsoring an allegedly mendacious attack upon the chief public enterprise of a friendly nation.

Wyer was disclosed yesterday as the paid author of the latest anti-Boulder Dam pamphlet, which he was hired to write by the Ohio State Chamber of Commerce, this organization for some reason interesting itself in broadcasting the pamphlet throughout the country. The official anti-Boulder Dam publication of the power lobby, the joint committee of National Utility Associations, was produced by Dr. Frank Bohn, formerly coauthor of communistic literature with William D. ("Big Bill") Haywood. Bohn got $800 for his effort. Wyer's pay from the Ohio State chamber was not disclosed.

WYER ASSAILED BY LEWIS

It was learned in Washington yesterday that in January of this year John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, denounced Wyer for a pamphlet he wrote for the coal operators. The Ohio State Chamber of Commerce, which has been the center of anti-Boulder Dam agitation and resolutions in State chambers throughout the country, yesterday had in the commission's record a recommendation of its public utilities committee, dated March 29, 1928, against the Colorado River project. It was revealed that this approved the Wyer pamphlet in the face of protests from Commissioner of Reclamation Elwood Mead; Charles L. Childers, general counsel for the Imperial Irrigation District of California; and T. A. Panter, Los Angeles electric engineer.

The committee attacked Secretary Work's recommendation that the dam be built with the following passage in its resolution:

"Here is another Federal bureau eagerly grasping for power and jealously defending one of its projects. It is another example of the tendency toward consolidation of power in the Federal Government."

An elaborate organization of women's committees and women speakers was disclosed when the commission admitted into the record the minutes of a meeting of the women's committee, public relations national section, National Electric Light Association, at the Edgewater Beach Hotel, Chicago, August 22–23, 1927.

PROPAGANDA OUTLINED

Quotations follow:

"Study of private and political ownership of industry will be the important topic of this year's study program. A list of suitable material will be prepared and offered to the membership. The joint committee of Utility Associations is now sending its weekly bulletin to all members of the national committee.

"Training of women who have shown an aptitude for speaking in public should be continued. Addresses for schools are urged particularly. The audiences of young people represent families not always reached through women's or commercial clubs.

"Invitations to club women to attend regular women's committee meetings result in better acquaintance and frequently in opportunities to utility people to appear before clubs, etc.

"The study of the economics of utilities should be one of the important subjects in every committee meeting. Some of the material suitable for such study is Dean Heilman's lectures, which are recommended in all committee programs."

One of Dean Ralph E. Heilman's lectures, reprinted and circulated by the national women's committee, asserts that reduction of rates by a public-service commission is a confiscation of property forbidden by the United States Constitution.

Ira L. Grimshaw, assistant to the director of the power lobby in New York, yesterday testified that Ernest C. Greenwood, former member of the Board of Education in Washington, was not only paid $5,000 for writing a propaganda book, "Aladdin U. S. A.," but also received an unnamed sum for making an "editorial survey" of newspapers with respect to their views of public ownership, delivered to Greenwood's employers last July.

CHILDREN TAUGHT

Cross-questioned by Judge Robert E. Healy, commission chief counsel, F. L. Bollmeyer, director of the Ohio committee on public utility information, testified children in 650 Ohio high schools, in 300 cities and towns, are taught about power and utilities from a textbook compiled by Bollmeyer's committee, entitled "Aladdins of Industry: A textbook compiled especially for use in the schools and colleges of Ohio, comprising a survey of several major public services. Fifth edition." According to its preface, the textbook is to be used as follows:

"Compiled for use of students in English, current topics, science and social science classes, and for reference in preparing debates. It is suggested that the questions on the text at the end of each chapter be used by class leader or by the instructor in a 10-minute quiz."

"Aladdins of Industry" teaches, among other things, that the troubles of street railway companies, "experts say," have been due to the survival of the 5-cent fare through the war period. The view is set forth that the failure of companies held down to a low fare has "worked a great hardship upon all other business and upon the public."

DISTRIBUTION REVEALED

Judge Healy questioned Bollmeyer as follows:

"Q. How many of these 'Aladdins of Industry' were distributed for a period of two years?—A. I should say around 190,000.

"Q. One hundred and ninety thousand? Where were they sent?—A. To high schools and, in a few instances, to some colleges.

"Q. Will you tell us as nearly as you can how many were distributed in the high schools of Cleveland?—A. Well, I should say there have been distributed in its high schools between 10,000 and 15,000, maybe a few more.

"Q. Approximately how much did it cost to print the first edition?—A. Approximately 5 cents apiece."

Dean C. O. Ruggles, of Ohio State University School of Commerce, came into the picture again yesterday when D. L. Gaskill, secretary-treasurer of the east central division of the National Electric Light Association, testified Ruggles was part author of a questionnaire sent out to utility executives of Ohio asking for information regarding the tie-ups they were effecting with educational institutions. Typical questions were:

"Has anyone from your organization given any lectures, talks, or participated in any discussions in any college or university on subjects dealing directly or indirectly with public utilities? If so, in what institutions, approximate dates of such participation, names of participants, and subjects discussed?

SUGGESTIONS INVITED

"Can you suggest some research studies in your territory which have been completed or which might be undertaken, the results of which would probably be valuable in university teaching?

"(a) Of an engineering nature?

"(b) In the field of economics, such as taxation, valuation, and rate problems, future demand, etc.?

"(c) Public utility legislation and court decisions?"

Ruggles is now conducting a nation-wide "educational survey" for the National Electric Light Association. Light association checks put into the commission's record indicate his pay for this work is $1,250 a month and expenses.

Judge Healy expressed interest in the large amount of free publicity, in news columns and editorials, obtained through the medium of news bulletins broadcast by Bollmeyer's committee. The examination proceeded:

"Q. It is not necessary to read it into the record, but I would like to have you tell me if the statement there that 10,500 column-inches of the committee's news material has been reprinted by newspapers is correct.—A. I imagine it is.

"Q. And that more than 200 editorials based upon your material has been printed by Ohio newspapers?—A. I believe it is.

300 PAMPHLETS ISSUED

"Q. And was it true that the committee sent out 300 pamphlets and reprints in its efforts to build better public relations?—A. Yes; I imagine that is true. I imagine that covers the period of a year, although there is no date on it."

The financial responsibility of the National Electric Light Association for the Wyer Smithsonian pamphlet was fairly well established by Judge Healy, questioning the association's publicity director:

"Q. Is that the pamphlet which was printed with the Smithsonian Institution imprint on the cover?—A. There is no question. It was printed by and at the order of the Smithsonian Institution.

"Q. Now, is there any question that Mr. Wyer, while he was getting that material and writing that pamphlet, was working under this arrangement by which he was to receive $3,000 from the National Electric Light Association?—A. I don't think there was any question about it. Whether or not he received the $3,000 I can not tell you.

"Q. You have no doubt about it?—A. I have not."

The record has already disclosed the manner in which George B. Chandler, secretary of the Ohio Chamber of Commerce, set out to line up the other State chambers of commerce by circulation of the Wyer report and personal appeals. He began to work on the Connecticut State Chamber of Commerce, of which he was formerly secretary, on January 30, 1928, the same day Wyer's report was issued bearing the imprint of the Ohio chamber and entitled "A Study of the Boulder Dam Project." Chandler wrote a letter seeking to alarm the Connecticut business men by representing the Swing-Johnson Boulder Dam bill as "opening the door to a program of Government ownership." Of Wyer's report, Chandler wrote:

"We believe the inclosed folder to be sound in its engineering conclusions and accurate in its statement of facts."

As Connecticut did not act, Chandler grew impatient, and on February 13 wrote Clark Belden, executive vice president of the Connecticut chamber, according to a copy of his letter in the commission's record:

"I am sending you a Macedonian call for help. We seem to be fighting single handed against this Boulder Dam holdup. It seems to me the State of Connecticut ought to be lined up on this. Can't you get some action?"

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I now offer an article for the RECORD, being a summary of the proceedings of yesterday by Mr. Clapp that tells particularly about the introduction of this kind of matter in the schools of Georgia and Florida, accompanied with the information that the educational association responsible for this kind of effort to poison the minds of the youth, following the example that some political organizations have found advisable, burned up its records.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the summary will be printed in the RECORD.

The summary is as follows:

SEARCHLIGHT REVEALS HOW FAVORS WERE WON IN SOUTH—GEORGIA UTILITIES PROPAGANDIST TELLS HOW HE BURNED RECORDS TO KILL TRACE OF ACTIVITIES—PROBE OF SCHOOLS BEGUN—EASTERN CITY FIRST TO CAST OUT TEXTBOOKS USED BY STUDENTS AND PREPARED BY CORPORATION

By Edwin J. Clapp

The searchlight of the Federal Trade Commission's investigation of the power lobby and the so-called Power Trust yesterday swept southward and shed its radiance over darkest Georgia and Florida, specifically, the records of the public utilities information bureau of Florida and utilities information committee of Georgia.

The hearing added another chapter to the story of the united utility interests exercising control over the press, filling the schools with their propaganda and using strong-arm methods to defeat public ownership measures in the State legislatures.

PROBE BRINGS ACTION

Meanwhile, from North, South, and West came evidence of action being taken by school authorities and citizens in response to the disclosures of the influence which the power companies have obtained over the educational institutions of the country.

A nation-wide survey to determine the extent and character of the interference with school textbooks on the part of the utility interests was instituted yesterday by J. W. Crabtree, secretary of the National Education Association, in Washington. Crabtree wrote superintendents of schools in all States and secretaries of all State educational associations, asking them to investigate and report.

The "public utilities catechism," of which over 10,000 copies were testified to be in use in Connecticut, has been barred from the schools of Bridgeport, Conn., by Superintendent of Schools Carroll R. Reed, according to information received by Federal Trade Commission officials.

THE FIRST ACTION

This is the first official action reported against textbooks prepared by the power interests and used in high schools and grade schools in Connecticut, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, Kentucky, Washington, and other States.

A telegram has been sent to the commission by Homer T. Bone, of Tacoma, charging the Puget Sound Power & Light Co. with placing textbooks in schools in the State of Washington with the paid assistance of Josephine Corliss Preston, State superintendent of public instruction.

Bone demands that the commission summon A. W. Leonard, president, and Norwood Brockett, public relations director of the Puget Sound Power & Light Co.; Mrs. Josephine Corliss Preston and Clare Ketchum Tripp, author of the textbook.

RECORDS VANISH

Great interest was expressed by Judge Robert E. Healy, chief counsel of the commission, in the disappearance of all but the most recent record of the utility organizations in the Southeast. H. E. Simpson, of Miami, acting treasurer of the Florida public utilities information bureau, testified that he could produce no records back of October 1, 1927. He likewise testified that there are no books or papers available concerning the income or expenditures of the Southeastern division of the National Electric Light Association prior to July, 1927.

Willard Cope, of Atlanta, executive secretary of the utilities information committee of Georgia, told Judge Healy that he was unable to produce a "pen mark or record of any sort" concerning the receipts and disbursements of his office prior to January 1, 1928. Judge Healy examined him as follows:

"Q. Are you familiar with the records and books of this committee?—A. Yes; I am fairly familiar.

"Q. Have you got the books here?—A. I have the current files.

"Q. Where are your books beginning with the organization of this committee in 1921?—A. They have been destroyed.

"Q. When were they destroyed?—A. Different times. At the close of a year's business there is an annual meeting in January. There is a flock of these voucher checks that I wrap up in a package. They kick around the office for a while and eventually are thrown out.

"Q. What is the earliest record or book on finances in the possession of your bureau?—A. January 1, 1928.

"Q. That is, there is not a pen mark or record of any sort in any book or paper in your office that shows the receipts and disbursements of any money back of that time?—A. No, sir.

"Q. And your bureau spends annually, on the average, how many thousand dollars a year since you have been connected with it?—A. About $30,000 a year."

Judge Healy took in his hand the slender cash book in which are being entered the 1928 accounts. He continued the examination:

"Q. Is this like the other books that cluttered the office up so that you had to throw them out to make room?—A. Yes. That is just the kind of book.

"Q. The accumulation of vouchers, in your opinion, is what necessitates the destruction of a book of this size that I hold in my hand?—A. It is.

"Q. Did it occur to anybody in your office that it would be possible to destroy the vouchers without destroying the books?—A. No, sir.

"Q. No one thought of that?—A. No one thought of that.

"Q. These annual account books have been destroyed at the end of each year since you have been connected with the bureau?—A. Yes, sir. It may be that two or three years have accumulated at times. I destroyed some in the middle of January of this year.

"Q. How long was that after the resolution under which we are operating here was put through the Senate?—A. I have no information. It was not in any way related to that resolution."

HERBERT HOOVER

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, W. C. Lusk, president of the South Dakota Chamber of Commerce, who is also the publisher of the Press and Dakotan, at Yankton, S. Dak., wired Hon. S. X. Way, publisher of the Public Opinion, at Watertown, S. Dak., who is one of the delegates to the Kansas City convention, as follows:

Statements being made in New York and Washington that Hoover can not carry South Dakota against Al Smith. This paper believes State Republican, with Hoover, Lowden, Dawes, or other Republicans of equal worth as standard bearer. Please wire us your opinion fully day press rate for publication in symposium.

Mr. Way replied as follows, under same date, May 9, 1928:

There is no sentiment among our farmers for Hoover, either as Republican nominee or as candidate for President. Opinion prevails very strongly if agriculture is to gain its just demands at hands of President after having twice been granted them by Congress, traditional party allegiance must be abandoned in favor of intelligent self-interest. Republicanism in South Dakota is not so strongly intrenched it can defy this farmer view. Party's margin lacks much of its old-time size. Farmers have no confidence in Hoover's professed sympathetic leaning. They feel they know Lowden is for them. They believe they know Hoover is against them. It is unlikely Hoover could carry the State against any man regardless of party label who is believed to be willing to join Congress in passage of McNary-Haugen bill or similar legislation. Al Smith, although handicapped in many ways, has succeeded in creating belief he will not hold up farmer program. All of which indicates he would beat Hoover in this State in November.

INCOME-TAX DECISION

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Pontiac Daily Press of Tuesday, May 8, 1928, entitled "What of fundamental rights?"

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The editorial is as follows:

WHAT OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS?

Income-tax payers in the United States would need to study no other case than that involving Senator COUZENS in order to conclude that the present system is riddled with opportunities for injustice. The decision of the United States Board of Tax Appeals in the matter of the value of Ford stock brings out into the open certain facts which ought to result in substantial changes in the law.

When Senator COUZENS decided to sell his holdings in the Ford corporation he took up with the Government the problems incident to his capital gains, in order that he might feel satisfied in his own mind that the amounts settled upon were fair and accurate and would meet the requirements of the Treasury Department. In spite of that precaution Senator COUZENS was the object of a determined effort to compel him to pay $10,000,000 more than the amount of tax originally approved by Government agents. It is stated that 31 departments of the Government ultimately handed down 63 separate decisions all confirming the original basis of computation and approving the settlement.

Still Senator COUZENS was in for the most offensive form of additional hounding, additional publicity, additional harassment, additional questioning, and espionage.

Is tax collecting degenerating in America into an inquisition in which a man's constitutional privileges are being wrested from him as if he were a serf required to dance to the tune of an autocratic overlordship?

If this description is extreme how shall it be explained that after being hectored and pestered about his Ford capital gains, Senator COUZENS finally confronted a decision that overturned all the other rulings? Of course, by mere coincidence, but interesting and illuminating in passing, it so happened that this new decision was rendered within a short time—some reports say within eight hours—of the time the Senator launched his attack on conditions in the Internal Revenue Department. Officials in the department say this was a mere fortuitous happenstance, and we shall take them at their word. There is plenty of thunder in the rest of the facts to show the impractical character of the income tax law as it is drafted, interpreted, and administered.

Taxpayers now face a system of taxation so complicated, so complex, and so involved that no two lawyers offer the same opinion in respect to a given state of facts. Here we have 63 decisions seemingly carefully considered and arrived at by impartial and conscientious study overturned by authorities higher up.

Taxpayers confront on March 15 of each year a legal complexity so interwoven with abstruse rulings and decisions so conflicting and perplexing that straightforward procedure is out of the question. Taxpayers do not know what to do. Field agents do not know what to do. The best tax experts frequently are in doubt. The highest talent in the legal profession declines to pass opinions with assurance that they carry with them any note of finality.

We are not inclined to put the burden on the Treasury Department for much of the present confusion and uncertainty. Back of these chaotic conditions, these ambiguous instructions, these capricious interpretations, these indefinite assessments exists a law that is defective from the ground up. It subjects honest men to contingencies that no republic has a right to continue.

Senator COUZENS has shown up the present act in all its crudities and his case emphasizes its potential opportunities for impermanence and wanton impudent annoyance. It is time taxpayers were no longer treated as if they were an unscrupulous horde of rascals, and the only way it can be done is to start all over again with a new and simplified law.

Senator COUZENS better than any man in America is placed where he can bring this about. If he will devote his exceptional talents for organization to this task, he would be sure to be given cordial cooperation in Congress. It is time to wipe out laws which make 63 and more decisions necessary to decide what constitutes a just tax. There is no use discussing relief under the present law. It is 100 per cent wrong in construction.

To a blundering base have been added a mass of rules and regulations that form a barbed-wire network of legal question marks. The income tax law as drafted and administered requires limitless arbitrary authority and a prying and spying that have no place in the American scheme of Government. The system has grown little by little from a seemingly harmless start to become a giant of authority that overrides fundamental rights in the most offensive forms. Privacy has been scattered to the winds, and a sense of security has been upset and destroyed by reversals, revisals, and fresh starts.

Here is a problem for Senator COUZENS. He has the experience, the ingenuity, and the initiative to bring order out of chaos.

To it, Senator!

MEMORIAL OF GRAND COUNCIL FIRE OF AMERICAN INDIANS

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a leaflet entitled "Memorial and recommendations of the grand council fire of American Indians," presented to the Hon. William Hale Thompson, mayor of Chicago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered. The leaflet is as follows:

Memorial and recommendations of the Grand Council Fire of American Indians presented to the Hon. William Hale Thompson, mayor of Chicago, December 1, 1927

To the MAYOR OF CHICAGO:

You tell all white men "America first." We believe in that. We are the first Americans. We are the only ones, truly, that are 100 per cent. We, therefore, ask you while you are teaching school children about America first, teach them truth about the first Americans.

We do not know if school histories are pro-British, but we do know that they are unjust to the life of our people—the American Indian.

They call all white victories, battles, and all Indian victories, massacres. The battle with Custer has been taught to school children as a fearful massacre on our part. We ask that this, as well as other incidents, be told fairly. If the Custer battle was a massacre, what was Wounded Knee?

History books teach that Indians were murderers—is it murder to fight in self-defense? Indians killed white men because white men took their lands, ruined their hunting grounds, burned their forests, destroyed their buffalo. White men penned our people on reservations, then took away the reservations. White men who rise to protect their property are called patriots—Indians who do the same are called murderers.

White men call Indians treacherous—but no mention is made of broken treaties on the part of the white man.

White men say that Indians were always fighting. It was only our lack of skill in white man's warfare that led to our defeat. An Indian mother prayed that her boy be a great medicine man rather than a great warrior. It is true that we had our own small battles, but in the main we were peace loving and home loving.

White men called Indians thieves—and yet we lived in frail skin lodges and needed no locks or iron bars.

White men call Indians savages. What is civilization? Its marks are a noble religion and philosophy, original arts, stirring music, rich story and legend. We had these. Then we were not savages, but a civilized race.

We made blankets that were beautiful and that the white man with all his machinery has never been able to duplicate. We made baskets that were beautiful. We wove in beads and colored quills, designs that were not just decorative motifs, but were the outward expression of our very thoughts. We made pottery—pottery that was useful and beautiful as well. Why not make school children acquainted with the beautiful handicrafts in which we were skilled? Put in every school Indian blankets, baskets, pottery.

We sang songs that carried in their melodies all the sounds of nature—the running of waters, the sighing winds, and the calls of the animals. Teach these to your children that they may come to love nature as we love it.

We had our statesmen—and their oratory has never been equaled. Teach the children some of these speeches of our people, remarkable for their brilliant oratory.

We played games—games that brought good health and sound bodies. Why not put these in your schools?

We told stories. Why not teach school children more of the wholesome proverbs and legends of our people? Tell them how we loved all that was beautiful. That we killed game only for food, not for fun. Indians think white men who kill for fun are murderers.

Tell your children of the friendly acts of Indians to the white people who first settled here. Tell them of our leaders and heroes and their deeds. Tell them of Indians such as Black Partridge, Shabbona, and others, who many times saved the people of Chicago at great danger to themselves.

Put in your history books the Indian's part in the World War. Tell how the Indian fought for a country of which he was not a citizen, for a flag to which he had no claim, and for a people that have treated him unjustly.

The Indian has long been hurt by these unfair books. We ask only that our story be told in fairness. We do not ask you to overlook what we did, but we do ask you to understand it. A true program of America first will give a generous place to the culture and history of the American Indian.

We ask this, Chief, to keep sacred the memory of our people.

GRAND COUNCIL FIRE OF AMERICAN INDIANS,
By SCOTT H. PETERS, President.

Delegates: George Peake (Little Moose), Chippewa; Albert Lowe (White Eagle), Winnebago; Donald St. Cyr (Flaming Arrow), Winnebago; A. Warren Cash (Spotted Elk), Sioux; A. Roi (Clearwater), Ottawa; Babe Begay, Navaho; Maimie Wiggins (O-me-me), Chippewa.

HISTORY BOOKS DO NOT TELL

That tobacco, potatoes, corn, squash, pumpkins, melons, and beans were raised by the Indians, who showed the colonists how to cultivate them.

That the Indians gave food to the suffering Virginia colonists, and then were forced by Capt. John Smith, who marched upon their village with armed forces, to give up more food.

That the Indians who attacked the Virginia colonists did so because they were so anxious to establish huge plantations that they took more and more land from the Indians without paying for it or asking permission.

That the Indians helped the Pilgrims in many ways during their first winter.

That Squanto, an Indian, who was lured, with four others, upon a trading vessel and carried off to England, upon his return was a true friend to the Pilgrims, and showed them how to live in their new home, and brought about friendly relations between them and the neighboring tribes.

That King Philip tried his best to remain at peace with the Pilgrims, and it was only after many acts of injustice that he took up arms.

That King Philip's tribe was completely exterminated, and his wife and child sold as slaves in the Bermuda Islands, while he was quartered, and his head carried about on a pike.

That until 1637 scalping was unknown among the New England Indians. The Puritans began by offering cash for the heads of their enemies, and later accepting scalps if both ears were attached. The French were the first to offer bounties for the scalps of white people, with the English quickly following suit, and such vast sums were expended that scores of white men took up the lucrative business of hunting scalps.

That the Indian was first of all a hunter, instead of a warrior, as history books state, for upon his ability in this direction depended his living, and his early training and games were all designed to teach him skill in hunting.

That the Indian was skilled in arts, song, story telling, and oratory.

That Pontiac fought because the English laid claim to all the land belonging to his people without regard or consideration for them.

That during the Revolutionary War the Oneidas steadfastly refused to side with the British or join with the other Indians who were fighting for the English, but many times helped and protected the colonists, although they were attacked by both British and Indian forces for doing this.

That during the Revolutionary War many so-called Indian massacres were committed by English soldiers dressed as Indians.

That the true reason for Tecumseh's uprising was that he protested against the unjust act (together with other injustices) of General Harrison, who called a council of a few tribes and by way of treaty got from them 3,000,000 acres of land which they did not own, but which belonged to Tecumseh's tribe. Tecumseh's speech in reply to General Harrison presents his case clearly and fairly and should be taught to the children.

That the Fort Dearborn massacre was a fair fight, and brought about because of broken promises on the part of the whites.

That Black Partridge demonstrated his friendship for the whites many times, and during the actual battle saved several of their lives—one in particular, Mrs. Helm.

That Shabbona, through sheer oratory alone, prevented his tribe, the Pottawatomies, from joining the Winnebagoes in their war, and also from helping Black Hawk, endangering his own life by his work.

That Shabbona in 1832 rode throughout the State of Illinois warning settlers of the approach of Black Hawk and thus saving thousands of lives.

That the Black Hawk War was brought about because of the forcible removal of Black Hawk and his people from their lands and of the attack upon him and a small party by white soldiers when they were going peacefully to their homes.

That the direct cause of the Sioux outbreak in the Dakotas, with the resultant Custer battle, was the broken treaties on the part of the United States Government.

That the Custer battle was a fair fight, with Custer marching upon the Indians, surprising them in their village, and striking the first blow.

That at Wounded Knee Indian men, women, and children were lined up, all weapons removed from them, and then slain by white soldiers—even fleeing mothers with their babies were pursued and bayoneted to death.

That the war with Chief Joseph was brought about because he refused to sell the lands that he and his tribe had owned for centuries and that had been given to him by treaty with the United States Government. Upon his refusal to sell, he was set upon and was to be forcibly removed.

That Chief Joseph led his band of 300 warriors, together with women and children, sick and aged, on a remarkable retreat that lasted 75 days and that covered 1,300 miles—through Rocky Mountain country, and with fighting all the way, attacked in turn by Generals Howard, Gibbon, and Sturgis, and finally General Miles.

That Joseph's people took no scalps in this memorable fight and waged no war on the white soldiers whom they encountered. His speeches made upon various occasions are some of the most remarkable ever made and should be read in every public school. When the Government violated its promise to Joseph to return him to his own country when he had ceased fighting, he then made his impassioned plea for justice, which through its sheer oratory earned for him the victory—it aroused the American people, and Joseph and his tribe were returned to their homes. Joseph is pronounced by military authorities to be one of the finest natural military leaders America has ever produced.

That Osceola arose against the whites because of the impending removal of his tribes from their home in Florida simply because the whites desired the land.

That Sacajawea, the young Shoshone girl, with her baby on her back, guided the Lewis and Clark expedition through wild and mountainous country and among enemy tribes, acting as interpreter, and everywhere establishing friendly relations between the whites and hostile Indians. Without her aid undoubtedly the exploring of this vast territory would have been held back many years.

That many Indians, such as Sitting Bull, Logan, Red Cloud, Geronimo, Crazy Horse, Gall, and others, who have always been presented as treacherous and warlike men, if their true stories were told were patriots and fully justified in their actions.

That many Indians, such as Hole-in-the-Day, Seattle, Pushmataha, Spotted Tail, Quanah Parker, and others, were always friends to the whites and helped them many times. Could not one chapter be devoted to mentioning the names of those who were friends to the palefaces?

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

APPROVAL OF JOURNAL

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the approval of the Journal for the calendar days from Thursday, May 3, up to and including Thursday, May 10.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PETITION

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution adopted by the Rotary Club of Casper, Wyo., favoring the passage of legislation providing for aided and directed settlement of Federal reclamation projects, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BROUSSARD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5826) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Louisiana State Museum, of the city of New Orleans, La., the silver bell in use on the cruiser New Orleans, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1091) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3427) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to make a readjustment of pay to Gunner W. H. Anthony, jr., United States Navy (retired), reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1092) thereon.

Mr. BROOKHART, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4687) to correct the military record of Albert Campbell, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1093) thereon.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8559) to amend section 58 of the act of March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1094) thereon.

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 9) to establish a joint commission on insular reorganization, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1095) thereon.

Mr. PINE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3867) to extend certain existing leases upon the coal and asphalt deposits in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations to September 25, 1932, and permit extension of time to complete payments on coal purchases, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1097) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3868) authorizing an advancement of certain funds standing to the credit of the Creek Nation in the Treasury of the United States to be paid to one of the attorneys for the Creek Nation, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment to the title and submitted a report (No. 1098) thereon.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12814) to increase the efficiency of the Air Corps, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1099) thereon.

THOMAS JEFFERSON SHROPSHIRE

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6185) for the relief of Thomas Jefferson Shropshire, I report the bill adversely and move its indefinite postponement.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I do not desire to enter an objection to this action if the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] knows about it. I do not care to object myself, but he is personally interested in the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Let it go over, Mr. President.

Mr. BLACK. I want the Senator from Iowa to know about it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I moved the indefinite postponement of the bill, and in two sentences I can explain the situation.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I would like to have the Senator from Iowa heard, and I may want to be heard myself.

Mr. BROOKHART. What is the proposition?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To indefinitely postpone House bill 6185, for the relief of Thomas Jefferson Shropshire, which was reported adversely.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will explain in a word, and then I will ask him for any explanation he may want to make.

This man enlisted in September, 1862, went absent without leave in October, deserted in January, his total military service being something less than two months. He stayed absent in desertion until the latter part of 1864, when he enlisted for 100 days in the Colorado Volunteers under an assumed name. He was wounded in action with the Indians, not with the Confederates, and drew a pension for some time under the assumed name. When his desertion was learned about, his pension was stopped, and this bill is an effort to give him a pension under his real name. The committee by vote this morning instructed me to report the bill adversely, and to move its indefinite postponement.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, the committee vote was a tie. While there is a record of the desertion of this man, yet afterwards he enlisted, shed his blood for the country, and has suffered from his wounds ever since. This is a meritorious case, and the bill ought to be passed. I object to its indefinite postponement without a hearing by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under objection, the report of the committee will have to lie over one day, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

SANTA ROSA ISLAND, FLA.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3991) declaring certain designated purposes with respect to certain parts of Santa Rosa Island in Florida to be "public purposes" within the meaning of the proviso in section 7 of the act approved March 12, 1926, entitled "An act authorizing the use for permanent construction at military posts of the proceeds from the sale of surplus War Department real property, and authorizing the sale of certain military reservations, and for other purposes," and I submit a report (No. 1096) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. It will lead to no debate. It is purely a local matter.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the words "public purposes" in the proviso in section 7 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the use for permanent construction at military posts of the proceeds from the sale of surplus War Department real property, and authorizing the sale of certain military reservations, and for other purposes," approved March 12, 1926, shall be so construed as to include and permit any lands being a part of Santa Rosa Island in the State of Florida, acquired by said State or by a county or municipality thereof under the provisions of that act to be used for recreational, amusement, and bathing purposes by said State, county, or municipality, or by any person or corporation or their assigns with its authority under such regulations and restrictions and at such rates of charge to the public as such State, county, or municipality shall prescribe, provided no charge for admission to the grounds shall ever be made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

S. 750. An act to amend the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, and for other purposes;

S. 757. An act to extend the benefits of certain acts of Congress to the Territory of Hawaii;

S. 2004. An act authorizing the paving of the Federal strip known as International Street, adjacent to Nogales, Ariz.;

S. 2910. An act granting to the State of South Dakota for park purposes the public lands within the Custer State Park, S. Dak.;

S. 3571. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county court of Roane County, Tenn., to construct a bridge across the Emery River at Suddaths Ferry, in Roane County, Tenn.;

S. 3598. An act authorizing Dupo Bridge Co., a Missouri corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a combined highway and railroad bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Carondelet, Mo.; and

S. J. Res. 135. Joint resolution making an emergency appropriation for flood protection on White River, Ark.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 4429) to provide that transferors for collection of negotiable instruments shall be preferred creditors of national banks in certain cases; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. FESS:

A bill (S. 4430) granting an increase of pension to Fidelia Potts; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FRAZIER:

A bill (S. 4431) granting an increase of pension to Etta F. Bryan (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TYSON:

A bill (S. 4432) to change the name of Cove Creek Dam site to Coal Creek Dam site, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 4433) for the relief of Jeremiah C. Baisley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 4434) granting an increase of pension to Lois J. Stevens (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 4435) for the relief of Martin G. Schenck, alias Martin G. Schanck; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DENEEN:

A bill (S. 4436) relating to the Virgil Michael Brand collection of coins; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. STEPHENS:

A bill (S. 4437) for the relief of Alonzo Durward Allen; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 151) to adopt an official flag code of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LISTS OF DEATHS IN MILITARY AND NAVAL FORCES

Mr. ASHURST. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read at length.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) to provide for the printing of the names of and other information relating to members of the military and naval forces who died during the World War was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are authorized and directed to compile lists of the names of the officers, men, and women in their respective departments who were members of the military and naval forces of the United States, including the Marine Corps, and who died between April 6, 1917, and July 2, 1921, both dates inclusive, together with the home address, rank, military or naval organization, place of death, and address of the nearest relative, to each such person listed.

SEC. 2. Fifty thousand copies of such lists shall be printed and bound together as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, and of this number 35,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 15,000 shall be for the use of the Senate.

SEC. 3. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution.

THE STRANGE CASE OF FLORIDA v. MELLON (S. DOC. NO. 102)

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I should like to have printed as a Senate document a very masterly essay on the subject of the Federal estate tax entitled "The Strange Case of Florida v. Mellon," published in the Cornell Law Quarterly and written by Arthur W. Machen, jr., of the city of Baltimore, one of the most distinguished lawyers of our city.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. KING. It has already been published in the RECORD, but I have no objection to printing it as a document.

Mr. BRUCE. I assure my friend that it should be printed as a document. It is truly an able and masterly paper.

Mr. KING. I am not objecting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TAX REDUCTION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was going to ask the Senate this morning to take up the individual surtax provision of the revenue bill, but the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has just been called to a conference, and therefore I shall ask that we take up the corporation tax amendment, on page 15, line 19, for discussion.

CORRUPTION IN PRIMARY AND GENERAL ELECTIONS

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, in one of the most important political speeches delivered this year the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said:

> The improper use of money in politics presents a problem as broad and deep and vital as representative democracy itself, and the people know it. Partisan fencing will not satisfy them. Purity of the ballot and integrity of officials are the beginning and the end of popular government.

The distinguished Senator from Idaho went on to say that the scandals in the public history of the United States during the last few years were really too fundamental to be used for purposes of irresponsible partisanship. The Vare and Smith cases, Teapot Dome and Elk Hills, the Continental Trading Co. and the Hays deficits, Queens County sewers and public-utility lobbies are, after all, only surface symptoms of a deep-seated disease in our national life. All of us naturally grow indignant over the revelations which have been made, but it is important that our indignation should not evaporate in denouncing corruption, when it may be possible for us to take constructive action to strike at the roots of corruption.

A disease of this kind can not be cured or remedied by purely legislative action, but we, as the legislative body of the United States, would be recreant in our duty if we did not take what steps we could take to do our share in remedying the condition which exists.

The present Federal corrupt practices act was passed in 1925. I do not wish to make any criticism of it. It was, on the whole, a substantial advance on previous legislation of the kind. But in the last three years our eyes have been opened to a great many matters which were not apparent to us in 1925.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON in the chair). Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The corrupt practices act of 1925 was an amendment of the corrupt practices act of 1910, and specifically exempted primary elections from the provisions of the corrupt practices act, and practically gave free hand to these people, public-service corporations, and other corporations, who buy the Government by buying seats in the Senate, to go the limit. Congress itself has not made any provision for closing the door to corruption in primary elections. Under that act they said it was all right to buy the Government in primary elections, which in 42 States are the actual elections. In the general election Congress said they must be more circumspect.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, that is very much the point I intend to take up, and I thank the Senator from Minnesota for his very clear remarks.

As I see it, the chief defects of the present Federal corrupt practices act are, first, as the Senator from Minnesota so ably stated, that it fails to include primaries or nominations by conventions.

Second, that the responsibility under the present act is laid entirely on the treasurer of a political committee and not on the candidate, where it properly belongs.

Third, that while it purports to limit campaign expenditures, as a matter of fact it allows so many exemptions that it is impossible for any poor man to compete on a basis of equality with a rich one.

Fourth, that it allows contributions to be made through non-official agencies.

Fifth, that it provides no method for dealing with the all-important subject of postcampaign deficits.

Sixth, that it creates no effective or continuing machinery to enforce its provisions.

Mr. President, the matter of legislation of this sort is an enormously complicated one. I know it has engaged the attention of some of the ablest Members of this body for a great many years. I would not want anyone to think that I am suggesting that after a few months' labor I have offered any program which is adequate to deal with the situation as a whole. But at least I have spent a good deal of time in working out the measures which I introduced yesterday. They are not fully satisfactory to me. I am sure they will not be satisfactory to the Judiciary Committee without many amendments. Nevertheless, I feel that they represent a substantial advance from the present situation, and I should like to take the time of the Senate for a few minutes to explain the principles which I am trying to embody in the proposed legislation.

I have introduced five measures. The first is a constitutional amendment giving Congress authority to legislate concerning the nomination as well as the election of candidates for Congress. That measure is perhaps the least important of the five, because I feel personally that Congress already has that authority. The Senate will recall the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Newberry case. Four members of the court decided that Congress had not authority to enact legislation dealing with primaries. Four members of the court believed that the law in existence at that time, the law of 1911, was constitutional. The ninth member of the court, Justice McKenna, declared the law unconstitutional because it had been enacted prior to the passage of the constitutional amendment dealing with the election of United States Senators. I feel, therefore, that if the case were presented to the Supreme Court again the chances are that they would declare constitutional a measure dealing with primaries; but that is a great chance to take, and I have therefore proposed a constitutional amendment in order to make the matter absolutely sure.

Secondly, I have introduced an amendment to section 5, Article I, of the Constitution which would make that article read:

> Each House shall be the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own Members, but no candidate who, in his campaign for nomination or election, shall have violated any of the laws regulating such nomination or election shall be eligible for membership in either House.

I introduced that in the form of a constitutional amendment because the best legal advice I could obtain was to the effect that such legislation would be unconstitutional unless embodied in an amendment. The object of the proposal, of course, is to insure that no one may be elected to a Federal public office or to legislate as a Federal official who himself may have been guilty of violation of any Federal statute in obtaining his nomination or election.

If such an amendment were adopted, of course the Senate and the House would still remain judges of the qualifications of their membership. They would be the judges of the facts dealing with any particular case. But I did want to establish the particular penalty of ineligibility and to place a direct responsibility on the candidate, which, so far as I can see, does not exist under present statutes or present constitutional provisions.

Third, I have proposed an act to create a commission on elections. I suggest such a commission not as an independent governing body or a separate bureau, because I dislike bureaucracy as much as any Member of this body, but simply as an agency of Congress. It would be a continuing body. It would be an auditing body. It would audit reports, investigate credentials, and handle contest cases. It would report facts to the Congress for their action. It would have no authority on its own initiative. The idea of a legislative or congressional commission on elections is one that has been adopted in the constitutions of most of the new nations founded since the war.

I especially invite attention to the new German constitution, which provides for an electoral commission selected partly by the legislative body and partly by the supreme court of Germany.

Under our Constitution I do not think that particular method would be proper. I have suggested the method of election by the two Houses of Congress in joint session assembled, to select from names on nomination of the Civil Service Commission. I am not entirely satisfied with that suggestion, but I offer it for want of anything better. If we had direct election by the Members of Congress, it seems to me we might easily fall into the danger of having a bipartisan commission, which would practically mean that the representatives of each political party on the commission might be selected on the ground of their partisan loyalty to their respective parties. I feel that we ought to have nominations sent in by some outside body, and one of the qualifications which I have suggested in the bill for the selection of nominees is a "lack of partisan prejudice."

It seems to me that such a commission is absolutely necessary in order to vitalize and enforce the provisions of any corrupt practices act. Since I have been in the Senate a large part of the time of three Senators has been taken up by the investigation of one single contest case. I refer to the committee of which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] is chairman.

In the last few days we have had the beginning of a series of investigations by a very able senatorial committee of the campaign expenditures of candidates for the Presidency. I know that that committee is doing everything in its power to carry out the purposes of the resolution which created it, but I do not see how, under the present law, such a committee can do anything except make a very superficial survey of a situation which ought to be investigated thoroughly and effectively.

A permanent commission of this sort would be absolutely essential in order to provide information not only as to some spectacular contest case, such as the one which comes to us from Pennsylvania, but with reference to the accounts and credentials of every candidate for a Federal office.

One provision of the bill authorizes the commission to investigate the possible advantages of a system of voting by mail and of a system under which all campaign expenses should be borne by the public. I do not want to argue those points now because both suggestions are so important that it would take entirely too much time. They are matters which I believe should be thoroughly investigated by some continuing body.

In the fourth place, I have introduced a corrupt practices bill dealing with the nomination and election of Senators and Representatives. This measure makes several important changes in the present act. It retains the specific limitations of the present statute. I do not know whether those limitations are the best possible ones or not. They vary, as Senators know, from $10,000 to $25,000, varying with the size of the States. It may be that some better figures could be devised. My attention was called a short while ago to the English system by which more money may be expended in the rural districts than in the great cities. There may be something to be said for that plan. It is obvious that it costs more to reach 30,000 electors in the State of Nevada than it would to reach 30,000 electors massed in one ward of a great city. I am more interested in the principle than I am in the exact figures, and I have left the figures as they are in the present corrupt practices act.

The feature in which I am most interested in my proposal is that it does away with the exemptions provided in the present act. Senators are, of course, aware that at present moneys expended for postage, writing, printing, and all forms of publicity are exempted. As a practical result, of course, this means that a candidate may spend millions of dollars for publicity purposes and not be held responsible in any way for his accounts.

I think that is a dangerous principle. The bill which I have introduced specifies exactly what are legitimate campaign expenditures. They are confined to expenditures for the purpose of presenting information, arguments, and advice to electors as to the issues of the campaign. A candidate or his duly authorized agent or committee may lawfully present information, arguments, or advice to the electors by use of the mails, telephone, telegraph, advertisement in newspapers, or by posters or on billboards, the radio, personal solicitation, and public meetings. I believe that covers about all which ought to be allowed as legitimate expenditures. The bill does exempt State assessments and fees and personal traveling and subsistence expenses of the candidate, but makes no other exemptions whatever.

Under the proposed bill every candidate must either personally receive contributions and make expenditures or appoint an agent or committee to act for him in receiving and expending money. No one else may spend any money whatever except by authorization from the candidate or his agent. The entire responsibility is on the candidate. Every contribution or expenditure must be entered on the candidate's accounts within 24 hours from its receipt or disbursement, and the accounts are to be open at all times to public inspection. Each candidate has to file his report with the commission on elections on the 30th and 10th days before the date of election or nomination, and also on the 15th day thereafter. The primary elections and nominations by convention, in such States as do not have primaries, are also included in the legislation.

The same financial limitations are placed on the primary campaign as have hitherto been applied to the general campaign.

The last bill which I have introduced deals with campaign expenditures by candidates for President and Vice President. The provisions as to the responsibility of candidates as to the publicity of accounts, reports, and so forth, are identical with the provisions of the bill applying to candidates for Congress. The first section provides a limitation of expenditures for the nomination of candidates for President and Vice President and for the election of such candidates.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. DILL. Do I understand the Senator has a bill to limit or control candidates for President?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator think that the Congress of the United States has any right to enact legislation regarding candidates for President? There is no recognition of candidates for President in the Constitution of the United States. The present system of having candidates for President of the United States has grown up as a custom. The Constitution provides that the Electoral College shall select the President.

Mr. CUTTING. I understand the difficulty suggested by the Senator from Washington. I should like to call his attention to the fact that under the amendment to the Constitution which I am proposing the Congress shall have power to legislate concerning the nomination and the election of any candidates for office, including Senator, Representative in Congress, President, and Vice President of the United States.

Mr. DILL. Then the Senator does not intend to press his bill until after the amendment to which he has referred shall have been adopted?

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, that is a constitutional question which it is very difficult for me to pass on. I think that as a practical proposition the law should apply to all candidates under our present form of government, including actual candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency.

Mr. DILL. But that is not so legally.

Mr. CUTTING. If it is not so legally, then it is up to the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives to enact legislation which will insure the legality of such measures. I do not believe the Electoral College ought to be retained as a permanent institution, Mr. President.

Mr. DILL. I thoroughly agree with the Senator. I am not criticizing him, but I want to get the Senator's view as to that question because of the fact that no candidates for President are recognized in the Constitution; I do not see how we have a right to legislate regarding them until we have amended the Constitution so that they may be recognized.

Mr. CUTTING. That is what I propose to do. It seems to me that no candidates for any office are specifically recognized by the Constitution. We have reached a stage, however, where candidacies are a vital factor in our political system; and if the bills which I have suggested do not take care of that situation—and very possibly they do not—then they ought to be amended and this whole question should be gone into with great care.

Mr. DILL. I did not wish to interrupt the Senator's discourse, but I wanted to get his view.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.

Mr. BRUCE. I should like very much, indeed, to know in just what respect our present laws on the subject, especially the corrupt practices act, State and Federal, fall short of securing the purity of elections. As the Senator knows, in some States—it is certainly true in my State—when a man becomes a candidate for the United States Senate, as I am now, he has two bodies of law to deal with—the State law and the Federal law. I have had occasion recently, as I have often had occasion heretofore, to weigh every line of legislation relating to the candidacy of one for the office of United States Senator, and I am at a loss to see how laws can be made more drastic, more searching, than the corrupt practices acts of the State of Maryland and of the Federal Government. As the Senator knows, the corrupt practices act of the Federal Government refers to the State corrupt practices acts, and I must say that certainly there is no lack of interest in my State, at least, so far as the Federal and State corrupt practices acts are concerned. It seems to me they are wisely framed, considering the object they have in view.

So I do not see just the occasion for any further reform. I have never in my life spent a dollar unlawfully in any election contest, and, so help me God, I never expect to do so so long as I live. Accordingly, from that point of view, I am not the least concerned about any legislation the Congress may pass; but, at the same time, why multiply corrupt practices acts, seeing that the ground is already properly covered by State and Federal legislation?

The Federal corrupt practices act, as the Senator knows, provides just how much may be expended in an election and exactly for what purposes any money can be spent at an election. I am speaking now more particularly of candidates for the United States Senate. The corrupt practices act of the State of Maryland also covers the same ground. Our corrupt practices act is very detailed and very exhaustive, and seems to have been very wisely conceived to accomplish the purpose in view. That is likewise true of the Federal corrupt practices act, which was introduced some years ago by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and which I have had occasion to study recently a little more closely than I had occasion to do in the first instance.

So the Senator, if I am not trespassing too much on his time, would oblige me very much by stating specifically in what respect the State and Federal corrupt practices acts at the present time fall short of the prime object of securing freedom and purity of elections.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator was present when I began my remarks.

Mr. BRUCE. I did not happen to be present.

Mr. CUTTING. I tried to make the point plain at that time, but I shall try to answer the Senator when I get through with my exposition.

Mr. BRUCE. I will read the Senator's remarks in the RECORD; I will not trouble the Senator to answer the question at this time.

Mr. CUTTING. I should like to get through with the exposition I am making, and then I will yield to any questions.

Mr. BRUCE. I repeat, I will read the remarks of the Senator in the RECORD. I do not wish to take up his time.

Mr. CUTTING. The bill which I am proposing, as I have said, contains the same provisions as to responsibility of candidates and as to publicity of accounts, reports, and so on, as I have mentioned in regard to the congressional corrupt practices act.

In the first section expenditures for the nomination on the part of a candidate for President or Vice President are limited to $10,000 in any one State and to $480,000 in the Nation as a whole. Of course, the idea of that is that in most of the States, or in a large number of States, at any rate, there will be no necessity for spending anything like as much as $10,000; and that the money saved in that way may be devoted to the general expenses of the campaign, such as maintaining national headquarters, and so on. After nomination the limitation of expenditures is made three times that amount; that is, $30,000 in any one State or $1,440,000 in the Nation as a whole.

I am not sure that those are the best possible figures, but I am more interested in the general principle of the bill than in the particular figures. Those figures may be too high, and I am inclined to think perhaps they are, though they are very much lower than the amounts which have been spent in any of the presidential campaigns in the last few years. At any rate, that is a minor problem which may be taken up by the committee.

Mr. DILL. Who does the Senator propose to have enforce this provision of law in regard to candidates for the Presidency?

Mr. CUTTING. The Congress of the United States.

Mr. DILL. What control has the Congress of the United States over candidates? The Electoral College passes on the candidates for President.

Mr. CUTTING. That brings up the same point I discussed with the Senator a few moments ago; namely, my proposed constitutional amendment.

Mr. DILL. I do not understand the appropriateness of such legislation from the constitutional standpoint.

Mr. CUTTING. If the Senator has no objection, I should like to explain the proposed legislation, and then go into these matters of detail.

This morning I noticed that the first section of this bill is so framed as to suggest that perhaps the candidate for President and the candidate for Vice President may each incur campaign expenses to the amount indicated. The wording is perhaps a little ambiguous in that respect. Of course, the intention was that since the President and the Vice President are making a joint campaign, or, rather, since the electors pledged to them are making a joint campaign, there would be only one source of expenditure. It is not intended to duplicate the expenditures on behalf of each candidate.

No limit is placed on individual contributions up to 30 days before the election, but in the last month contributions are limited to $10,000, and in the last 15 days to $5,000.

The further one goes into the question of legislation dealing with elections the more illogical the whole system of privately financed campaigns appears to be. Yet, so long as we have such a system it seems unreasonable to limit the amount of money that any individual may contribute. It seems to me that under the present system the best we can do is to insure full publicity for all such expenditures. That is why large contributions should be forbidden within the last few weeks before the election, when possibly they can not be made public to the people as a whole.

No contribution can be made in any name except that of the individual who provides the money.

A novel feature, and I think a very important one, is that dealing with postcampaign deficits. I do not believe that the Senate of the United States require any suggestions as to the danger which that problem brings up, in view of the revelations which we have had made to us during the last few months. The difference between a contribution to a deficit and a contribution toward campaign expenditures before the election is very definite.

Take the case, for instance, of Mr. Sinclair. Mr. Sinclair stated before the Public Lands Committee that he did not know whether he was Republican or Democrat, but he had been interested in the Republican campaign at one time and had contributed to it. The important point to notice is the exact time when Mr. Sinclair become interested in the campaign. We have no evidence that he contributed to the Republican campaign fund at any time before the election. Possibly he did; perhaps he contributed to the campaigns of both parties, for aught we know. A contribution made to a preelection fund would have been in the nature of a gamble, but a contribution made to a deficit and particularly to a deficit of the party which had been successful in the election was simply putting his money over the counter and getting a return for his investment. That is a danger which is not dealt with under our present statutes at all.

I have tried to deal with this problem, first, by providing that any deficit is illegal which, added to the campaign expenditures, exceeds the total amount allowed by the law, and, secondly, that individual contributions to a deficit are limited to $1,000.

Mr. President, I am sorry to have taken so much of the time of the Senate. I hope especially that the very distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee will not think that my remarks imply in any way that the proposed legislation which I have suggested will adequately solve any problem which he and other very able Members of the Senate have spent years in investigating. I do feel that they represent an advance on present legislation. I certainly have no pride of authorship in these measures. I should be glad to have the Judiciary Committee take them and tear them to pieces and substitute something else which might be more adequate to meet the purposes in view.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, the Senator knows, from his study of this question, that it is a very difficult one to solve correctly, even to one's own satisfaction. The Senator realizes, too, that the Judiciary Committee, with the work they have on hand, probably will not be able to take up the question that he has submitted at this session. They have had such a bill, and have reported a bill; but I do want to say to the Senator that I have been very much interested in what he has said. I am very much interested in the plan he has outlined.

It is a new one. I was informed of it, as the Senator probably knows, before he introduced his bill and before he made his speech; and I have been thinking about it a great deal. I am not sure but that he has taken a step in advance of any that has yet been taken, and one that may be of very great practical benefit.

I know that the Members of the Senate, and particularly the members of the committee, are deeply interested in the subject. I hope, however, the Senator will realize that at the present time the committee is closing up its affairs for the session, and Congress is about to adjourn, and that we perhaps can not expect action at this session. Moreover, part of the program will necessitate an amendment to the Constitution, which the Senator has provided in part of his plan. Its difficulties ought not to prevent us from taking it up, however; and I assure the Senator that I shall be very glad indeed to cooperate with him in doing whatever I can, in my weak way, to help bring about proper legislation.

Mr. CUTTING. I want to thank the chairman of the Judiciary Committee for his remarks. I realize that his committee is one of the most hard-working of all the committees, and I realize that the chairman himself is one of the most hard-working Members of the United States Senate. I had hoped to be able to get these measures in shape to present them a long time ago; but, as the Senator will realize, there are so many obstacles at every step one takes in such legislation that it has taken me a good many months to get as far as I have. I believe, of course, that the committee could substantially improve on the legislation as it is presented.

The only reason why I suggest to the Senator that it might be possible to get at least a start on this form of legislation is on account of its exceptional importance, going, as the Senator from Idaho has pointed out, to the very fundamentals of representative government. Our Government can not endure under conditions as they have existed in the last few years.

It is for that reason alone that I should like most respectfully to suggest to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee that if there is any way in which they can get started on this legislation, even in the short space of time that remains, it might substantially help the Nation in the very important crisis which it is going through at this time.

I do not desire to say anything more on this subject, Mr. President, except to request that the text of these measures be made a part of my remarks in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The joint resolutions and bills referred to are as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 149, Seventieth Congress, first session

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, relative to the nomination or election of Members of Congress, President, and Vice President of the United States

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"The Congress shall have power to legislate concerning the nomination or election of any candidate for the office of Senator, Representative in the Congress, President, and Vice President of the United States, and to prevent fraud and corrupt practices in the nomination and election of Senators, Representatives, President, and Vice President."

Senate Joint Resolution 150, Seventieth Congress, first session

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, relating to eligibility of Members of Congress

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, in lieu of the first paragraph of section 5 of Article I thereof, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members; but no candidate who, in his campaign for nomination or election, shall have violated any of the laws regulating such nomination or election shall be eligible for membership in either House. A majority of each House shall constitute a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent Members in such manner and under such penalties as each House may provide."

S. 4422, Seventieth Congress, first session

A bill to create a commission on elections, to define its duties, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created a commission to be known as the commission on elections (hereinafter referred to as the commission) to be composed of five commissioners elected as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. (a) The five commissioners first elected shall be elected at a joint session of the Senate and the House of Representatives from a list to be submitted by the Civil Service Commission, of the names, in alphabetical order, of 25 citizens of the United States selected on the basis of fitness by reason of experience, character, temperament, and lack of partisan prejudice. One of such commissioners shall be elected for the term of 2 years, and one for 4 years, one for 6 years, one for 8 years, and one for 10 years. The terms of office of all successors to such commissioners shall expire 10 years after the expiration of the terms for which their predecessors were elected; except that a commissioner elected to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was elected shall be elected only for the unexpired term of his predecessor. Ninety days before the expiration of the term of any such commissioner, the Civil Service Commission shall nominate four citizens having the above qualifications and submit their names to the Congress in alphabetical order, from these four nominees and the commissioner whose term is expiring the Congress shall in joint session elect a successor. Upon the occurrence of a vacancy otherwise than by the expiration of the term of office, a commissioner shall be elected from a list of five citizens so nominated and submitted. At all joint sessions for the election of commissioners each Member of the House of Representatives shall have one vote and each Senator four and one-half votes. Any commissioner may be removed at any time by concurrent resolution of the two Houses.

(b) Each commissioner shall receive a salary of $15,000 a year, together with actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses while away from the principal office of the commission in the performance of duties vested in the commission by this act or, if assigned to any other office established by the commission, then while away from such office in the performance of such duties.

(c) The commissioner so elected for the two-year term shall during that term be the chairman of the commission, and during each succeeding two-year period the commissioner whose term expires therewith shall be the chairman.

SEC. 3. Vacancies in the commission shall not impair its powers, and a majority of the commissioners in office shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of the business of the commission.

SEC. 4. The commission—

(a) Shall maintain its principal office in the District of Columbia and such other offices as it deems necessary.

(b) Shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

(c) Shall make such regulations as are necessary to execute the functions vested in it by this act.

(d) May (1) appoint and fix the salaries of such experts and a secretary and other officers and employees, and (2) make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere, for law books, periodicals, and books of reference, and for printing and binding) as may be necessary for the execution of the functions vested in the commission and as may be appropriated for by the Congress from time to time. No salary in excess of $10,000 shall be paid to any officer or employee of the commission. All expenditures of the commission shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman out of money which may be appropriated for that purpose.

(e) May hold such hearings, require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, administer such oaths, and take such testimony as it deems necessary for the execution of its functions.

SEC. 5. (a) Any commissioner or duly authorized agent of the commission may sign subpœnas, administer oaths, examine witnesses, and receive evidence. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States, at any designated place of hearing. In case of disobedience to a subpœna the commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence.

(b) Any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any person, issue an order requiring such person to appear before the commission or to produce documentary evidence if so ordered or to give evidence touching the matter in question, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

(c) No person shall be excused from testifying or deposing, or from producing documentary or other evidence in obedience to a subpœna, before the commission, on the ground that the testimony or evidence may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing as to which he may so testify under oath or depose or in obedience to a subpœna to produce evidence; except that no person shall be exempt from prosecution or punishment for perjury committed in so testifying or producing evidence.

SEC. 6. (a) The commission shall receive and have custody of all reports and statements required by law to be filed with it by candidates for nomination or election to any office.

(b) The commission shall audit all such reports and statements and shall make such further investigations as it may deem necessary to determine whether or not there have been violations of any laws relating to the nomination or election of Federal officials.

(c) The commission shall report (1) to the Senate if the nomination or election of a Senator is involved, (2) to the House of Representatives if the nomination or election of a Member thereof or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner thereto is involved, or (3) to both Houses if the nomination or election of any other officer is involved—

(A) The results of its audit of all such reports and statements; and

(B) Its findings of fact concerning any alleged violations of such laws.

(d) The commission shall (1) receive and investigate the credentials of all Senators elect and all Members elect of, or Delegates elect and Resident Commissioners elect to, the House of Representatives, and (2) report to the proper House its findings of fact relative to the validity and integrity of such credentials.

(e) The commission shall investigate all contested-election cases referred to it by either House, and report to the proper House its findings of fact in any such case.

SEC. 7. All records and reports of the commission shall be open to inspection by any person.

SEC. 8. The commission shall, as soon as practicable, make a complete and comprehensive investigation and report to the Congress its findings of fact and recommendations for necessary legislation, with respect to—

(a) The methods, machinery, conditions, costs, results, and other aspects of the existing system of balloting for the nomination and election of Federal officers and the advantages and disadvantages of voting by mail.

(b) The methods, machinery, conditions, costs, results, and other aspects of the existing system of party politics, and the advantages of other systems, especially one whereby all political agencies would be brought under governmental supervision and the legitimate and necessary costs of campaigns would be paid out of public funds.

SEC. 9. This act may be cited as the "Elections commission act."

S. 4423, Seventieth Congress, first session

A bill to prevent fraud and corrupt practices in the nomination and election of Senators and Representatives in Congress, to provide publicity of campaign accounts, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That in a campaign for nomination or election to the office of Senator or Representative in the Congress of the United States it shall be unlawful to make expenditures except for the purpose of presenting information, arguments, and advice to the electors as to the issues of the campaign and the qualifications of candidates. A candidate or his duly authorized agent or committee may lawfully present information, arguments, or advice to the electors by the use of (a) the mails, (b) the telephone, (c) the telegraph, (d) adveristements in newspapers or by posters or on bill boards, (e) the radio, (f) personal solicitation, and (g) public meetings. The cost of maintaining headquarters and of employing persons to conduct the campaign may be lawfully paid out of the campaign fund by the candidate or his duly authorized agent or committee.

SEC. 2. (a) A candidate shall not make or authorize campaign expenditures, personally or through the authorized agent or committee provided for in section 4, in excess of the amount he may lawfully make under the laws of the State in which he is a candidate, or in excess of the amount he may lawfully make under the provisions of this act.

(b) Unless the law of his State prescribes a less amount as the limitation of campaign expenditures, the maximum amount which a candidate may lawfully expend in his campaign for nomination and the maximum amount a candidate may lawfully expend in his campaign for election, shall be—

(1) The sum of $10,000, if a candidate for Senator, or the sum of $5,000 if a candidate for Representative; or

(2) An amount equal to the amount obtained by multiplying 3 cents by the total number of votes cast at the last general election for all the candidates for the office which the candidate seeks, but in no event exceeding $25,000 if a candidate for Senator or $10,000 if a candidate for Representative; except that in States where Representatives are elected from the State at large each candidate for Representative at large may make or authorize campaign expenditures to the same amount permitted a candidate for Senator in the same State.

(c) Money expended by a candidate to meet and discharge any assessment, fee, or charge made or levied upon candidates by the laws of the State in which he resides, or expended for his necessary personal traveling and subsistence expenses, shall not be included in determining whether his campaign expenditures have exceeded the sum fixed by this section as the limit of his campaign expenses.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person other than a candidate or his duly authorized agent or committee, unless authorized in writing by the candidate or his agent or committee, to make any campaign expenditure in behalf of the candidate, except contributions to the candidate or his duly authorized agent or committee.

SEC. 4. Every candidate shall either—

(a) Personally receive all contributions for the furtherance of the campaign and make or authorize all campaign expenditures and keep accounts thereof as provided in section 5; or (b) appoint an agent or a committee which shall be charged with sole responsibility for receiving all such contributions, making or authorizing all campaign expenditures, and keeping accounts thereof as provided in section 5.

SEC. 5. (a) Every candidate, or his duly authorized agent or committee, shall keep a correct and itemized account of—

(1) Each contribution received from any source for the furtherance of the campaign, together with the name and address of the person who has made the contribution and the date thereof; and

(2) Each campaign expenditure which the candidate or his agent or committee has made or authorized to be made, together with the name and address of the person to whom the expenditure was made, the date, and the purpose of such expenditure.

(b) Each contribution or expenditure shall be entered on such accounts within 24 hours from its receipt, or authorization or payment, respectively.

(c) Such accounts shall be preserved for the period of two years after the date of the election.

SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful for any person willfully to falsify in any way any account required to be kept by this act.

SEC. 7. All such accounts shall, throughout the time they are required to be kept and preserved, be open to inspection by any person.

SEC. 8 (a) Each candidate shall—

(1) On the thirtieth day before the date on which a nomination is made; (2) on the tenth day before the date on which a nomination is made; and (3) on or before the fifteenth day after the date on which a nomination is made, file with the commission on elections a detailed report showing all contributions received and all expenditures made in his campaign for nomination.

(b) Each candidate who seeks election after the date of the nomination shall (1) on the thirtieth day before the date of the election; (2) on the tenth day before the date of the election; and (3) on or before the fifteenth day after the date of the election file with the Commission on Elections a detailed report showing all contributions received and all expenditures made in his campaign for election.

(c) Each such report shall be complete as of the day preceding the date of its filing and shall be accompanied by a balance sheet. The reports required by this section to be filed shall be cumulative, but when there has been no change in an item previously reported only the amount need be carried forward.

(d) Each such report (1) shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the person filing such statement, before any officer authorized to administer oaths; (2) shall be deemed properly filed when deposited in an established post office on the prescribed day, duly stamped, registered, and directed to the commission at its principal office, but in the event it is not received a duplicate shall be promptly filed upon notes by the commission of its nonreceipt; (3) shall be preserved by the commission for a period of two years from the date of its filing and shall constitute a part of its public records.

SEC. 9. It shall be unlawful for any candidate directly or indirectly to promise or to pledge the appointment, or the use of his influence or support for the appointment of any person to any public or private position or employment, for the purpose of procuring support in his candidacy.

SEC. 10. It shall be unlawful for any person to make or offer to make an expenditure, or to cause an expenditure to be made or offered, to any person, either to vote or withold his vote, or to vote for or against any candidate; and it shall be unlawful for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such expenditure in consideration of his vote or the withholding of his vote.

SEC. 11. It shall be unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution in behalf of any campaign for nomination or election to any political office, or for any corporation whatever to make a contribution in behalf of any campaign for nomination or election at which presidential and vice presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, Congress is to be voted for, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section. Every corporation which makes any contribution in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $10,000; and every officer or director of any corporation who consents to any contribution by the corporation in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 12. Any person violating any of the provisions of this act, except section 11, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 13. This act shall not limit or affect the right of any person to make expenditures for proper legal expenses in contesting the results of a nomination or election.

SEC. 14. This act shall not be construed to annul the laws of any State relating to the nomination or election of candidates, unless directly inconsistent with the provisions of this act, or to exempt any candidate from complying with such State laws.

SEC. 15. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 16. The Federal corrupt practices act, 1925, approved February 28, 1925 (except section 312 thereof), is hereby repealed.

SEC. 17. As used in this act—

(a) The term "campaign expenditures" includes all expenditures made for the purpose of obtaining nomination, regardless of the method of nomination, and for the purpose of obtaining election after nomination, made or authorized by the candidate between the date of the election and the date of the last previous election for the same office.

(b) The term "candidate" means an individual who is presented for nomination or election as Senator or Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress of the United States, whether or not such individual is nominated or elected.

(c) The term "contribution" includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution.

(d) The term "expenditure" includes a payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make an expenditure.

(e) The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, or any other organization or group of persons.

SEC. 18. This act may be cited as the "Federal corrupt practices act of 1928."

SEC. 19. This act shall take effect on the date of its enactment.

S. 4424, Seventieth Congress, first session

A bill to regulate campaign expenditures of candidates for President and Vice President, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for a candidate for President or Vice President, personally or through a duly authorized agent or committee, (a) to make or authorize expenditures, for the purpose of obtaining his nomination, in an amount in excess of $480,000, or in an amount in excess of $10,000 in any one State; or (b) in the event of his nomination, to make or authorize expenditures, for the purpose of obtaining his election, in an amount in excess of $1,440,000, or in an amount in excess of $30,000 in any one State; except that expenditures for headquarters and other general expenses of a campaign shall not be counted against the limitation of expenditures in each State.

SEC. 2. (a) Any individual who is a qualified elector may, in his own name and not otherwise, make a contribution in any amount to the campaign fund of any candidate for the office of President or Vice President if such contribution is made not later than 30 days before the date of the election. During the period from the thirtieth to the sixteenth day, inclusive, before the election, it shall be unlawful for any individual to make a contribution to such fund in excess of $10,000, and during the period of 15 days next preceding the election it shall be unlawful for any such individual to make any such contribution in excess of $5,000. After the election it shall be unlawful for any such individual to make any such contribution in excess of $1,000 for the purpose of paying a deficit in such fund.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any candidate, or his agent or committee, to receive from any person, during any period specified in subdivision (a) of this section, any contribution in excess of the amount allowed to be contributed during such period under the provisions of such subdivision.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person other than a candidate or his duly authorized agent or committee, unless authorized in writing by the candidate or his agent or committee, to make any campaign expenditures in behalf of the candidate, except contributions to the candidate or his duly authorized agent or committee.

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for a candidate, or his duly authorized agent or committee, to incur any deficit, which, when added to the contributions actually received, would make a total in excess of the amount provided in section 1 as the limitation of expenditures in a campaign for either nomination or election.

SEC. 5. Every candidate shall either (1) personally receive all contributions for the furtherance of the campaign and make or authorize all campaign expenditures and keep accounts thereof as provided in section 6; or (2) appoint an agent or a committee which shall be charged with sole responsibility for receiving all such contributions, making or authorizing all campaign expenditures, and keeping accounts thereof as provided in section 6.

SEC. 6. (a) Every candidate, or his duly authorized agent or committee, shall keep a correct and itemized account of (1) each contribution received from any source for the furtherance of the campaign, together with the name and address of the person who has made the contribution and the date thereof; and (2) each campaign expenditure which the candidate or his agent or committee has made or authorized to be made, together with the name and address of the person to whom the expenditure was made, the date, and the purpose of such expenditure.

(b) Each contribution or expenditure shall be entered on such accounts within 24 hours from its receipt, or authorization or payment, respectively.

(c) Such accounts shall be preserved for the period of two years after the date of the election and shall, during such period, be open to inspection by any person.

SEC. 7. It shall be unlawful for any person willfully to falsify in any way any account required to be kept by this act.

SEC. 8. (a) Each candidate, or his agent or committee, shall file with the Commission on Elections, on the fifteenth day before the date of the national convention at which such candidate seeks to obtain the nomination, a detailed report showing all contributions received and all expenditures made or authorized to be made by the candidate, or his agent or committee, prior to the time of the submission of such report. Within a period of 10 days after the adjournment of such convention each such candidate, or his agent or committee, shall file with the commission a final and detailed report of all contributions received and all expenditures made or authorized to be made on behalf of such candidate during the period between the date of the last previous presidential election and the date of such adjournment.

(b) On the thirtieth day and on the fifteenth day next preceding the date of the election the treasurer of each national campaign committee shall file with the commission a detailed report, attested by the chairman and secretary of such committee, of all contributions received and all expenditures made or authorized to be made on behalf of all candidates since the date of the last previous presidential election. Within a period of 10 days following the election the treasurer of each such committee shall file with the commission a final and detailed report, attested by the chairman and secretary of such committee, of all contributions received and all expenditures made or authorized to be made on behalf of all candidates during the period between the date of the last previous presidential election and the date of such report.

(c) In addition to the reports provided for in subdivision (b) of this section, the treasurer of each national campaign committee shall file with the commission, on such dates as the commission may fix, not less than four reports in any calendar year of the contributions received and expenditures made or authorized to be made by such committee for political purposes. The reports required by this subdivision shall be cumulative during the calendar year to which they relate.

(d) Each report required by this section (1) shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the person filing such report before any officer authorized to administer oaths; (2) shall be deemed properly filed when deposited in an established post office on the prescribed day, duly stamped, registered, and directed to the commission at its principal office, but, in the event that it is not received, a duplicate shall be promptly filed upon notice by the commission of its nonreceipt; and (3) shall be preserved by the commission for the period of two years from the date of its filing and shall constitute a part of its public records.

SEC. 9. It shall be unlawful for any candidate to directly or indirectly promise or pledge the appointment or the use of his influence or support for the appointment of any person to any public or private position or employment for the purpose of procuring support in his candidacy.

SEC. 10. It shall be unlawful for any person to make or offer to make an expenditure, or to cause an expenditure to be made or offered, to any person either to vote or withhold his vote or to vote for or against any candidate, and it shall be unlawful for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any such expenditure in consideration of his vote or the withholding of his vote.

SEC. 11. Any person who violates any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both.

SEC. 12. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 13. As used in this act—

(a) The term "campaign expenditures" includes all expenditures made for the purposes of obtaining nomination, regardless of the method of nomination, and for the purpose of obtaining election after nomination, made or authorized by the candidate between the date of the election and the date of the last previous national election.

(b) The term "candidate" means an individual who is presented for nomination or election as President or Vice President, whether or not such individual is nominated or elected.

(c) The term "contribution" includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution.

(d) The term "expenditure" includes a payment, distribution, loan, advance, deposit, or gift of money or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make an expenditure.

(e) The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, or any other organization or group of persons.

SEC. 14. This act may be cited as the "national campaign expenditures act of 1928."

SEC. 15. This act shall take effect on the date of its enactment.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] has rendered a distinct public service. It is a strange paradox that while the Senate has spent a great deal of its time and a great deal of money in investigating corrupt practices in elections, and I think some very good work has been done—I want to congratulate the members of the various committees that have had that work to do upon the manner in which they have done it—still, except for the unseating of Smith and VARE, the Congress has done nothing to stop these practices in the future.

It is a good deal like the fact that so many people all over the world are talking against war and for peace. Even governments indulge in that pastime, but no major government on the face of the earth that I am aware of, and no powerful nation of people, has ceased the economic practices that lead to war.

We talk about corruption, the buying of seats in the Senate, the selling of the Government on the auction block to the highest bidder, but we have done nothing to stop the practice.

Mr. President, I have waited for some of the learned constitutional lawyers of the Senate who are so much better equipped than I to study this question and propose a remedy. I am glad that the Senator from New Mexico has opened the discussion of the subject. Some time ago, in my humble way, I spent considerable time in studying this question, and introduced three bills that I hoped would at least be a partial remedy. I do not claim that these bills carry an adequate or complete remedy; but I had hoped that the Committee on Privileges and Elections, before which these bills are now pending, would at least give some consideration and hearing to them. In view of the fact that this matter has been brought up this morning, I want to call the attention of the Senate to these bills.

As a matter of fact, I think we have done the State of Illinois and the State of Pennsylvania a grave injustice in this: The country has been led to believe that only in Illinois and Pennsylvania is there wholesale corruption of the electorate. I make the charge that if the committee of the Senate or any other reliable, responsible body in the United States will investigate the political machinery of many other States of the Union it will find political machines as corrupt as the political machine of Pennsylvania or of Illinois. I venture to say that it will be found that in very many States of the Union the political machinery is as corrupt and spends as much money in proportion to the wealth and population of the States as in Pennsylvania or in Illinois.

It is a well-known fact that for years delegates to conventions from the South, made up of office holders, have been sold on the auction block to the highest bidder, to the presidential candidate whose representatives will pay the greatest sum of money. It is also a well-known fact that they do not stay bought. The man who gets to them last with the money gets the delegates and gets the votes in a national convention.

It is a subject of such grave importance to the life of the Republic that I think the Congress has been very derelict in its duty in not paying more attention to it, in order to find a remedy.

In the opening remarks of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] he called attention to the corrupt practices act of 1925. That act specifically excluded from its operation primaries for the selection of candidates for United States Senator. I take it that it was not done with malice aforethought. I take it that it was done with the Newberry decision in mind.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Having been long interested in that problem I will say to the Senator that the reason why primaries were excluded was because of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Newberry case.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts, however, to this fact—and I am sure he did it in good faith. I do not call this to the Senator's attention in criticism of whoever inserted that provision in the corrupt practices act——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I understood the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. But I want to discuss that provision for a moment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I suggest to the Senator that in the course of his discussion of this subject he consider whether it is possible, by constitutional amendment or otherwise, to limit the abuse of the use of money in elections without forbidding the use of money of any amount by all political parties and all candidates?

I have come to the conclusion, from a good many years of study of the question, that the only way to do away with these election abuses is for the Government to assume all the legitimate expenses of elections. What are the legitimate expenses of a candidate? Chiefly distribution of literature, holding public meetings, and carrying voters to the polls and employing workers on election day.

Carrying voters to the polls on election day can be taken care of very simply by providing that the communities where elections are held pay for the transportation of invalids and a penalty for repeated failures, with good reason, to vote. The distribution of literature can be taken care of by the Government issuing a pamphlet giving the same proportion of space to every candidate and every party, and mailing it to every voter. The matter of public meetings can be taken care of by public halls being given over for one or two or three nights to each candidate or party in each locality. If that can be done, will the Senator tell me where and how there is need of the legitimate expenditure of money for the election of any candidate?

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield there?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from Minnesota has the floor. I should like to add, however, that if we depart from the principle of no expenditures, we immediately begin to permit all kinds of excuses for the expenditure of money in unlimited amounts.

I am very strongly of the opinion that we should seek to conduct our elections like the elections of a high-class business corporation that wants to elect responsible officers or directors. A man who would go about spending large amounts of money to be elected to the board of directors of a high-class financial institution would not be considered worthy of the office. If those directors want to know something about an applicant they make inquiries, they make investigations, and they pay out of the resources of the company for those inquiries and those investigations.

I repeat, I am very strongly of the opinion—and I should like to have the Senator's view on this subject—that the way to ultimately solve this problem is to forbid the use of money altogether. That will prevent those who have great wealth having any advantage over those that have no money. It will prevent the political party that can gather the largest sum of money having any great advantage over the political party that can get only a few thousand dollars, and will do more than anything else to restore the principle of equality of opportunity, which is a cardinal American principle. Equality does not exist in the right to hold public office if one man can use millions of dollars to be elected, and another man can not use it because he can not command the money or declines to be subservient to the influences that give money for elections.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do.

Mr. CUTTING. I should like to express my complete agreement with the remarks just made by the Senator from Massachusetts. I believe that within the next 10 years it will be possible to adopt some such system. I am not sure that the public is ready for it at the present time. If it is, I shall certainly be glad to vote for such a system.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am pleased to hear that observation.

Mr. CUTTING. My legislation is being suggested just for the present emergency, until we are ready to take the full step suggested by the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I agree with the views of the Senator and hope we can make progress toward removing the evil influences of large expenditures of money in our elections.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, on account of the lateness of the hour I shall ask, very respectfully, that I be not interrupted.

I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I do not see any reason why the law should not provide that the only money a man should spend in an election of any kind is his necessary traveling expenses. Let all candidates pay their necessary traveling expenses, and present their messages to the people of their district or their State on a basis of equality.

I want to say, in qualification of a statement I made about the buying of delegates from the South, that I do not want to be misunderstood as having reference to the great mass of the people of the South. I had particular reference to officeholders under a Republican administration, appointees who, under the peculiar circumstances of the conditions in the South, have a notorious reputation for being venal. I think, in a lesser degree, the same criticism applies to delegates from all over the United States.

I desire now to discuss the particular provisions of the corrupt practices act of 1925 exempting primaries from the provisions of that act.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I want to remind the Senator about that. Referring to the act of 1925, the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and several other Members of this body who made a special study of this subject were very much interested in that act; and at that time it was thought that we went as far as possible under existing constitutional provisions.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I want to be understood as saying that I do not question the ability as constitutional students of the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Massachusetts. It may be presumptuous of me to discuss the subject, not being a lawyer, but I have read the decision, and I propose to make just a few remarks upon that decision as it affects the corrupt practices act as it was enacted in 1925.

The original Federal corrupt practices act of 1910, of which the present 1925 act is an amendment, covered both primary and general elections. This was before the adoption of the seventeenth amendment, providing for direct election of Senators by the people.

The Supreme Court in the Newberry case held that the 1910 act, being passed prior to the seventeenth amendment, could not be validated by the later amendment. The syllabus of the Supreme Court decision in Truman H. Newberry et al., plaintiffs in error, v. United States of America (254 U. S.) reads plainly on this point:

1. The only source of power which Congress (prior to the seventeenth amendment) possessed over elections for Senators and Representatives was United States Constitution, Article I, section 4, which empowers Congress to regulate the manner of holding such elections.

2. Under the constitutional grant of power to regulate "the manner of holding elections" of Senators and Representatives, Congress could not fix, as it attempted in the act of June 25, 1910, section 8, as amended by the act of August 19, 1911, the maximum sum which a candidate may spend, or advise or cause to be contributed and spent by others, to procure his nomination at a primary election or convention.

3. The validity of the Federal corrupt practices act, antedating the seventeenth amendment, must be tested by powers possessed by Congress at the time of its enactment. An after-acquired power can not, ex propria vigore, validate a statute void when enacted.

Thus the Supreme Court plainly intimates that Congress under the seventeenth amendment has an "after-acquired power" additional to that granted in Article I, section 4, and that under this "after-acquired power" Congress has authority to regulate both primary and general elections as provided in the original 1910 Federal corrupt practices act, under which the Government attempted to prosecute Senator Newberry, of Michigan.

Congress has not yet assumed this "later-acquired power" under the seventeenth amendment, the power which the Supreme Court has pointed out to us. The short bill which I have introduced provides for doing so. It provides that the title of the corrupt practices act of 1925 shall be changed so as to include the words "primary elections." The bill provides simply that the term "elections" in the Federal corrupt practices act includes primary, general, and special elections.

Before the ratification of the seventeenth amendment United States Senators were elected by State legislatures. The election of a Senator had nothing to do with the popular-election system—neither with registration, primaries, nor general elections. After the adoption of the seventeenth amendment the election of Senators fell within all provisions of election by the people—registration, primary, and general elections—and thereby came squarely under Article I, section 4, of the Constitution, granting power to Congress to regulate "the manner of holding elections" of Senators and Representatives. And "the manner of holding elections," elections by the people in this country, includes the whole elective process—registration, primary, and general elections.

PRIMARY ELECTIONS OF SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES

Of 96 Senators in this Chamber, 82 come to it through the primary election.

Of 434 Members of the House of Representatives, 420 come to Congress through the primary election.

There are 41 States having state-wide primary elections of Senators, and 42 States having congressional district primary elections of United States Representatives.

If a Federal corrupt practices act is needed in any elections at all, it would seem to be necessary in the 41 States where in a majority of cases the primary election is the main contest in the election of United States Senator, and in the 42 States where the primary election determines in the majority of cases the contest for Representative.

We have only to glance at the election returns of the last election, 1926, to note how large a number of the election contests of this country in the election of Senators and Representatives are settled in the primary election. In over half the States and congressional districts the main contest is in the primary.

Take the Southern States. With the possible exception of one congressional district in Texas, the entire election of southern Senators and Representatives is settled in the Democratic primary elections. Compare the primary-election vote in these States with the general-election vote.

In Alabama, 1926, the Democratic primary vote for Senator was 207,316, and the total general-election vote was 113,513.

In Arkansas the Democratic primary vote was 220,816, and the fall vote of all parties only 33,214.

The Florida primary vote was 107,129, and the November vote 65,568.

Georgia's primary vote for Senator was 190,090; November total, 47,366.

Louisiana primary contest polled 164,603, and general election 54,180.

South Carolina polled 160,262 in the Democratic primary; only 14,560 in the November general election of Senator.

The primary election is the main contest in a good share of the Northern and Western States. In Illinois, 1926, the Republican primary polled 1,146,798 votes against 842,273 Republican votes for Senator in the November general election. The Illinois Republican primary contest polled a larger vote by 300,000.

In Pennsylvania 1,415,577 Republican voters contested for Senator in the May primary, against 822,187 at the same polls in November. The Pennsylvania primary contest brought a larger Republican poll than the general election by 629,000, or 75 per cent.

There was no corrupt practices act to regulate the main contests in Illinois and Pennsylvania, the primary elections in the spring. Had the Federal corrupt practices act been extended to primary elections, as the Supreme Court so plainly intimates it could be, does anyone in this Chamber imagine for a moment that the conditions in the primary contests of these two States would have been what the investigations of the Senate have disclosed? The expenditure of thousands of dollars and consumption of months of time over two prolonged election contests in the Senate—with the disclosure of conditions that are a national disgrace—are logically traceable to the neglect of Congress to apply the Federal corrupt practices act to the primary elections that constituted the main election contests.

Let us consider the increasing part which primary elections play in the political contests of some of our Western States.

The North Dakota primary election of Senator, 1926, brought out 161,958 Republican votes, against 107,921 Republican votes in November.

The Republican primary vote in Iowa for Senator was 422,327, against a Republican vote of 323,409 in November.

The California Republican primary contest polled 707,326, against 670,128 Republican votes in November.

The Oregon Republican primary polled 125,077, against 89,007 Republican votes in November.

Washington's Republican primary vote was 215,642, against a November Republican vote of 164,130.

In Wisconsin, 1926, 466,637 Republican votes were cast in the primary contest, which was 267,000 more than the Republican vote in November.

In all of these States the main election contest was in the primary election. In 26 having state-wide primary elections in 1926—a substantial majority of the whole—a summary of the total cast in primary contests, as compared with the general election total, makes the following instructive comparison:

Primary total vote of these 26 States	11,294,020
General election total for same States	10,073,955

CAMPAIGN MILLIONS UNLOOSED BY NINE WORDS IN 1925 STATUTE

The original Federal corrupt practices act of 1910 was not expressly amended so as to withdraw all Federal restrictions upon corrupt practices in the primary election of Senators and Representatives until the statute of February 28, 1925, limited the jurisdiction of the act as follows:

SEC. 302. (a) The term "election" includes a general or special election * * * but does not include a primary election or convention of a political party.

For 15 years—from the original act of June 25, 1910, to the statutory amendment of February 28, 1925—the Federal corrupt practices act applied in express terms to primary elections of Senators and Representatives.

The Newberry decision of 1921 was not conclusive of the powers of Congress to punish corrupt practices. The Federal corrupt practices act of 1910 was an extensive act of 19 sections covering many phases of election corruption. It prohibited campaign contributions by corporations and corporate officials. It governed the solicitation of campaign funds. It penalized the sale and purchase of votes. It provided for the filing of campaign contributions and expenditures. The Newberry decision expressly covered only that phase of the corrupt practices act set up in the indictment and found that Congress had not the power in 1910 to set a limit to the campaign expenditures of Newberry in his primary election.

Four members of the Supreme Court held that Congress, even before the seventeenth amendment, had the power to regulate all elections of Senators and Representatives, both primary and general elections. Chief Justice White, dissenting, held—page 269:

I can see no reason for now denying the power of Congress to regulate a subject which from its very nature inheres in and is concerned with the election of Senators of the United States as provided by the Constitution.

Justice Pitney—page 275—with whom Justices Brandeis and Clarke agreed, declared:

There is no constitutional infirmity in the act of Congress that underlies the indictment.

But he found—

there was an error in the submission of the case to the jury that calls for a new trial.

Justice McKenna, the fifth justice in the case and the one whose opinion governed the verdict, reserved his opinion except on the one point, that the act of 1910 antedated the seventeenth amendment and thereby lacked authority to limit the Newberry expenditures.

That the moral effect of the 1910 act did not cease with the decision of a divided court is proven by the resignation of Newberry and his retirement from the Senate. He knew, as the country knew, that politically he was dead. Any day there might be a change of court opinion by death or resignation, or by the introduction of a new legal angle into an election case, that would bring disaster to any candidate, or boss, or campaign contributor violating the Federal corrupt practices act of 1910. So the case stood until 1925.

But when on February 28, 1925, with 30 Senators and 420 Representatives facing primary elections in 1926, it was expressly declared by Congress that the Federal corrupt practices act as applied to elections "does not include a primary election or convention," then the gates were thrown open.

Section 313, prohibiting corporation contributions to primary campaign funds, a subject not discussed in the Newberry case, was repealed as to all primary contests. This language of the law was stricken out as to primary elections, to wit:

Every corporation which makes any contribution in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000, and every officer or director of any corporation who consents to any contribution by the corporation in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

This provision had stood as a deterring force in all primary contests for 15 years up to February 28, 1925. Congress in 1925 said, in effect, to the corporations of the country and to the political bosses and machines: "Gentlemen, primary elections are now open to all the contributions you care to make and to all the corrupt practices you can invent. Go to it! You are herewith granted complete immunity from the Federal corrupt practices act so far, mind you, as concerns primary elections and conventions. See that you restrict your criminal work to primary elections and conventions; that is all; go ahead; make hay while the sun shines."

The 1926 primary-election contests show that the bosses, machines, and corporate affiliations took Congress at its word. The results we have seen. The immunity bath for corrupt practices was such a stimulus in Illinois primaries that the State primary election of Senator, which usually brought to the polls 800,000 to 1,000,000 votes, swelled the 1926 vote to 1,443,163—and the vote at the Republican primaries was 300,000 larger than at the general election following. Corporate contributions, or the contributions of corporate officials, ran into figures never before known in political history.

In years prior to this 1925 immunity bath the Pennsylvania vote in senatorial primary elections had stood—534,000 in 1920, 1,117,000 in 1922, and only 816,000 in 1924. But the immunity grant of 1925 swelled the Pennsylvania primary vote to 1,616,704—an increase of nearly 100 per cent. The Republican primaries of 1926 in Pennsylvania polled 1,451,577, which was 629,390 more than the Republican vote in November. So Pennsylvania bosses and corporations obeyed the injunction of Congress to the letter and heaped all their corrupt practices on the primary. They appreciated the courtesy of Congress in giving them their first chance in years to be as corrupt as they pleased.

Further illustrations of the logical effect of the 1925 repeal can be read in the primary election results of numerous States—wherever moneyed interests were concerned in political control. But it is not necessary to extend the grewsome detail. A large percentage of the Senators in this Chamber are familiar with enough cases of the use of unlimited campaign barrels in recent primary contests in their own States to know that the 1925 provision—the nine words exempting the operations of the Federal corrupt practices act from primary elections—was a vital blunder which endangers government by the people in this country.

The illustrations I have used thus far relate to the primary election of Senators. Perhaps a word should be added in regard to the part which primary elections play in the election of Members of the House of Representatives. I have intimated that in a majority of the 434 congressional districts in the United States the main contest is in the primaries. Let us examine the basis for that contention.

If you turn to the statistical pages of the Congressional Directory, pages 182–188, where Clerk of the House Tyler Page compiles the election returns for Members of the House, you will be struck with the following facts:

In about 90 congressional districts the Congressman elect has no opposition in November, the only election being that at the primary.

In over 150 congressional districts the Congressman elect polled more than double the vote of his defeated opponent. It will be admitted that in such a district the main contest was at the primary, the primary election being the equivalent of election.

Thus, in 240 congressional districts out of the total 434—or 26 more than a majority—the main election contest is the primary.

To restrict the operation of the Federal corrupt practices act to the minority of congressional districts and deny its operation to the majority, I submit, is to make that act a farcical gesture devoid of logic or statesmanship. If Congress is in earnest and sincerely desires results from the enforcement of the Federal corrupt practices act, if it honestly proposes to stem the trend of commercial control of seats in these two Houses, its duty is plain. Extend the act to primary elections, as the Supreme Court plainly indicates we have the power to do. Apply the act to that class of elections which to-day determine the will of the people in a majority of the States and their congressional districts.

Mr. President, if that be done I think it will tend to allay the fear that is prevalent throughout the country to-day from the revelations that as a matter of fact the very Government of the United States itself is being sold on the auction block to the highest bidder and being used by those who buy it to have legislation enacted, not only in the two Houses of Congress but in the very administration of the law itself in the executive departments, and that those people are using the Government for the purpose of milking the pockets of the American people for their own profits.

Mr. President, because of the lateness of the hour I shall not take any more of the time of the Senate. I had not expected to address the Senate to-day at all. At some later time I shall attempt to go into the subject more specifically.

CAMPAIGN EXPENSES OF GOV. ALFRED E. SMITH

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Washington Herald this morning carried a statement to the effect that Mayor William A. Gunter, of Montgomery, Ala., had been elected a delegate at large from the State, and that this was "a repudiation of Senator HEFLIN." It will be recalled that Mr. Gunter is the man who sent a telegram to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] criticizing me when I discussed the Roman Catholic-Mexican-Hearst scandal in the Senate in January.

The opposition to Governor Smith in Alabama had 10 candidates for delegates from the State at large and we could only elect 4. The opposition to our delegates, those who were said to favor Smith, had only 4 candidates in the field, while we had 10. All 10 of our candidates received a good vote. So our forces were naturally divided. But in spite of that, we swept the field entirely, elected the entire delegation of 24, all against Smith, and the lowest delegate selected on our ticket of 4 from the State at large, defeated Mayor Gunter by between 15,000 and 16,000 votes.

A friend informs me that while some clever citizens and good Democrats voted for Gunter for various reasons, that his main vote came from the Roman Catholics.

That particular vote really represents the real opposition to me in the State because of the fight I have made and am making and will continue to make for the protection and preservation of free institutions in America.

Mr. Gunter has been rejected. He would not admit that he was for Governor Smith—so he must have obtained some votes on that score. He made speeches over the State and they say he had active workers in various sections of the State. It is believed in the State, and I believe it, that funds were furnished by Governor Smith's secretive and artistic campaign managers. If the Washington Herald thinks or thought, when it thought that Gunter had been elected, that I was repudiated, I wonder now what it thinks about it since he has been overwhelmingly defeated? I will not take the time to comment on that.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand the forerunner—the outside cover or advertisement of a book that is to appear soon, written by Mr. Hapgood and somebody else, entitled "Alfred E. Smith," a biographical study in Democratic politics, and so forth, illustrated by photographs, cartoons, original drawings, for sale at $2.50 a volume. Governor Smith has evidently approved this. It must have been submitted to him before it was submitted to the public. It carries this statement, quoting from the Nation:

> No newspaper editor or politician who desires all the facts can be without this volume, and likewise no citizen who wishes to know truths about the man who will either be the next presidential nominee of his party or be the cause, by reason of his defeat, of his party again going on the rocks.

I want Democrats to take note of that statement. That is being carried in his biography. No doubt he is paying for it or some of his close friends are. They are already spreading the idea over the country, before the convention meets, that this man will be the nominee or his defeat will be the means of driving the party on the rocks.

I have shown heretofore that Governor Smith's friends, the Roman Catholic newspapers, have threatened to defeat the party if they did not nominate Smith. I have shown that their leaders in various States have said that. But here it comes, with the sanction of Governor Smith himself, it appears, that if he is not nominated they are going to bring about the defeat of the Democratic Party.

Mr. President, in addition to that I want this to go in the RECORD to-day. Yesterday Governor Smith was interrogated briefly in New York. He said to the Senate committee investigating campaign funds that he knew nothing about his campaign, that he had authorized nobody to accept money or to spend money. He knew nothing about anything except about New York, and yet he is running to be President of a Union of 48 States. He admits by that he is not acquainted with the problems that affect the Nation at large; he knows nothing except about New York.

Mr. President, he reminds me of the images of the three little monkeys which the Japanese have made well known. One has his hands over his mouth, another has his hands over his ears, and another has his hands over his eyes—"see no evil, speak no evil, hear no evil." So Governor Smith sees nothing, hears nothing, tells nothing. That is the situation he is in before the Senate committee. Senators, is it possible that this man is going to let that statement stand—running for President of the United States and yet swearing before a committee of the Senate that he knows nothing about his campaign; that he has authorized nobody to make any preparations to run it; that he knows nothing about his campaign expenditures? Is he to let that statement stand before this Senate committee and the country?

Let me suggest to the committee how to get at some of the facts. Call Mr. Norman Hapgood before the committee—I suggest it in the open Senate—and ask him who furnished the money for the printing of the stories he has written day after day in the Washington News. Call Mr. Hoover's man in and ask him to tell the committee who paid him; and call in the manager of the Washington News and ask who paid for those many pages that appeared day after day for a month, or perhaps more. That cost money. I know, because I myself have been held up a few times by certain daily papers. I remember that a daily newspaper in my State printed a speech of mine and a cut; it filled a whole page; and they charged me only $300 for it in one issue.

How much did the articles to which I refer cost, appearing 30 or 40 days, page after page? They cost somebody several thousand dollars. I now suggest to the committee that they call the News in, and call Norman Hapgood and this other man, who seems to have picked out these two candidates for us, one for the Republicans and one for the Democrats, and interrogate them, ask them who paid them this money and how much.

Let me say to the Senate that it was disclosed in the testimony yesterday that one contractor in New York—just one out of the hundreds and thousands in New York City—had given to Governor Smith's campaign fund $20,000 and had loaned $50,000 more to his committee. Just one contractor in New York had contributed $70,000 to Governor Smith's campaign fund, a contractor who is under obligations to Governor Smith and Mayor Walker for getting these jobs in the city of New York, where Tammany holds sway and feeds and fattens on graft. That is worth looking into.

It has been suggested by a newspaper—and I will discuss the matter more at length later—that there is a graft fund of $60,000,000 being raised in New York for Governor Smith; that it has been collected out of contracts let in New York City for various purposes. The suggestion is made in that newspaper that Mayor Walker ought to resign or that he ought to be impeached. I hope our committee has not finished with New York. I trust that it will go back again or call the witnesses here.

Let me remind Senators that Governor Smith is following somebody's example. Newberry tried similar tactics on the Senate committee. He said, "I do not know anything about it." The vouchers came in and in spite of the destruction of checks, we traced about $200,000. "But what about this?" he was asked. "I do not know." "Well, but these people say they got the money." "Well, my brother John must have attended to that. I knew nothing about it." I wonder if Gov. Alfred Smith of New York has a friend or brother who imposed upon and mistreated him, or who kindly took the responsibility—all off of him. He said, "I do not know"; and that he had authorized nobody—he has just drifted and drifted and drifted on the edge of the sea of politics; he does not know the way out to the open sea. He said so; he knows nothing except New York; and yet it is alleged they knew how to grab up this $60,000,000 presidential campaign fund in New York, so this newspaper charges, which I shall later discuss here.

Let the committee go back to New York, call every contractor they can find, and ask him how much he has contributed to Governor Smith's campaign fund. This should be done at once. Let the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] tell what he knows about Hoover's large expenditures in Indiana. Let some of the friends of the late Senator Willis, the great Senator from Ohio, who died not long ago, tell of the large Hoover expenditures there. They made a terrific campaign against him and spent tremendous sums of money. Senator Willis talked about it frequently with some of the Senators here. Let them ask his friends to tell them whom to call here.

Senators, we owe it to our country to interrogate every Republican and Democrat who is engaged in this sort of corrupt and infamous business. Both parties ought to join sincerely in the effort to crush out the candidates who are trying to put the Presidency upon the auction block for sale and traffic to the highest bidder. It ought to be stopped; it has got to be stopped; and we are going to stop it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do, very gladly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if, after the disclosures in the Smith and Vare investigations, any friend of a candidate who desired to use large sums of money would be likely to send that money to the candidate or even to the candidate's manager? Would he not, in other words, be disposed to put that money into somebody's hands who was not connected with the organization, and so arrange it that the candidate would know nothing about the expenditures?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly; and that is what I think has happened. The Newberry case disclosed that checks had been given, money had been delivered and receipts taken, and vouchers were shown. Candidates have learned from that to cover up their tracks, and not to give any checks, not to take any receipts and to have no record which will show the facts—except their own private records locked up in a safe.

Somebody admitted yesterday for Governor Smith that $41,500 was sent to the one State of California. Suppose they are sending $40,000 or $50,000 to each State. That would be a very large sum. But the governor, so he says, does not know anything about it. Strange indeed!

So, Mr. President, I call on my party, in the name of millions of clean and incorruptible Democrats, not to permit this man's nomination. I wish to assert again—and then I am going to yield the floor—that Governor Smith is not going to be nominated by the Democrats. The true and tried Jeffersonian democracy will hold the line against him. Indiana has gone for Woollen. We will see how strong the people of that State are for their home candidate. They are seeking to make him appear as a stalking horse for Smith—Governor Donahey will hold Ohio; REED has 100 and more delegates; Smith claims delegates that belong to REED. Keep your eye on Judge HULL of Tennessee; the solid South will be there standing like the rock of Gibraltar; and Governor Smith is not going to get enough votes to nominate him. I also think that the defeat of Hoover in Indiana by WATSON has "fixed his clock." I think the Republicans are going to hold him, as some of them would like to do, and relieve the country of having to pick between these two. It is to be hoped that that will be done.

PATENT MONOPOLIES

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, a few weeks ago I introduced a bill, being Senate bill 2783, for the purpose of providing that the owners of patents who use them to form corporations and monopolies in violation of the Sherman law or the Clayton Antitrust Act, should forfeit their patent rights. Hearings were held on that bill before the Committee on Patents, and it was argued that the provisions of the bill were too stringent; that the punishment was too drastic because of the indefinite provisions of the law, and the fact that the courts have not always made clear exactly what constitutes a violation of the law. For that reason I have introduced a substitute for that bill, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks, without being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The proposed substitute is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. DILL as a substitute for S. 2783, to provide for the forfeiture of patent rights in case of conviction under laws prohibiting monopoly, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That it shall be a complete defense in any suit for infringement of a patent to prove that the complainant in such suit is a party to any combination (in the form of trust or otherwise), agreement, understanding, license, or cross license, with any other patentee or other person owning or controlling patent rights, the effect of which is substantially to lessen competition or to tend to operate a monopoly in any line of commerce.

"SEC. 2. It shall be a complete defense in any action for infringement of a patent to prove that the complainant in such infringement suit is violating any law of the United States relating to unlawful restraints and monopolies or relating to combinations, contracts, agreements, or understandings in restraint of trade, or is engaged in any practice declared to be unlawful by the Clayton Act or the Federal Trade Commission act."

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the substitute which I have offered provides that in any infringement suit brought by the owner or holder of a patent it shall be a complete defense to show that that patent is being used in combination with other patents in violation of the Sherman Act or the Clayton antitrust law. I believe that the greatest monopolies in America to-day are built around the illegal use of patents, and I believe that some legislation is necessary in order to protect the public against such illegal use.

The Constitution gives Congress the right to grant patents for the purpose of encouraging the arts and sciences, but not for the purpose of enabling a few holders of patents to establish monopolies, to pick the pockets of the people in a manner that would not be possible did they not hold such patents. The bill which I offer as a substitute does not destroy the patent rights so long as the patents are used legally, and anyone who is using patents illegally can regain the right to sue for infringements by ceasing to violate the law.

The most striking illustration of the kind of violation which I have mentioned is found in the radio combination that has grown up in this country, generally known as the Radio Trust. This giant monopoly represents a pool of patents of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the General Electric Co., the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., the United Fruit Corporation, and the Radio Corporation of America. This combination has undertaken to monopolize radio communication, radio broadcasting, and radio manufacturing, and does this all under the pretense of protection by patents. It has done more than that. It has attempted to apportion this monopoly among the constituent members by a series of cross-licensing agreements which violate both the Clayton Act and the Sherman antitrust law. These agreements should be read by everyone who wants to know of these violations, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that they may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The agreements referred to are as follows:

LICENSE AGREEMENT—GENERAL ELECTRIC CO. AND RADIO CORPORATION OF AMERICA

Agreement made this 20th day of November, 1919, between General Electric Co., a New York corporation, hereinafter called the General Co., and Radio Corporation of America, a Delaware corporation, hereafter referred to as the Radio Corporation

RECITALS

A. The General Co. has developed various inventions relating to, or applicable to, radio work and other communication work.

B. The General Co. is under obligation to certain foreign companies to give them for their territory, respectively, exclusive rights to its various inventions and discoveries and to the business of selling General Electric products. Some of these companies are substantially controlled by the International General Electric Co., a New York corporation, hereinafter referred to as the International Co.

C. The Radio Corporation proposes to establish, maintain, and operate radio stations, and cable and wire lines and stations, and to deal in, lease, and maintain radio devices, and desires to utilize in such work the various inventions now controlled by the General Co., and which may hereafter be controlled by it.

Article I. Definitions

1. Radio purposes is defined as the transmission or reception of communications, telegraphic, telephonic, or other, by what are known as electromagnetic waves, but not by wire.

2. Radio devices are defined as comprising:

(a) Devices useful only in radio purposes.

(b) Devices especially adapted to radio purposes, but capable of other uses, such, for example, as the Alexanderson alternator with accessories or the pliotron, except where the same are sold licensed only for uses other than radio uses, in which case the same are not to be regarded as radio devices hereunder.

3. The expression "devices" shall include apparatus, devices, systems, connections, and methods.

Article II. Licenses

1. Reserving to itself and its controlled companies, present and future, respectively, personal licenses, transferable only to the successors to their business or part thereof, and divisible only as their business is divided, to use for their own communication or other purposes for convenience or to save expense, but not for profit, the General Co. hereby grants to the Radio Corporation an exclusive, divisible license to use and sell as well as a nonexclusive indivisible license to make only when, and to the extent that the General Co. is not in a position to supply the desired device with reasonable business promptness (the right to use and sell being limited to the use and sale of apparatus purchased from the General Co. or with its written consent, so far as the General Co. is from time to time in condition to supply the same with reasonable business promptness) for radio purposes under all patents, applications for patents, inventions and rights, or licenses under or in connection with patents which the General Co. now owns or controls, or which it may acquire during the term hereof, except those acquired by purchase and referred to below.

2. The General Co. also grants to the Radio Corporation a nonexclusive nontransferable license to use, but not to make or sell (with the same limitations) for wire communication purposes under all patents, applications, inventions, rights, and licenses which it now owns or controls or which it may acquire during the term hereof by inventions of its employees.

3. For the purposes hereof the inventions, patents, and rights of the General Co. are taken as including those of the International Co. as well as following corporations, namely:

Australian General Electric Co.
China General Edison Co. (Inc.).
Compania General Electric do Brazil.
South African General Electric Co. (Ltd.).
Cia. General Electric Sudamericana (Inc.).
Mexican General Electric Co.

4. The Radio Corporation grants to the General Co. the exclusive, divisible right to make and to sell radio devices to the Radio Corporation only as well as the exclusive, divisible right to make, use, and sell devices other than radio devices, under all its patents and applications for patents, inventions, and rights, or licenses under or in connection with patents which the Radio Corporation now owns or controls, or which it may acquire during the term hereof, except as far as is provided below in the case of certain such acquired by purchase. The Radio Corporation grants the General Co. and its controlled companies, present and future, nonexclusive licenses transferable only to successors to their business or parts thereof, divisible only as their business is divided, to use for their own communication or other purposes for convenience or to save expense, but not for profit under all the patents which the Radio Corporation now owns or controls or which it may acquire during the term hereof from the General Co. or by inventions of its own employees or through contracts which it now has.

5. The said licenses are all to run for the terms for which the patents are or may be granted, reissued, or extended, and are subject to royalty only in so far as such royalties are payable to others by virtue of the contracts by which the party granting the licenses acquired or shall acquire the right to grant the same, and only at a rate not greater than that paid by such party.

6. Where in any case a party does not own or control a patent but has lawful power to grant rights or licenses thereunder to the other for part or all of its field of territory it shall do so subject to the condtions hereof.

7. In case the General Co. shall acquire by purchase from others patents, patent applications, or rights or licenses under or in connection with patents, useful for or applicable to radio purposes or wire communication, and in case the Radio Corporation similarly acquires such patents, patent applications, or rights or licenses, the party making the acquisition will offer to the other to bring the same within the scope of this contract on payment of a fair proportion of the price actually paid or to be paid therefor. This shall not apply in the case of any patent, patent application, right, or license secured by the Radio Corporation from or through the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. of America, Marconi's Wireless Telegraph Co. (Ltd.), Compagnie Generale de Telegraphie sans Fils, or others with whom the Radio Corporation may have relations similar to its actual or proposed relations with any of said companies; all such are to be treated as though they were not acquired by purchase.

8. The General Co. has sold its inventions for certain countries to companies other than those mentioned in section 3 of this article. All covenants of the General Co. with respect to such countries are subject to the present rights of the companies holding such inventions. As such rights revert to the General Co. they shall pass under the operation of this contract without further consideration.

9. Each company agrees to continue the present practice of the General Co. of requiring those employees considered likely to make inventions along this line of work to assign inventions to it; it being understood that each company shall use its best efforts to carry out this provision, but if due care and diligence are exercised neither company shall be liable to damages for failure to carry it out.

10. As soon as is reasonably possible after the filing by or on behalf of a party hereto of a United States patent application, rights to or under which should pass to the other party, the party filing the application shall transmit a copy thereof to the other party with a statement of its filing date and shall notify the other party of the counries foreign to the United States in which it has decided to file and will file applications to cover the invention of such application. The other party may then suggest that applications should be filed in additional foreign countries in which the first party has the right to file. If and so far as the first party does not within 30 days after such suggestion agree to file in such other foreign countries the other party may file proper applications for protecting such invention in such other foreign countries, and take patents thereon in its own name at its own expense. Before either party intentionally drops an application or patent of any country, rights to or under which should pass to the other hereunder, it shall notify the other party, in which case such other party may continue the prosecution of the application or continue the life of the patent in question at its own expense, being entitled in such case to an assignment thereof.

11. In case a right, application, or patent is transferred by one party to the other in accordance with the provisions of section 10 of this article, the party with which such right, application, or patent originated shall be entitled to its full rights thereunder as though such patent had originated with and had been taken out by the other party subject to any royalty or other payment required to be made to an outsider in accordance with this agreement.

12. The admission of validity implied in the acceptance of licenses and assignments hereunder is limited to the field and terms for which such licenses exist.

13. The General Co. empowers the Radio Corporation to release the United States Government from any and all claims arising from past infringement by the Government of any radio patents which the General Co. now owns or under which it has power to grant such release, provided that this can be done in a contract otherwise satisfactory to the General Co.

Article III. Restrictions on sales of apparatus

1. The General Co. agrees that it will not sell or dispose of any radio devices whatever covered by patents, rights under which are granted or agreed to be granted herein, for use in the United States except to fill orders now on hand, and except to the United States Government in cases where the Government insists on purchasing directly from the General Co. (in which case the profits from such sales over the price of such devices to the Radio Corporation hereunder shall be paid to the Radio Corporation). The General Co. further agrees that it will not sell or dispose of for use outside the United States any radio devices whatever covered by patents, rights under which are granted or agreed to be granted herein, except as it may be required to do so by existing contracts with others than the companies specifically named in section 3 of article 2 hereof, and except for its own use or for the use of the Radio Corporation. This reservation is not intended to enlarge the scope of the licenses granted in article 2 hereof.

Article IV. Sale of apparatus

1. The Radio Corporation agrees to purchase from the General Co. all radio devices covered by patents, rights under which are granted or agreed to be granted herein, which the General Co. is from time to time in a position to supply with reasonable business promptness for use in, or which are used in, the business and operation of the Radio Corporation and its licenses and customers.

2. The General Co. agrees to produce or cause to be produced such patented devices of good quality, workmanship, and material with reasonable business promptness on the written order of the Radio Corporation.

3. The basis for determining the price charged by the General Co. to the Radio Corporation shall be cost plus 20 per cent, except that for all articles complete in themselves which are purchased by the General Co. from outside manufacturers and which form a necessary part of the complete device supplied by the General Co., the price charged by the General Co. to the Radio Corporation shall be cost plus 10 per cent for handling charges.

4. The basis for determining cost shall be in accordance with the "Standard accounting and cost system for the electrical manufacturing industry," as approved by the Federal Trade Commission January 27, 1917.

5. Terms of payment shall conform to the standard terms of the General Co. current at the time of placing the order.

6. If the Radio Corporation in any particular instance wishes the General Co. to make a definite and firm price for such radio devices, and the General Co. consents to make such firm price, such firm price upon acceptance by the Radio Corporation shall be substituted in such instance or instances for the cost plus 20 per cent arrangement above mentioned.

7. All prices mentioned above shall be f. o. b. factory.

8. Standard material not specially designed for radio purposes is to be sold to the Radio Corporation at standard prices and on standard terms of payment, but at the lowest price at which such standard material is sold in like quantities to any other customer of the General Co. for use in the United States of America; and if at any time material, apparatus, or supplies especially designed for radio purposes shall be sold by the General Co. to its other customers for other uses than radio purposes in an amount greater than that taken by the Radio Corporation, the price at which such material, apparatus, or supplies shall be sold to the Radio Corporation shall be the lowest price at which such material, apparatus, or supplies are sold in like quantities to any other customer of the General Co. for use in the United States of America. In determining such lowest price under this section 8 no account shall be taken of sales:

(1) To those corporations in which the General Co. may own a substantial amount of stock.

(2) Where the General Co. sells material on a schedule, such material is to be billed to the Radio Corporation according to such schedule.

(3) Where the General Co. has a lawful contract not to sell material below a certain price, such material is not to be billed to the Radio Corporation for a less price.

(4) To the United States Government or any of its departments.

9. It is agreed that the Radio Corporation shall not resell patented articles except as a part of the radio system.

10. The Radio Corporation agrees not to lease, sell, or dispose of devices bought of the General Co. where the General Co. or one of the companies mentioned in section 3 of article 2 hereof would not be free to sell such devices. It being understood that the rights of the Radio Corporation are only for radio purposes as above defined, the Radio Corporation agrees to use care not to enter with any patented device, process, or system into the field of the General Co. or to encourage or aid others to do so, and specifically that in selling radio devices it will use such precautions, by contract of sale, restricted-license notices, etc., as may be necessary or advisable to prevent its customers from acquiring (by purchase from it of devices or otherwise) licenses to use the same for purposes of which the Radio Corporation has no right to grant such licenses. The General Co. agrees to observe similar precautions in selling apparatus and devices especially adapted to radio work but capable of other uses.

11. The General Co. agrees to sell the Radio Corporation such patented communication devices as it may be in position to supply, other than radio devices, on the same terms, but only for the use of the Radio Corporation, and not for resale or lease or other disposal and not exclusively.

Article V. Alexanderson alternator

1. The Radio Corporation agrees to purchase from the General Co. and the General Co. agrees to sell and deliver f. o. b. factory to it, as fast as they can reasonably be constructed, and prior to January 1, 1922, 12 Alexanderson alternators, complete with accessories, in accordance with specifications attached hereto and marked "Exhibit B," at the special price of $127,000 apiece. Spare alternators or other incomplete spare equipments may be substituted at prices to be agreed upon, provided that the total purchases hereunder aggregate in price the price of the 12 Alexanderson alternators with their accessories. In consideration for such agreement on the part of the General Co., the Radio Corporation agrees to issue and deliver to the General Co. 304,800 shares of its preferred stock, but subject to the provisions of article 6 hereof.

Article VI. Sale of materials

1. The Radio Corporation proposes to purchase from the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. of America, hereinafter referred to as the Marconi Co., all of its property used or useful in connection with its manufacturing business, except the factory at Aldene, N. J. In case this purchase is made, the Radio Corporation agrees forthwith to sell and does sell the property so purchased to the General Co., such sale to take effect immediately on the purchase of the same by the Radio Corporation, including all drawings, blue prints, and material for manufacture and unfinished parts on hand or on order as of the date of the Radio Corporation's acquisition of the same, and any factory plants, tools, machinery, and dies which it may acquire from the Marconi Co., but not including the publishing plant of the Wireless Press (Inc.) nor the building and real estate at Seattle, Wash., which latter will no longer be used for factory purposes. The accounts receivable are to be collected and the accounts payable are to be paid by the Radio Corporation.

2. The General Co. agrees to pay for the property thus transferred by paying for the unfinished parts, work in progress, and material on hand to be manufactured at actual cost of the same plus 20 per cent, which amount is to be ascertained by two appraisers, one appointed by the General Co. and one appointed by Mr. Edward J. Nally. In case they disagree, the matter shall be referred to Mr. S. Roger Mitchell, or other public accountant satisfactory to both parties, whose decision shall be final.

3. In case the Radio Corporation shall acquire, prior to January 1, 1922, the factory plants, lands, etc., of the Marconi Co. at Aldene, N. J., as set forth in Exhibit C hereto attached, it agrees forthwith to sell the same to the General Co., and the General Co. agrees to buy the same for $500,000.

4. The payments by the General Co. to the Radio Corporation under this article and deliveries of preferred stock to the General Co. in payment for Alexanderson alternators and their accessories in accordance with article 5 hereof are to proceed as follows: At the time of taking over the unfinished parts, work in progress, and material on hand, a special account is to be set up between the General Co. and the Radio Corporation, in which account is to be charged against the General Co. the value of such unfinished parts, work in progress, and material on hand, ascertained as above; if and when, prior to January 1, 1922, the Radio Corporation acquires the Aldene factory and transfers it to the General Co., its price, $500,000, is to be charged in the same account against the General Co. As and when the Alexanderson alternators and their accessories sold at the special price referred to above are shipped to the Radio Corporation, the price thereof is to be credited to the General Co. on such account until such credits aggregate $1,524,000. At any time when such account shows a balance in favor of the General Co. the General Co. may demand and shall then receive preferred stock of the Radio Corporation at par to any amount demanded, not exceeding such credit balance, the par value of such stock to be charged to it in such special account; and if at any time the balance of said account is in favor of the Radio Corporation, the General Co. shall liquidate such balance by surrender to the Radio Corporation of preferred stock of the Radio Corporation of a par value equal to the amount of such balance. Such special account shall be entirely independent of all other accounts between the parties.

5. The Radio Corporation agrees to place forthwith with the General Co. orders which will exhaust and consume said unfinished parts, work in progress, and material; unfinished parts, work in progress, and material not covered by such orders may be regarded by the appraisers as scrap in case the General Co. shall find itself unable profitably to utilize the same.

6. The General Co. agrees to fill the orders so to be placed on it and to bill the same to the Radio Corporation; in making up price of the articles so billed in accordance with article 4 hereof the price of the unfinished parts, work in progress, and material taken over and inventories shall be taken as the price actually paid for the same by the General Co. as above set forth, the additional work and material being charged on the basis of article 4 hereof.

Article VII. Expert advice and technical information

1. The General Co. agrees that it will from time to time permit the Radio Corporation to have and will assist it in obtaining full information concerning inventions, patents, and the patent situation of the General Co. in the radio field. The Radio Corporation engages reciprocally to do the same for the General Co.

2. The General Co. agrees upon request to furnish the Radio Corporation suitable plans for buildings, layout of machinery, antennæ, etc., for use by the Radio Corporation hereunder, and if desired a man or men to supervise the construction and erection of such buildings, and the erection and installation of such machinery, etc., and also such other engineers and experienced men as the General Co. can reasonably spare and the Radio Corporation may reasonably require in the organization, management, and development of the business of the Radio Corporation, and to give the Radio Corporation and those whom the Radio Corporation may designate from time to time all information in regard to technical and engineering but not manufacturing matters which it may possess from time to time and which the Radio Corporation may reasonably require for the conduct of its radio business hereunder, and further agrees to assist the Radio Corporation in every reasonable way to the end that the Radio Corporation shall have, whenever needed, in its operations hereunder, the benefits of the widespread experience of the General Co. The Radio Corporation agrees to pay in each case the reasonable cost of furnishing such information and service, but not any part of the cost of acquiring the information except as the same may properly be charged as part of the development cost of apparatus which the General Co. sells to the Radio Corporation.

3. Each party agrees to give the other at cost of supplying the same information and advice in connection with patent matters in its field.

4. The Radio Corporation agrees to give full information to the General Co. on the same terms, and further agrees to afford the engineering representatives of the General Co. the fullest possible facilities, consistent with the reasonable operation of the Radio Corporation, for experimenting and for developing and testing new apparatus, devices, and inventions.

Article VIII. Term and termination

1. This agreement shall continue until January 1, 1945, at which date it shall expire. As soon as is reasonably practicable after that licenses shall be granted as provided above under all patents to issue on patent applications which are then or may hereafter be filed in any country on inventions made or conceived by employees of either company up to the date of termination.

2. The Radio Corporation shall after January 1, 1945, be licensed under all patents referred to in this agreement so far as the General Co. now has or may hereafter acquire the right to grant such license to the extent necessary to enable it to manufacture for its own use hereunder, but not for lease, resale, or other disposal, radio devices which it is unable to purchase of the General Co. in accordance with the terms of article 4 hereof.

Article IX. Further assurances

1. The parties agree to execute such further instruments as may reasonably be necessary for carrying out the purposes hereof.

Article X. Controlled companies

1. This agreement shall be binding upon and inure to the benefit of the parties hereto and their successors and their controlled companies, present and future. The British Thomson-Houston Co. (Ltd.) and the Tokyo Electric Co. (Ltd.) shall not for the purposes hereof be regarded as controlled companies of the General Co.

Article XI

1. Inasmuch as the General Co. is not willing to turn over its patents, patent rights, and licenses for any definite sum of money, but is willing to transfer such patents, patent rights, and licenses only for a considerable interest in the profits to be derived from the use by the Radio Corporation of such patents, patent rights, and licenses, it is therefore understood and agreed that in the event of the taking over of the Radio Corporation by any superior authority all right, title, and interest of the Radio Corporation in any patent, patent right, or license herein granted or agreed to be granted by the General Co. to the Radio Corporation shall cease and shall be reassigned and shall revert to the General Co. as of the date of such taking over except to the extent provided below. If instead of taking over the Radio Corporation the Government takes over its radio stations in any field and/or territory, except in and for time of war or public danger, the same result shall follow so far as concerns that field and/or territory. But this action shall in no way affect the rights of Marconi's Wireless Telegraph Co. (Ltd.), or of Shielton (Ltd.) as set forth in the "Radio Corporation and British Marconi Co. principal agreement"; such rights shall be reserved from any such reassignment by the Radio Corporation for the benefit of Marconi's Wireless Telegraph Co. (Ltd.).

In testimony whereof the parties hereto have caused these presents to be executed and their corporate seals to be hereunto affixed by their proper officers thereunto duly authorized at New York City the day and year first above written.

LICENSE AGREEMENT—GENERAL ELECTRIC CO. AND AMERICAN TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO.

Agreement made this 1st day of July, 1920, between the General Electric Co., a New York corporation (herein called the General Co.), and the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., a New York corporation, herein called the Telephone Co.

Whereas the General Co. is engaged in the manufacture and sale in the United States of apparatus and systems for the generation, distribution, and utilization of electricity for light, heat, power, traction, and associated purposes, and in the manufacture and sale of a general line of electrical and power apparatus, machines, and appliances, and, directly and through affiliated companies, is engaged in the purchase of apparatus and devices of various kinds from others and in the sale thereof; and is also engaged in the manufacture and sale of wireless apparatus and appliances; and

Whereas the telephone company and its associated companies are engaged in the operation of telephone and telegraph systems; and

Whereas each party is in possession of information, patents and inventions applicable to, and has research organizations engaged in investigations bearing upon, not only its own business but also the business of the other party; and

Whereas various patents or applications for patents of the parties are involved in interference with each other in the United States Patent Office; and

Whereas the restrictions upon each party imposed by the patent rights of the other and the uncertainties arising out of interferences have tended to, and if permitted to continue will, hamper and delay progress in the development and production of wire and wireless telephone and telegraph apparatus and systems; and

Whereas the effective and prompt development of the arts in question can be secured only by the free and frank cooperation and exchange of information between the parties, which can not well take place if improvements and knowledge resulting from one party's cooperation with the other party may without its consent be made available in its field to the use of others;

Now, in consideration of the premises and the mutual agreements herein contained, it is agreed as follows:

Article I. Definitions

For the purposes of this agreement the following terms are defined as follows:

"Wire telephony" is the art of communicating or reproducing sound waves (created, directly or indirectly, by the voice or by musical instruments) by means of electricity, magnetism, or electromagnetic waves, variations or impulses conveyed or guided by wires, and includes all generating, measuring, switching, signaling, and other means or methods incidental to or involved in such communication.

"Wireless telephony" is to be taken as meaning the same as the above, except that the waves, variations, or impulses are radiated through space.

"Wire telegraphy" is the art of communicating messages by code signals (such as the Morse code, for example) by means of electricity, magnetism, or electromagnetic waves, variations or impulses conveyed or guided by wires, and includes all generating, measuring, switching, signaling, and other means or methods incidental to or involved in such communication, but does not include such devices as annunciators, elevator signals, engine-room telegraphs, etc.

"Wireless telegraphy" is to be taken as meaning the same as "wire telegraphy," except that the waves, variations, or impulses are radiated through space.

"Power purposes" are defined as including all prime movers and their accessories and all generation, use, measurement, control, and application of electricity for light, heat, and power, but does not include any communication purposes.

"Household devices" are electric or electrically operated devices designed primarily for domestic use, but do not include devices for communication purposes.

"Transoceanic" communication shall be understood to include all communication between two continents, or between a continent and an island more than 100 miles from its shores; islands within 100 miles of the shores of a continent being considered parts thereof. North America, including the Panama Canal Zone and all of Central America north thereof, is to be considered as one continent, and South America and all of Central America south of the Panama Canal Zone as another. This definition does not include communication between ships, or between ships and shore.

"The United States Government" shall be understood to include not only the Federal Government but also the governments of the Philippines, Porto Rico, and other Federal possessions, present or future, but shall not include any municipal, county, or State government.

"Train dispatching" is telegraphic or telephonic conveyance of train orders or operating information between the office of a train dispatcher or similar official and way stations, or other points along the line of way, or railway vehicles (with or without incidental provision for operating at will in an emergency and not automatically, signals, brakes, stops, and switches) for controlling the movements of trains or other automotive vehicles.

"Railway signaling" is the operation of signals, switches, brakes, stops, etc., controlling the movements of trains or other automotive vehicles controlled by or in accordance with train or vehicle movements or track conditions, including block signaling, cab signals, and train stops. It does not include train dispatching as above defined.

Any question arising as to the meaning or application of the foregoing definitions shall be settled by arbitration, as hereinafter provided.

Article II. The patents included in this agreement

The licenses provided for herein are granted and agreed to be granted under all patents and rights to or under patents of the United States now or hereafter during the term of this agreement owned or controlled by the parties hereto, and under all such patents hereafter issued upon inventions now or hereafter during said term so owned or controlled, and to the extent to which the parties have or may have the right to grant licenses, excepting as otherwise specified in connection with the several grants hereinafter contained, and excepting such patents and inventions as may be excluded from the operation of this agreement in the following manner:

A list of all United States patents under which it now holds transferable rights shall be furnished by each party to the other within 60 days from the date of this agreement. Such lists shall separately identify those patents and shall also include those applications as to which rights, if granted hereunder, would be restricted in scope or would involve continuing obligations not implied by law. Copies of all contracts creating such restrictions or obligations shall, upon request, be furnished by each party to the other. Thereupon, and within six months after the receipt of the lists to be furnished as aforesaid, each party may, in writing, advise the other as to the patents and applications described in such list, furnished by the other, which (or the patents to issue on which) it desires to exclude from this agreement; and no licenses are granted by this agreement under any patents so excluded. Each party shall thereafter, at such periods as may be agreed upon, or whenever requested by the other party, furnish to such other party like lists of subsequent patents and applications, and upon request therefor like copies of contracts; and each party may, within six months after the receipt of any such list, advise the other, in writing, as to the patents and applications described in such list which (or the patents to issue on which) it desires to exclude from this agreement, and no licenses are granted by this agreement under any patents so excluded.

Article III. Scope of licenses

All of the licenses herein granted are, unless otherwise expressed in connection with the several grants, licenses to use methods and processes, and to make, use, lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of apparatus, machines, devices, appliances, and systems embodying the inventions of the several patents in the fields in which the licenses are granted.

But no rights are granted to either party to manufacture, or to have manufactured, under patents under which it receives licenses hereunder, apparatus of the character at the time manufactured by the other party, except in factories owned or operated by one or the other of the parties hereto, or by their controlled companies, without the written consent of the party granting such licenses.

Article IV. Reservations and exceptions to which the licenses are subject

1. Each party reserves a nonexclusive right, under its own patents, to manufacture for and sell to the United States Government wireless devices, apparatus, and systems and to grant to that Government nonexclusive licenses to make or have made for it any wireless devices, apparatus, and systems; but such devices, apparatus, and systems are licensed to be sold to the Government only for governmental and not for commercial uses or for toll, and not for resale, and the nonexclusive licenses which may be granted to the Government shall similarly be limited.

2. Each party reserves, under its own patents, rights in the fields and for the uses with reference to which it receives licenses under patents of the other party.

3. No licenses are granted by either party with reference to the manufacture and sale of wire or cable for the transmission of electric power or telephone or telegraph currents.

4. No licenses are granted to the Telephone Co. for electric lamps or other lighting devices (except nonexclusive licenses with reference to telephone and telegraph switchboard signal lamps and ballast lamps), nor for the working of tungsten. But the Telephone Co. is licensed to use, in the fields for which it receives licenses hereunder, tungsten purchased from the General Co., or from others having the right to make and sell tungsten, and to make, use, sell, or lease (for such fields only), devices embodying such tungsten. The General Co. agrees to sell and deliver such tungsten for such purposes, in wire or other practical form to be specified by the purchaser from time to time, on the terms specified in Article X hereof.

The Telephone Co. agrees that on all sales of telephone and telegraph switchboard lamps or ballast lamps hereunder, to others than the associated companies of the Bell system, it will pay to the General Co. a royalty of 2 per cent on the net sales price thereof.

5. The licenses hereinafter granted to the Telephone Co., in so far as they cover rights to sell or lease "carrier current," wireless or vacuum tube devices for use on electric railroads, are limited to the sales or leases of said devices to the railroads; all sales of such devices to be installed on electric cars or electric locomotives, as a part of the original construction and equipment thereof, shall be through the General Co. only.

Article V. Licenses granted

Subject to the foregoing reservations, each party grants and agrees to grant to the other the following licenses in the following fields of use:

1. Government uses: Each party grants to the other the nonexclusive licenses to which all exclusive licenses herein granted are subject, to make any and all wireless apparatus and systems for and to sell the same to the United States Government, but only for governmental and not for commercial or toll uses and not for resale.

2. Wireless telegraphy: (a) The General Co. grants to the Telephone Co. nonexclusive licenses in the field of wireless telegraphy for its own communication or for purposes of convenience or to save expense in connection with its commercial operation of wire telegraph and wire and wireless telephone systems, but not for profit or for transmission of messages for the public.

(b) Subject to the foregoing, the Telephone Co. grants to the General Co. exclusive licenses in the field of wireless telegraphy.

3. Wire telegraphy: (a) The Telephone Co. grants to the General Co. nonexclusive licenses to make for its own operation and to operate wire telegraph systems, other than transoceanic; but no licenses are granted with reference to operation on lines leased to others than parties hereto or their subsidiary companies to which rights hereunder may be extended in accordance with subdivision (b) of section 3 of Article VI; and no licenses are granted with reference to transoceanic wire telegraphy.

(b) Subject to the foregoing, the General Co. grants to the Telephone Co. exclusive licenses in the field of wire telegraphy on land, and over ocean cables not more than 100 miles in length, and between the main body of the United States and Cuba; but no licenses are granted with reference to other transoceanic wire telegraphy.

4. Wireless telephony: (a) The Telephone Co. grants to the General Co. nonexclusive licenses in the field of wireless telephony for its own communication or for purposes of convenience, or to save expense in connection with its commercial operation of wireless telegraph systems, but not for profit or for transmission of messages for the public.

(b) The Telephone Co. grants to the General Co. licenses (exclusive, except that the Telephone Co. reserves exclusive rights for the uses and to the extent specified in subdivision c of this section 4) in the field of transoceanic wireless telephony, such licenses being limited, so far as concerns service on this continent for the public or for others than the General Co., to rendering such service through only the Telephone Co.'s wire or wireless telephone systems, such limitation to exist so long as the Telephone Co. remains in a position to and does supply that service. The General Co. is, however, licensed to bring transoceanic wireless telephone messages by wire telephony to, and transmit them from, a central or transfer point at a distance from its wireless stations (one such point for each pair of transoceanic stations) and the Telephone Co. agrees that at such point it will establish communication with its system, but the Telephone Co. shall not be required to accept any such point more than 5 miles from the nearest telephone central exchange of the Bell system. All service for the public shall be through the Telephone Co.'s system, and shall be advertised as service of the Telephone Co. through stations of the General Co. when and so long as the General Co. maintains facilities for the transoceanic wireless telephone service.

Joint through rates and the division of rates shall be agreed upon, it being agreed in principle that the General Co. is entitled to its reasonable tolls between the central or transfer point and the distant country (including the amount, if any, paid to the foreign company with which communication is had), and that the Telephone Co. is entitled to its reasonable tolls between the central or transfer point and the destination or sending point in the United States.

(c) The General Co. grants to the Telephone Co. licenses (exclusive, except that the General Co. reserves exclusive rights for the uses and to the extent specified in foregoing subdivision b) in the field of transoceanic wireless telephony, such licenses being limited, so far as concerns service for the public or for others than the Telephone Co., to rendering such service through only the General Co.'s systems for transoceanic communication. But if and so long as the General Co. is not prepared to and does not remain in a position to and does not supply such service, the Telephone Co. may establish wireless stations for rendering such service, after giving the General Co. reasonable notice and opportunity to do so, and shall have the right to continue to render such service through all such stations established by it except in so far as the General Co. shall elect to cooperate in rendering such service, or any portion thereof, in which event the General Co. shall take over those stations, or such of them as it shall elect, at the then cost of reproduction less depreciation. While the transoceanic service is being rendered through the General Co.'s stations, the advertising and the division of rates shall be as provided in foregoing subdivision b of this section 4.

(d) The Telephone Co. grants to the General Co.: (1) Exclusive licenses to make, use, lease, and sell wireless telephone apparatus and systems for communication by and between airplanes, airships, ships, and other automotive devices, except railways, vehicles. The General Co. is granted nonexclusive licenses to establish transmitting and receiving stations for communication with the foregoing, but is given no right to connect with any public-service telephone system. The Telephone Co. is licensed, but is under no obligation to establish or maintain means by which such wireless telephone communication may be had with and through the Telephone Co.'s telephone system, and the Telephone Co. is under no obligation to permit such communication. If, however, the Telephone Co. shall establish, maintain, or permit such wireless telephone communication through stations of third parties, other than the United States Government, it shall do the same with respect to the General Co.'s stations on at least as favorable terms, including distribution of tolls, and engineering requirements. In case at any time the General Co. has established such a station as is referred to in this paragraph, and the Telephone Co. shall elect to cooperate or render such wireless service in any substantial part of the same territory, it shall purchase the said station of the General Co. at the then cost of reproduction less depreciation.

(2) Nonexclusive licenses to establish and maintain transmitting stations for transmitting or broadcasting news, music, and entertainment from a transmitting station to outlying points, and licenses to make, use, sell, and lease wireless-telephone receiving apparatus for the reception of such news, music, and entertainment so broadcast. For the protection of the General Co. under the license which it receives in this paragraph, it is agreed that the Telephone Co. has no license under this agreement to make, lease, or sell wireless-telephone receiving apparatus except as part of or for direct use in connection with transmitting apparatus made by it; and for the protection of the Telephone Co. under the licenses hereinbelow granted to it, it is agreed that the General Co. has no license to equip wireless-telephone receiving apparatus sold under this paragraph with transmitting apparatus, or to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of transmitting apparatus for use in connection with receiving apparatus sold under this paragraph.

(3) Exclusive license to make, use, lease, and sell all wireless-telephone apparatus for amateur purposes.

(4) Exclusive licenses to make, use, lease, and sell all wireless-telephone apparatus (but not for public service) where the business use thereof is incidental (as, for example, for farmers), or where at least one of the stations is portable and is intended to be moved from place to place (as, for example, in lumbering operations), or where such wireless apparatus brings communication to new points not at the time served by the Telephone Co.

(5) Reserving to itself an exclusive license to make, use, sell, and lease all wireless-telephone apparatus to electric light, electric power, and electric traction companies for connection with wire or wireless public-service telephone communication systems and receiving from the General Co. a similar exclusive license of the same scope under the General Co.'s patents, the Telephone Co. grants to the General Co. exclusive licenses to make, use, sell, and lease all wireless-telephone apparatus for electric light, electric power, and electric traction companies, but only for the use of such companies and not for the use of the public, nor for toll, nor for the operation of a selective train-dispatching system, and not for connection with any public-service telephone system.

(e) The General Co. grants to the Telephone Co., (1) subject only to subdivisions (a), (b), and (c) and paragraph (1) of subdivision (d) of this section, exclusive licenses in the field of wireless telephony to make, use, lease, and sell all wireless-telephone apparatus connected to or operated as a part of a public-service telephone communication system, whether wire or wireless.

(2) Subject to all of the foregoing, exclusive licenses in the field of wireless telephony to make, use, and sell for all business, public service, and commercial uses of such character as might be served by leased wires, as, for example, brokers' offices, business houses, manufacturing plants, gas and water companies, mining companies, etc.

(f) It is further agreed that in the fields of the exclusive licenses granted by paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) of section (d) above and in paragraph (2) of section (e) above, and for any wireless-telephone uses not specified herein, each party will on application of the other party grant a license to the other party on reasonable terms for each specific installation for which such other party desires to manufacture and dispose of such wireless-telephone apparatus; the license fee to be fixed with due regard to the benefits derived by the licensee and the disadvantages suffered by the licensor in the granting of such license.

5. Wire telephony: (a) The Telephone Co. grants to the General Co. licenses (exclusive, except that the Telephone Co. reserves nonexclusive rights) to make and sell (but not to lease) to electric light, electric power, and electric traction companies apparatus for so-called carrier-current telephone communication over wires, or partly over wires and partly across wireless gaps, but in each instance only for the use of such companies and not for the use of public, nor for toll, nor for operation of a selective train-dispatching system, and not for connection with any public-service telephone system.

(b) Subject to the foregoing, the General Co. grants to the Telephone Co. exclusive licenses in the field of wire telephony on land, and over cables not more than 100 miles in length, and between the main body of the United States and Cuba; licenses are granted by each party to the other with reference to other transoceanic wire telephony, such licenses being of the character and subject to the limitations and provisions expressed in foregoing subdivisions (b) and (c) of section 4 with reference to transoceanic wireless telephony.

6. Power purposes and household devices: The Telephone Co. grants to the General Co. exclusive licenses in the fields of power purposes, household devices, and distance actuation and control by wireless for other than communicable purposes. This grant is made with a reservation in so far as concerns patents for inventions relating to business of the general character which any controlled company of the Telephone Co. now conducts as jobber, and any extensions of that business along similar lines. With reference to such patents (except those covering articles of the general character which such company now purchases from the General Co., or its affiliated companies, or sells as agent for the same), the Telephone Co. reserves under its own patents (but is granted no license under the patents of the General Co.) the nonexclusive right for such controlled companies to make apparatus and devices embodying the inventions of said patents, or have them made for them, and to sell them in the said jobbing business.

7. Railroad signaling, X-ray devices, radio goniometry: The Telephone Co. grants to the General Co. exclusive licenses in the fields of railroad signaling (other than train dispatching), X-ray devices and appliances associated therewith, and radio goniometry.

8. Train dispatching: Subject to the foregoing, the General Co grants to the Telephone Co. exclusive licenses in the field of train dispatching.

9. Submarine signaling, scientific and therapeutic apparatus, shop expedients, and other applications: Each party grants to the other nonexclusive licenses in the following fields:

Submarine signaling.

Scientific apparatus for use of laboratories, colleges, and scientific societies, as distinguished from commercial use.

Wireless apparatus for use of professional investigators (as distinguished from amateurs) for experimental purpose only.

Therapeutic apparatus other than X-ray devices and appliances.

Shop tools, appliances, and processes, but only for the production of apparatus and devices embodying inventions which the grantee is licensed to make and use hereunder.

All applications not herein otherwise specified, of inventions pertaining or applicable to or to the use of vacuum tubes, and to generating (directly or from other currents), modifying, amplifying, transmitting, or receiving electromagnetic waves, variations, or impulses for other than power purposes, including instruments and their records for producing music and other sounds for amusement or artistic purposes, with the right to transmit the sound by wire telephony throughout a building.

Article VI. Provisions with reference to foregoing licenses

1. Whenever licenses granted under the terms of this agreement are based upon rights requiring the payment of royalties or other deferred payments, measured by the use made of the invention, the party accepting such licenses shall make payments measured by its use of the invention at the same rate and upon the same terms as those agreed to be made by the party originally acquiring the rights.

2. The foregoing licenses shall continue, respectively, for the terms of the several patents issued or to be issued under which they are granted and agreed to be granted, and shall not be limited by the term of this agreement.

3. (a) The Telephone Co. may grant sublicenses under its standard form of license contract (a copy of which is now delivered to the General Co.) to such operating companies as are now or may from time to time be operating under such form of contract. The provisions of this subdivision (a) shall apply to any changed form of license contract provided that, as changed, it grants rights in the fields of the General Co. no broader than those granted by the present form.

(b) Subject to the foregoing subdivision (a), each party hereto may assign or grant sublicenses under any of the rights granted hereunder, provided that in each instance the assent of the other party is first obtained.

(c) No disposition by either party of rights hereunder acquired by it shall relieve such party of any of its obligations under this agreement or restrict the rights of the parties hereto in operating under or modifying this agreement.

4. Each party agrees that, so far as it is enabled so to do, it will, in disposing of devices embodying inventions pertaining or applicable to vacuum tubes or to generating, modifying, amplifying, transmitting, or receiving electromagnetic waves, or other devices or material, the unrestricted sale of which would deprive the other party of rights to which it is entitled hereunder, use such precautions by contracts, restricted licenses, or otherwise as may be necessary or advisable in order to prevent its customers or others from acquiring (by acquisition of devices from it or otherwise) licenses to use the same which the party disposing thereof has no right to grant.

5. The admission of validity implied in the acceptance of licenses hereunder is limited to the field for which such licenses exist.

6. One or the other of the parties hereto having already parted with rights under its inventions, present and future, in most of the foreign countries, it is agreed that the parties will cooperate with each other and with their foreign affiliated companies who may desire licenses under the inventions of the other party, to the end that exchanges of licenses may be effected in such countries. No licenses under foreign patents are now granted or are to be implied; but the licenses herein granted under United States patents include the right to manufacture and sell for uses abroad. Each party agrees not to export to any country in which the other party has an affiliated company, apparatus purchased from such other party which such other party could not itself so export, in view of existing contract obligations, after notice of such obligations and without first securing a written waiver thereof.

7. Each party represents that in its best judgment it has no outstanding obligations which would prevent it from entering into the agreements and from granting the licenses herein expressed. If, however, it is found that there are such conflicting obligations, the present agreement is made subject to the right to fulfill those obligations.

Article VII. Interferences

The parties agree to use reasonable endeavors to settle, without litigation, interferences now pending or which may arise involving inventions within the scope of this agreement.

Article VIII. Acquisition of patent rights

Neither party shall acquire from others rights to or under United States patents or inventions, or rights to use secret processes, applicable to the fields of the other party, of such limited character that the other party does not, by the operation of this agreement, receive licenses thereunder of the scope and within the respective fields herein set forth, unless the party proposing to acquire such rights shall first have given the other party an opportunity to be represented in the negotiations and thereby to acquire rights for its field.

Article IX. Cooperation and exchange of information

1. Each party agrees that it will, from time to time during the term of this agreement, freely permit the other to have all information in its possession which it may have a right to disclose with reference to devices, apparatus, systems, or methods applicable to the uses of the other party as herein defined, it being agreed that any secret process so disclosed shall be maintained in secrecy by the party to whom it is disclosed. Blue prints, etc., shall be furnished at the cost of preparing the same. Each party shall at all reasonable times have access (through a reasonably limited number of accredited representatives who are regular employees under obligation to assign inventions to their employer), to the laboratories, factories, and wireless stations of the other, to the end that development work may be expedited and rendered the more effective.

Each party shall, with reference to inventions owned or controlled by it and under which the other party is entitled to rights hereunder, endeavor to obtain or permit and aid the other to obtain proper patents thereon.

2. Publicity with reference to transoceanic telephony shall be joint, and shall recognize that the parties hereto, or their associates, have contributed equally to such work.

Engineering representatives shall be assigned by each of the parties to cooperate in the carrying out of the further work necessary for the development of transoceanic wireless telephony. In case transoceanic telephone service is given from the plant of the Telephone Co. through the stations of the General Co., these engineering representatives shall cooperate in the design of the apparatus and systems for this service, it being recognized that such systems and apparatus must be so designed as properly to fit in with the systems of the General and Telephone Cos., respectively.

Each party shall afford the engineering representatives of the other the fullest possible facilities consistent with the reasonable operation of the other for experimenting and for developing and testing apparatus and systems for use in transoceanic telephony, and each shall at all times be given such an opportunity to make such tests, experiments, and observations in the transoceanic stations of the other as do not conflict with the service then being rendered by such stations, and each party shall afford to the other such facilities for test, experimentation, and observation on ships as it may be able to extend.

3. In the operation of wireless and "carrier-current" communication, the parties shall cooperate to the end that interference with the operations of either party, due to the operations of the other, shall be minimized, it being recognized that the available wave lengths are limited.

Article X. Purchases as between parties

It is recognized that each party has and will normally continue to have facilities for manufacturing certain apparatus or parts thereof which may be required by the other party under its licenses hereunder, and that a duplication of such facilities may be wasteful and uneconomical. Each party agrees that it will upon request manufacture for and sell and deliver to the other, with reasonable business promptness, on receipt of orders from time to time, and at favorable prices not to exceed those charged to others (except controlled companies) purchasing in like quantities for use in the United States, such apparatus and parts as the former is engaged in manufacturing from time to time and as the latter may desire for use under the licenses granted by this agreement.

Article XI. Litigation

Each party shall have the exclusive right to bring suits for infringement in the fields in which its licenses are herein expressed as exclusive (and the General Co. may bring suits for infringement in the field of transoceanic wire and wireless telephony) joining in any such suit the patent owner or the party which has acquired from the patent owner the right to sue thereunder.

Neither party shall bring suit for infringement of patents against the other party, or against the distributors and jobbing houses owned by or affiliated with either party, because of sales by such party, or by its (or its controlled companies') distributors or jobbing houses, or devices made, in the United States of America, by others than the parties hereto, it being agreed that the remedy in case of any such infringement shall be only by suit against the manufacturer of those devices.

Article XII. Releases

Each party reserves to itself the right to deal with the United States Government with reference to settlement for past use of its inventions in telephone and telegraph systems and apparatus. Subject to the foregoing, each party releases the other and the vendees and users of apparatus or systems made by it, from all claims growing out of past infringement of patents, by reason of the manufacture, use, and sale of such apparatus and systems by the other party, and its resale or use by such vendees and users.

Article XIII. Arbitration

In case of any differences under this agreement (except in respect of interferences or priority of rights to inventions or patents) shall arise which the parties are unable to adjust between themselves, either party may, by notice in writing served on the other, designate one arbitrator and call upon the other to designate a second arbitrator within 30 days after the receipt of such notice; and the party receiving such notice agrees so to designate an arbitrator. The two arbitrators so designated shall promptly select a third arbitrator. The matter in dispute shall be submitted to the three arbitrators so selected, and the parties agree that the concurring decision of any two of the above-mentioned three arbitrators shall be final and binding upon them. Each party shall pay its own expenses, including the fees of its arbitrator, and the fees and expenses of the third arbitrator shall be paid one-half by each party.

Article XIV. Termination of agreement

(a) This agreement may, at any time, be terminated by mutual consent of the parties, in which event all licenses granted herein up to the date of such termination shall become nonexclusive and shall continue to the ends of the terms of the patents.

(b) Unless previously terminated, as above provided, the duration of this agreement shall be 10 years from the date hereof, but shall automatically continue in force thereafter until canceled on three years' written notice given, after the expiration of said 10 years' period, by one party to the other party.

(c) Upon any termination of this agreement (except under the provisions of subdivision (a) of this article 14) all licenses, expressed herein as exclusive, shall remain exclusive during the life of the several patents.

Article XV. Further assurances

The parties agree to execute and deliver such further instruments as may reasonably be necessary for carrying out the provisions and purposes of this agreement.

Article XVI. Successors

This agreement is binding upon and shall inure to the benefit of each of the parties hereto and their several successors in business, except that either party may transfer or dispose of any part or parts of its business, not involving the grant of any licenses under this agreement, and in such case this agreement shall not be binding upon or inure to the benefit of the successor to that part of the business so transferred.

In witness whereof, the parties hereto have caused this instrument to be executed on the day and year first above written, by their proper officers thereunto duly authorized.

EXHIBIT H.—LICENSE AGREEMENT—RADIO CORPORATION OF AMERICA AND UNITED FRUIT CO.

Agreement made this 7th day of March, 1921, by and between Radio Corporation of America, a corporation of the State of Delaware (hereinafter called the Radio Corporation), and United Fruit Co., a corporation of the State of New Jersey (hereinafter called the Fruit Co.)

Witnesseth that—

Whereas the Fruit Co., either itself or through its subsidiary companies, one of which is the Tropical Radio Telegraph Co., now owns and operates certain stations for the transmission and receipt of wireless telegraphic communication, including among others a station at Santa Marta, Colombia, a station at Swan Island, stations in Costa Rica, Panama, Nicaragua, and Honduras, a dismantled station in Cuba, and stations at New Orleans and Burrwood, La., and at Boston, Mass., certain of the apparatus and equipment for said stations at Santa Marta, Swan Island, and New Orleans having been furnished by Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. of America, under a contract between said Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. of America and the Fruit Co., dated May 7, 1912, as amended by a contract between the same parties dated February 11, 1915, which contracts were assigned by said Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. of America to the Radio Corporation; and

Whereas the Radio Corporation, or certain companies in which the Radio Corporation is a stockholder, to wit: The Pan-American Wireless Telegraph & Telephone Co., a corporation of Delaware, and the South American Radio Corporation, a corporation of Delaware, are, or may be, engaged in the business of wireless communication in South America and the United States, and elsewhere; and

Whereas the Radio Corporation owns, or may own, certain patents and patent rights in Colombia, Costa Rica, Panama, Nicaragua, Honduras, Guatemala, Cuba, and the United States, having to do with wireless communication and apparatus or devices for use therein; and

Whereas the Fruit Co. or its subsidiaries desires to improve and enlarge said stations controlled and operated by them, and may desire to build a station at or near Miami, Fla., and may desire to build additional stations in the territory comprising Costa Rica, Panama (except the Canal Zone), Nicaragua, Honduras (not including British Honduras), Guatemala, and Swan Island, which territory is hereinafter referred to as the "Fruit Co. territory," as well as in Colombia, Cuba, and the Panama Canal Zone, and may desire to purchase from the Radio Corporation wireless apparatus for use in said stations and on ships, and desires to be licensed under said patent and patent rights;

Now, therefore, in consideration of $1 and other valuable considerations by each party to the other in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and in consideration of the premises and of the mutual covenants herein contained, it is agreed as follows:

1. The Radio Corporation hereby grants to the Fruit Co. a license to use the inventions covered by any and all patents of the United States, and of any and all countries included within said Fruit Co. territory, and of Colombia and Cuba, which it now owns or controls, or may in future own or control, or under which it now has or may in future have the right to grant a license, having to do with wireless communication, or with apparatus or devices for use in connection therewith, this license being, however, limited to include only uses of the patented inventions for the following purposes, namely:

(a) Wireless telegraphic communication from station to station within and between the Fruit Co. territory, Colombia, Cuba, and the Panama Canal Zone;

(b) Wireless telegraphic communication between stations in the Fruit Co. territory, Colombia, Cuba, or the Panama Canal Zone, and said stations in the United States at New Orleans and Burrwood, La., at Miami, Fla., or vicinity, and Boston, Mass.; provided, however, that no license is granted for the transmission or receipt of commercial communications between Cuba and said stations in the United States, the rights hereby granted for communication between Cuba and said stations in the United States being limited to communications having to do with the business of the Fruit Co., or its subsidiaries; and provided further, that said station at Boston shall be used only for coastal communications or for receiving messages having to do with the business of the Fruit Co., or of its subsidiaries, and not commercial messages; and provided further, that messages destined to points in the United States may be transmitted to destination from said stations in the United States only through the facilities of the Radio Corporation or by wire, and that messages from points in the United States may be transmitted to said stations in the United States only through the facilities of the Radio Corporation or by wire, it being agreed that the Fruit Co. will not enter into any joint traffic arrangements with any other company than the Radio Corporation for forwarding such messages between said stations in the United States and other points in the United States, without consent of the Radio Corporation;

(c) Wireless telegraphic communication between said stations in the United States for messages having to do only with the business of the Fruit Co., or its subsidiaries, and not for commercial business, said station at Boston being licensed, as before noted, only to receive and not to transmit such messages;

(d) Shore to ship and ship to shore wireless telegraphic communication between stations in the Fruit Co. territory, Colombia, Cuba, or Panama Canal Zone, and ships;

(e) Shore to ship and ship to shore wireless telegraphic communication between said stations at New Orleans, Miami or vicinity, Boston or Burrwood, and ships;

(f) Wireless telegraphic communication (but only for messages originating in or destined to points in the Fruit Co. territory, Colombia, Cuba, or the Panama Canal Zone) between stations in the Fruit Co. territory, Colombia, Cuba, or the Panama Canal Zone, and stations of other parties located on islands adjoining the Caribbean Sea, or in any country in Central America (including Mexico), or South America, in which country or island service is not at the time being provided by stations of the Radio Corporation, the Pan-American Wireless Telegraph & Telephone Co., or the South American Radio Corporation or their subsidiaries or associated companies; no license, however, being hereby granted to such stations of other parties. Until further notice by the Radio Corporation the Fruit Co. may use said stations at New Orleans, Burrwood, and Miami, or vicinity, for the purpose of relaying the communications provided for in this clause;

(g) Wireless telegraphic communication between stations in the Fruit Co. territory, Colombia, Cuba, or the Panama Canal Zone, and any stations outside said Fruit Co. territory, Colombia, Cuba, and the Panama Canal Zone, which may be now or hereafter operated by the Radio Corporation, the Pan-American Wireless Telegraph & Telephone Co., or the South American Radio Corporation, or their subsidiaries, under traffic arrangements to be agreed upon with said companies;

(h) Wireless telegraphic communication between any station which the Fruit Co. is above authorized to establish and (1) government stations of the United States or any foreign country on government business; (2) stations of the Fruit Co. or its subsidiaries in parts of the world not covered by this license, such communications to be, however, only for messages having to do with the business of the Fruit Co. or its subsidiaries, and not commercial business, and no license being hereby granted to the Fruit Co. or its subsidiaries for such stations in other parts of the world; or (3) any other stations which the Radio Corporation, the Pan-American Wireless Telegraph & Telephone Co., or the South American Radio Corporation may from time to time allow the Fruit Co. stations to communicate with;

(i) Wireless telephonic communication for the same purposes, in the same territory, and subject to the same limitations as the wireless telegraphic communications above licensed; provided, however, that no license is granted for wireless telephonic communication in the United States or its possessions;

(j) Wireless telegraphic or telephonic installations on ships of United States registry belonging to the Fruit Co. or its subsidiaries;

The license hereby granted is exclusive for all wireless communication purposes within the Fruit Co. territory as above defined, except that the Radio Corporation reserves the right to build and operate stations in the Fruit Co. territory for relaying messages between points outside that territory; and that, further, if in the carrying out of its general program the Radio Corporation desires that any station of any size or nature be built and operated in the Fruit Co. territory, and if the Fruit Co. does not build and operate such station within a reasonable time after request by the Radio Corporation, the Radio Corporation reserves the right itself to build and operate such station.

Except as aforesaid, the license herein granted to the Fruit Co. is nonexclusive.

2. The Fruit Co. grants to the Radio Corporation a license to make or have made, to use and sell, for wireless or wire communication, under any patents of any country, having to do with wireless or wire communication or with apparatus or devices for use in connection therewith, which it may now or hereafter own or control or under which it may now or hereafter have the right to grant a license. This license is exclusive, except that the Fruit Co. reserves the right to license the Wireless Specialty Apparatus Co. to make, use, and sell under such patents, and reserves for itself and its subsidiaries rights thereunder corresponding in all respects to the rights which it hereby acquires under the patents of the Radio Corporation, and also the right to manufacture and use under such patents in any part of the world for communications having to do with the business of the Fruit Co. and its subsidiaries, as well as the right to make and sell to the Government of the United States of America for Government uses. The Fruit Co. agrees to obtain for the Radio Corporation a license under the patents of the Tropical Radio Telegraph Co. and of any subsidiary company to which it may extend any of the rights which it acquires hereunder, for all uses and purposes having to do with wireless or wire communication or with devices or apparatus for use in connection therewith, similar in scope to the license which the Fruit Co. hereby grants to the Radio Corporation and subject to similar reservations.

3. The Fruit Co. agrees:

(a) That it will not establish nor operate stations for wireless communication, outside of the Fruit Co. territory, Colombia, Cuba, and the Panama Canal Zone, except said stations at New Orleans, Boston, Burrwood, and Miami or vicinity;

(b) That it will not receive or transmit wireless communications except as provided in article 1 hereof, and that it will not engage in wireless communication, whether by the use of patented apparatus, devices, or methods, or of apparatus, devices, or methods not covered by patents, except in the territory and for the purposes and subject to the limitations set forth in article 1: Provided, however, That nothing in this contract contained shall prevent the Fruit Co. or its subsidiaries from establishing or operating in any part of the world outside of the United States stations for wireless communications having to do only with the business of the Fruit Co. and its subsidiaries, and not for the transaction of commercial business, the Fruit Co. agreeing not to use any such stations outside the territory in which it is licensed to operate hereunder for commercial business.

(c) That in transmitting messages destined to parts of the world outside of the territory in which it is licensed to operate, it will, wherever practicable, use, for transmission of such messages outside of such territory, the facilities of the Radio Corporation, the Pan American Wireless Telegraph & Telephone Co., or the South American Radio Corporation or their subsidiaries or associated companies: And provided further, That the Fruit Co. shall be free to accept messages for delivery to the territory in which it is licensed to operate as above set forth, whenever presented by third parties at its various stations or offices; but the Fruit Co. shall not make joint traffic arrangements with any other company than the Radio Corporation, the Pan American Wireless Telegraph & Telephone Co., or the South American Radio Corporation or their subsidiaries or associated companies regarding messages to or from territory in which said companies maintain a service that is practicably available to the stations of the Fruit Co. and its subsidiaries: And provided further, That the Fruit Co. shall not without the consent of the Radio Corporation handle messages between points in South America (outside of Colombia) and the United States of America (or routed through the United States of America) where the Radio Corporation or its subsidiary or associated companies can offer such service through other routes.

(d) That it will use its influence and power of control, so far as it is lawful and proper, to prevent any of its subsidiary or affiliated companies from doing what it is not itself free to do hereunder.

4. The Radio Corporation agrees—

(a) That it will not establish or operate stations in the Fruit Co. territory for wireless communication except for the purpose of relaying messages between points outside that territory, nor aid others in so doing, nor sell patented radio apparatus for use in such territory except through the Fruit Co. or with its consent: Provided, however, That if, in carrying out of its general program, the Radio Corporation desires that any station of any size or nature be built in the Fruit Co. territory and operated in conjunction with the Radio Corporation system, and the Fruit Co. does not build that station within a reasonable time after a request by the Radio Corporation, the Radio Corporation may build and operate such station:

(b) That except in the case specified in the last preceding paragraph, it will deliver messages received by it, destined to points in the Fruit Co. territory, only to the Fruit Co. or its subsidiaries for transmission to destination.

(c) That it will use its influence and power of control so far as lawful and proper to prevent any of its subsidiary or affiliated companies (other than the South American Radio Corporation and the Pan American Wireless Telegraph & Telephone Co., which are in contract relations with the Fruit Co.) from doing what it itself is not free to do hereunder.

5. Each party agrees to receive from the other and to retransmit to destination all messages delivered to it by the other party, destined for points in the territory served by it, in accordance with joint traffic arrangements to be agreed upon to provide for an equitable distribution of tolls. In the event that the parties shall be unable to agree upon such joint traffic arrangements the terms thereof shall be settled by a board of three arbitrators, one to be named by each of the parties and the third to be selected by said two arbitrators, and the parties agree to abide by the decision of a majority of such arbitrators. It is understood that neither party shall be responsible for the transmission of messages by connecting carriers to whom it delivers such messages.

6. The Fruit Co. is now under contract obligation to relay messages between British Government stations in British Honduras and Jamaica, using Swan Island as their lay point. The Fruit Co. will cancel said contract as soon as it may legally do so, if and when the Radio Corporation so requests.

7. The Radio Corporation agrees that it or the South American Radio Corporation, one or both, will sell to the Fruit Co. and its subsidiaries, so far as they have the right to do so, any and all apparatus or devices, of types which may be from time to time manufactured by or for, and used by, or leased or sold to other by the Radio Corporation, for wireless telegraphic or telephonic communication, and which may be ordered by the Fruit Co. or its subsidiaries, but only for use in accordance with the terms of this agreement at prices equal to the manufacturing cost thereof to or price paid therefor by the Radio Corporation or South American Radio Corporation plus a profit of 20 per cent except in the case of apparatus for use either as new equipment or as repair or spare parts, at said stations at Santa Marta, Swan Island, and New Orleans, in which case the profit shall be 10 per cent. And the Radio Corporation agrees that any such apparatus or devices which it may supply to the South American Radio Corporation for sale to the Fruit Co. and subsidiaries hereunder shall be sold by it at cost, so that the Fruit Co. shall not have to pay profit thereon to both companies. And the Fruit Co. and its subsidiaries shall have the right, at their option, to lease from the Radio Corporation any such apparatus or devices for use in accordance with the terms of this agreement on the same terms offered to others by the Radio Corporation; and the Radio Corporation agrees to make delivery of all such apparatus or devices as may be ordered by the Fruit Co. or its subsidaries for the said purposes, with reasonable promptness. The Fruit Co. agrees to procure apparatus and devices embodying, or for use in radio apparatus embodying, the inventions of patents under which it is licensed by the Radio Corporation hereunder, or any of them, from the Radio Corporation only, so long as the Radio Corporation is ready and able to supply the same with reasonable promptness; except that it shall have the right at its option to purchase wave meters, radio compasses, goniometers, and similar special devices and accessories, ship sets and receiving sets, as well as transmitting sets up to 5-kilowatt power input, and parts and accessories for the above (but not "valves"), from the Wireless Specialty Apparatus Co. The Radio Corporation will give to the Fruit Co. or its subsidiaries purchasing apparatus from the Radio Corporation under this contract a patent guarantee with all sales of apparatus hereunder, but only with respect to United States patents, in the following form, to wit:

"The Radio Corporation agrees that it will at its own expense defend all suits or proceedings instituted against the purchaser and pay any award of damages assessed against the purchaser in such suits or proceedings, in so far as the same are based on any claim that the said apparatus or any part thereof constitutes an infringement of any patent of the United States, provided the purchaser gives to the company immediate notice in writing of the institution of the suit or proceedings and permits the company through its counsel to defend the same and gives the company all needed information, assistance, and authority to enable the company so to do. In case such apparatus is in such suit held to constitute infringement and its use is enjoined, the company, if unable within a reasonable time to secure for the purchaser the right to continue using said apparatus by suspension of the injunction, by procuring for the purchaser a license, or otherwise, will, at its own expense, either replace such apparatus with noninfringing apparatus or modify it so that it becomes noninfringing, or remove the said enjoined apparatus and refund the sum paid therefor."

8. The Fruit Co. agrees, for itself and its subsidiaries, that so far as it may sell or lease to others than its subsidiaries hereunder radio apparatus in or for use in the Fruit Co. territory as above defined, whether such apparatus be purchased from the Wireless Specialty Apparatus Co. or from the Radio Corporation, it will pay on all such apparatus covered by patents of the United States of America or of the country in question, under which it is licensed hereunder by the Radio Corporation, a royalty of 20 per cent of the net selling price of such apparatus (or such lower royalty as may be agreed upon in special cases before the sale is made), and further agrees to report such sales to the Radio Corporation in writing and pay the royalties due with respect thereto within one month after the expiration of the quarter in which such sale is made.

9. The Fruit Co. agrees to pay forthwith to the Radio Corporation $36,910.53 in settlement of unpaid portions of the purchase price for said stations at Santa Marta, Swan Island, and New Orleans, under said contracts of May 7, 1912, and February 11, 1915, and discharges the Radio Corporation from any further obligation under said contracts, except under clause 9 of said contract of May 7, 1912, relating to indemnity against patent litigation, and the Radio Corporation agrees to accept said sum in full settlement of all liability on the part of the Fruit Co. under said contracts and to discharge the Fruit Co. from any further liability thereunder. It is expressly understood, however, that the license to use said stations and apparatus heretofore conferred by said contracts with the Marconi Co. of America is in no way abrogated or annulled, in so far as it relates to communications for the purposes and subject to the limitations provided in articles 1 and 3 of this agreement.

10. Each party will give the other the benefit, for the purposes of this agreement, not only of any and all new inventions pertaining to wireless communication or apparatus or devices therefor which it may acquire as aforesaid, but also of any and all engineering information and experience available to it, pertaining thereto, and will through its engineers aid and advise the other at any time, upon request of the other, as to apparatus, methods of communication, the construction and equipment of stations, and any other matters of value to the other in connection with its operations hereunder, to the end that each party's methods and apparatus may be at all times maintained in accordance with the highest standards known to the other party. Each party will reimburse the other for the cost of any engineering services rendered hereunder at its request, including salaries.

11. This agreement shall continue until January 1, 1945, at which date it shall expire, except that the licenses granted hereunder shall continue in effect, so far as any patents issued or applied for up to that date are concerned, until the expiration of such patents, respectively.

12. Each party hereby releases the other party from any claim or liability on account of past infringement of any patents or patent rights owned by it, except claims arising out of the manufacture and sale of apparatus sold to the United States Government, which claims are not hereby released or discharged, and the Fruit Co. agrees that the Tropical Radio Telegraph Co. will execute a similar mutual release with the Radio Corporation, which release the Radio Corporation agrees to execute.

13. Sublicenses hereunder may be granted by the Fruit Co. to any subsidiary company controlled by it, which shall agree to be bound by the terms hereof, any rights granted to such subsidiary company to continue, however, only so long as it continues to be controlled by the Fruit Co., but not otherwise, unless by mutual consent; and the Radio Corporation may grant licenses under the patents referred to in article 2 hereof, to the same extent as if said patents belonged to the Radio Corporation, subject, however, to the rights reserved hereunder; provided, also, that this contract may be assigned by either party to a successor to its entire business, provided such successor agrees to be bound thereby.

14. It is understood that the rights granted by each party to the other hereunder are only such rights as the party granting them now has, or shall in future have, the right to grant. Nothing herein contained shall require either party to do any act contrary to law or contrary to its franchises, or to omit to do any act required by law.

The Fruit Co. has received a copy of a contract between General Electric Co. and American Telephone & Telegraph Co., dated July 1, 1920, and a copy of the extension agreement between said companies, the Radio Corporation and the Western Electric Co., also dated July 1, 1920, and takes notice of the contents thereof.

In witness whereof Radio Corporation of America has caused its name to be signed and its corporate seal to be hereto affixed by E. J. Nally, its president, thereto duly authorized, and United Fruit Co. has caused its name to be signed and its corporate seal to be hereto affixed by Andrew W. Preston, its president, thereto duly authorized, on the date first above written, at New York City, N. Y.

LICENSE AGREEMENT—GENERAL ELECTRIC CO. AND WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC & MANUFACTURING CO.

Agreement made this 30th day of June, 1921, between the General Electric Co., a New York corporation (herein called the General Co.) and the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., a Pennsylvania corporation (herein called the Westinghouse Co.)

Witnesseth:

Whereas the General Co. is the owner of or has the right to grant and extend the licenses hereinafter agreed to be granted and extended under certain letters patent of the United States and various applications therefor, all of which relate to radio devices as herein defined, or to the manufacture thereof; and

Whereas the Westinghouse Co. is the owner of or has the right to grant and extend the licenses hereinafter agreed to be granted and extended under certain letters patent of the United States and various applications therefor, all of which relate to radio devices as hereinafter defined, or to the manufacture thereof; and

Whereas by a certain agreement, as evidenced by Exhibit A hereto attached, the General Co. has granted to the Radio Corporation of America, a Delaware corporation (herein called the Radio Corporation), certain rights to use and sell under all its patents, which agreement is not intended to be affected by this present agreement; and

Whereas by a certain agreement, evidenced by Exhibit D hereto attached, the Westinghouse Co. has granted to the International Radio Telegraph Co., a Delaware corporation (herein called the International Co.), certain of the rights to use and sell under all of its patents, and by certain agreements the Radio Corporation has secured from the International Co. the rights so granted to the International Co., which agreements are not intended to be affected by this present agreement; and

Whereas the parties hereto have in the past by other agreements granted to each other licenses and contracted in regard to patents, and it is not intended that such other agreements shall be affected by this agreement, or that any further patent agreements made between the parties shall be affected by this agreement, unless such later agreement shall expressly so state; and

Whereas the General Co. entered into certain agreements, dated July 1, 1920, with the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., a New York corporation (herein called the Telephone Co.), the Western Electric Co. (Inc.), a New York corporation (herein called the Western Co.), and the Radio Corporation whereby the General Co. secured from the Telephone and Western Cos. certain licenses which may be extended and whereby also it granted certain licenses to the Telephone and Western Cos., copies of which agreements are attached hereto as Exhibits B and C; and

Whereas by an agreement of even date herewith, as evidenced by Exhibits H and I hereto attached, the Telephone and Western Cos. have assented to the extension of licenses under its patents to the Westinghouse Co., and the Westinghouse Co. has granted certain licenses to the Telephone and Western Cos.; and

Whereas each of the parties hereto is desirous of acquiring from the other licenses under the said letters patent, and the patents to issue on said applications, and under other patents on radio devices to be acquired by the other as hereinafter specified.

Now, therefore, the parties hereto have agreed as follows:

Article I. Definitions

1. Radio purposes is defined as the transmission or reception of communications, telegraphic, telephonic, or other, by what are known as electromagnetic waves, but not by wire.

2. Radio devices are defined as comprising:

(a) Devices useful only in radio purposes.

(b) Devices especially adapted to radio purposes but capable of other uses such, for example, as the Alexanderson alternator with accessories or the pliotron, except where the same are sold licensed only for uses other than radio uses, in which case the same are not to be regarded as radio devices hereunder.

3. The expression "devices" shall include apparatus, devices, systems, connections, and methods.

4. X-ray purposes are defined as the generation, control, and application of X rays.

5. X-ray devices are defined as comprising all apparatus, devices, systems, connections, and methods in so far as they are used for X-ray purposes.

X-ray devices comprise:

(a) Devices used only for X-ray purposes.

(b) Devices especially adapted for X-ray purposes, but capable of other uses except when the same are licensed only for purposes other than X-ray purposes, in which case the same are not to be regarded as X-ray devices hereunder.

6. "Wire telephony" is the art of communicating or reproducing sound waves (created, directly or indirectly, by the voice or by musical instruments) by means of electricity, magnetism, or electromagnetic waves, variations, or impulses conveyed or guided by wires, and includes all generating, measuring, switching, signaling, and other means or methods incidental to or involved in such communication.

7. "Wireless telephony" is to be taken as meaning the same as the above, except that the waves, variations, or impulses are radiated through space.

8. "Wire telegraphy" is the art of communicating messages by code signals (such as the Morse code, for example) by means of electricity, magnetism, or electromagnetic waves, variations, or impulses conveyed or guided by wires, and includes all generating, measuring, switching, signaling, and other means or methods incidental to or involved in such communication, but does not include such devices as annunciators, elevator signals, engine-room telegraphs, etc.

9. "Wireless telegraphy" is to be taken as meaning the same as "wire telegraphy" except that the waves, variations, or impulses are radiated through space.

10. "Power purposes" are defined as including all prime movers and their accessories, and all generation, use, measurement, control, and application of electricity for light, heat, and power, but does not include any communication purposes.

11. "Household devices" are electric or electrically operated devices designated primarily for domestic use, but do not include devices for communication purposes.

12. "The United States Government" shall be understood to include not only the Federal Government but also the governments of the Philippines, Porto Rico, and other Federal possessions, present or future; but shall not include any municipal, county, or State government.

13. "Transoceanic" communication shall be understood to include all communication between two continents, or between a continent and an island more than 100 miles from its shores, islands within 100 miles of the shores of a continent being considered parts thereof, North America, including the Panama Canal Zone and all of Central America north thereof, is to be considered as one continent, and South America and all of Central America south of the Panama Canal as another. This definition does not include communication between ships or between ships and shore.

14. "Train dispatching" is telegraphic or telephonic conveyance of train orders or operating information between the office of a train dispatcher or similar official and way stations, or other points along the line of way, or railway vehicles (with or without incidental provision for operation at will in an emergency, and not automatically, signals, brakes, stops, and switches) for controlling the movements of trains or other automotive vehicles.

15. "Railway signaling" is the operation of signals, switches, brakes, stops, etc., controlling the movements of trains or other automotive vehicles, controlled by or in accordance with train or vehicle movements or track conditions, including block signaling, cab signals, and train stops. It does not include train dispatching as above defined.

16. "Submarine signaling" is the art of sending or receiving mechanical vibrations transmitted through water.

17. The terms "General Co." and "Westinghouse Co." as used herein relate to and include, respectively, for the General Co. and the Westinghouse Co., all controlled companies, branches, factories, and departments engaged in the manufacture or sale of radio devices, and the terms and conditions hereof shall apply to any individuals or corporations who may succeed to the business of either of them.

Article II. Exceptions

1. The following are excluded from the operations of this agreement:

(a) Devices with respect to which exclusive licenses have been granted to others by the parties hereto as evidenced by Exhibits A, B, C, and D, and the following (some of which are included in the licenses granted evidenced by said exhibits):

(b) Radio devices.

(c) X-ray devices.

(d) Submarine signaling.

(e) Wire telephony.

(f) Wire telegraphy.

(g) Train dispatching.

(h) Transoceanic communication.

(i) All applications (for purposes other than power purposes, railway signaling, household devices as defined, distance actuation and control by wireless for other than communication purposes, scientific, experimental, and therapeutic apparatus and shop tools, shop appliances, and shop processes) of inventions pertaining or applicable to or to the use of vacuum tubes and to generating (directly or from other currents), modifying, amplifying, transmitting, or receiving electromagnetic waves, variations, or impulses, including instruments and their records for producing music and other sounds for amusement or artistic purposes, with the right to transmit the sound by wire telephony throughout a building.

(j) And in so far as the parties are now operating or may in the future operate under licenses granted or to be granted to one by the other, which licenses make no reference to this present agreement, the field of such license is excluded from the present agreement so long as such other license remains in force.

2. The right to make and sell (but not to lease) to electric light, electric power, and electric traction companies apparatus for so-called

"carrier current" telephone communication over wires, or partly over wires and partly across wireless gaps, but in each instance only for the use of such companies and not for the use of the public, nor for toll, nor for the operation of a selective train-dispatching system, nor in connection with any public service telephone system, being a General Electric right under paragraph (a) of section 5 of Article V of agreement B, is not, as between the General and Westinghouse Cos., included in the general language of any of the above exceptions.

Article III. Licenses to be granted

1. If at any time any radio devices covered by patents of the General Co. come to have a commercial use in a field outside the exclusions specified in article 2 hereof, the General Co. will grant and extend to the Westinghouse Co., at its request, a license in such field under the General Co.'s United States patents then existing and all patents to be issued to the General Co. on patent applications filed in the United States on inventions made or conceived by its employees up to January 1, 1945, and all United States patents which it now has or which it shall acquire or with respect to which it has or shall have the right to grant or extend licenses up to January 1, 1945 (except those acquired by purchase and referred to in article 9 of a contract of even date herewith known as agreement E) in so far as such patents are applied to the use of radio devices in such field. The licenses for such use are to be without royalty and on such terms as will permit the Westinghouse Co. to deal with its customers with respect to such devices for such use on equal terms with the General Co.; but the General Co. shall not be bound to license the Westinghouse Co. to do more than 40 per cent of the gross business of the two companies in dollars in any calendar year under any such license so granted in any such field except on payment of a royalty to be fixed by the General Co. The licenses herein provided for shall contain the usual provisions regarding exchange of technical and manufacturing information with respect to standard devices which at the time when the information is asked for are being manufactured commercially by the General Co., as distinguished from devices under development and devices designed for special order (said exchange to be without compensation except the actual cost of furnishing the information).

2. If at any time any radio devices covered by patents of the Westinghouse Co. come to have a commercial use in a field outside the exclusions specified in article 2 hereof, the Westinghouse Co. will grant and extend to the General Co., at its request, a license in such field under the Westinghouse Co.'s United States patents then existing and all patents to be issued to the Westinghouse Co. on patent applications filed in the United States on inventions made or conceived by its employees up to January 1, 1945, and all United States patents which it now has or which it shall acquire or with respect to which it has or shall have the right to grant or extend licenses up to January 1, 1945 (except those acquired by purchase and referred to in contract of even date herewith known as agreement E), in so far as such patents are applied to the use of radio devices in such field. The licenses for such uses are to be without royalty and on such terms as will permit the General Co. to deal with its customers with respect to such devices for such use on equal terms with the Westinghouse Co.; but the Westinghouse Co. shall not be bound to license the General Co. to do more than 60 per cent of the gross business of the two companies in dollars in any calendar year under any such license so granted, except on payment of a royalty to be fixed by the Westinghouse Co. The licenses herein provided for shall contain the usual provisions regarding exchange of technical and manufacturing information with respect to standard devices which at the time when the information is asked for are being manufactured commercially by the Westinghouse Co., as distinguished from devices under development and devices designed for special order (said exchange to be without compensation except the actual cost of furnishing the information).

3. If either party shall have other licensees under its patents in any such field outside the exclusions specified in article 2 hereof, the business of such other licensees in such field under such licenses shall, for the purposes of the foregoing sections, be included as a part of the business in that field of the party granting such licenses. This shall not apply to the existing licenses granted under the Armstrong patents referred to in an agreement of even date herewith known as agreement K.

4. The licenses hereunder agreed to be granted shall be under the patents of the United States only. They shall authorize the manufacture, use, and sale in this country and the manufacture and sale in this country for export, but shall not imply nor shall any act performed under this agreement or said licenses imply any right or license to use or sell under any patent of a country foreign to the United States.

Article IV.—Arbitration

If any controversy shall arise between the parties as to the performance of any obligation under this agreement, or as to the meaning of any definition, the matter in controversy shall be submitted, at the option of either party, to three arbitrators, who shall have the power to decide the matter in controversy, and whose decision shall be binding upon the parties hereto. Upon such contingency each party shall designate one arbitrator, and these two shall appoint a third arbitrator. In the event that one party appoints an arbitrator and the other party fails within 30 days, after receipt of written notice, to appoint a second, the decision of the first arbitrator shall be binding upon the parties hereto.

Article V.—Term and termination

This present agreement shall continue until January 1, 1945, at which date it shall expire. The licenses to be granted hereunder shall continue until January 1, 1945, and thereafter to the date of expiration of the last patent owned by either party to which each such license, respectively, applies.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have caused these presents to be executed and their corporate seals to be hereunto affixed by their proper officers thereunto duly authorized at New York on the day and year first above written.

LICENSE AGREEMENT—RADIO CORPORATION OF AMERICA, GENERAL ELECTRIC CO., AND WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC & MANUFACTURING CO.

Agreement made this 30th day of June, 1921, between the Radio Corporation of America, a Delaware corporation (hereinafter referred to as the Radio Corporation), the General Electric Co., a New York corporation (hereinafter referred to as the General Co.), and the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., a Pennsylvania corporation (hereinafter referred to as the Westinghouse Co.), the said General and Westinghouse companies being hereinafter collectively referred to as the manufacturing companies

By an agreement of November 20, 1919, between the General Co. and the Radio Corporation the General Co. granted certain patent licenses to the Radio Corporation and agreed to manufacture for it, and the Radio Corporation agreed to purchase exclusively from the General Co., all radio devices covered by patents, rights under which were granted or agreed to be granted in such agreement, which the General Co. should be from time to time in a position to supply with reasonable business promptness for use in, or which were used in, the business and operation of the Radio Corporation and its licensees and customers; and

An agreement of June 29, 1921, was entered into between the Westinghouse Co. and the International Radio Telegraph Co., a Delaware corporation, hereinafter referred to as the International Co., which agreement contained provisions similar to those in the General Electric-Radio agreement above referred to (copies of the said General Electric-Radio agreement and of the said Westinghouse-International Co. agreement being attached hereto as Exhibit A and Exhibit D, respectively, and hereinafter so referred to).

Subsequent to the execution of these two agreements the Radio Corporation has (by an agreement of even date herewith which is attached hereto as Exhibit J and hereinafter so referred to) acquired certain of the assets of the International Co.

It is not practicable for the Radio Corporation to continue to carry out the terms of both agreements A and D in the form which they now stand; and this is particularly clear since radio devices which the Radio Corporation desires to use combine patented inventions of both the General and Westinghouse companies, and it is only by the use of the complementary patented devices of both companies in single instruments and sets of instruments that efficient radio communication can be secured.

Now, therefore, to settle the conflict created by such acquisition and to further define the rights of the parties with respect to the manufacture of radio devices and to enable the Westinghouse Co. to manufacture radio devices for the Radio Corporation under the patents of the General Co. and to enable the General Co. to manufacture radio devices for the Radio Corporation under the patents of the Westinghouse Co., the parties have agreed as follows:

Article I

As modified by this and other agreements of even date herewith, the parties agree that the Radio Corporation assumes all of the obligations (subject to the exceptions noted in the last sentence of paragraph 2 of this article) assumed by the International Radio Telegraph Co. in agreement D above mentioned, and becomes entitled to all of the benefits thereof as though it had been a party thereto in place of the International Radio Telegraph Co.

Except as provided hereinafter, the General Co. shall acquire no rights under the patents of the International Co. or the Westinghouse Co. by reason of the provisions of agreement A. Except as provided hereinafter, the Westinghouse Co. shall acquire no rights under the patents of the Radio Corporation or the General Co. by reason of the provisions of agreement D.

It is agreed that the grants made by the Westinghouse Co. to International Co. and Radio Corporation and by General Electric Co. to Radio Corporation, evidenced by agreements A and D, are made subject to grants heretofore made by such grantors to others.

Article II

Section 1 of article 4 of agreement A and section 1 of article 4 of agreement D are hereby canceled and the provisions and obligations of this Article II are substituted in place thereof.

1. It was the purpose and intent of the General Co. in entering into agreement A to retain the exclusive manufacturing rights under its patents for radio purposes and to acquire similar exclusive manufacturing rights under the patents of the Radio Corporation. This purpose was accomplished by granting to the Radio Corporation (except in case of failure of the General Co. to supply) no manufacturing rights whatever, but merely the exclusive rights for sale and use, as specified, of devices purchased of the General Co., and by acquiring from the Radio Corporation the exclusive manufacturing rights specified under its patents.

The Westinghouse Co., in its dealings with the International Co., evidenced by agreement D, was actuated by a similar motive and acted in a similar manner.

The present situation is such that the Radio Corporation thus finds itself obliged to purchase of the General Co. everything which is made under the patents of the General Co. or of the Radio Corporation, and of the Westinghouse Co. everything which is made under the patents of the Westinghouse Co. and of the International Co. It develops that if the Radio Corporation is to give the efficient service which it desires to give, important devices which the Radio Corporation desires to purchase must be manufactured under the patents of the two groups.

In the situation thus created the manufacturing companies have agreed that the licenses are extended as hereinafter specified to enable the Westinghouse Co. to manufacture for the Radio Corporation under patents of the General Co. and of the Radio Corporation, and to enable the General Co. to manufacture for the Radio Corporation under the patents of the Westinghouse Co. and of the International Co., to such an extent that the Radio Corporation in the manner and to the extent herein provided may purchase from time to time from the General Co. 60 per cent and from the Westinghouse Co. 40 per cent of all radio devices covered by patents, rights under which are granted or agreed to be granted in either agreement A or agreement D (provided however that the right of the Radio Corporation to use or dispose of said devices arises from the grants of agreements A and/or D) which either the General Co. or the Westinghouse Co. is from time to time in a position to supply with reasonable business promptness for use in, or which are or shall be used in, the business and operation of the Radio Corporation and its future licensees and customers and its existing licensees. To this end the Radio Corporation agrees that of the orders which it shall place with the two manufacturing companies during the portion of the calendar year 1921 following the date of execution of this agreement and in each calendar year thereafter for the life of said agreements A and D, it will in placing orders with the manufacturing companies for such patented apparatus as it is licensed to purchase only from the manufacturing companies order 60 per cent in selling price to the Radio Corporation in each said period of the General Co., and 40 per cent in such selling price in each said period of the Westinghouse Co. Where an order is canceled by agreement of the parties concerned, the amount of the cancellation is to be allowed for by proper adjustment of the orders in the period in which the cancellation becomes effective. Any unavoidable excess of orders placed with one company in any such period is to be adjusted by giving to the other company more orders in the next period, except in so far as such excess is due to the failure of the other manufacturing company to supply devices of good quality and with reasonable business promptness.

2. Any obligation to place orders with either manufacturing company is subject to the obligation of such company to produce the devices ordered of good quality, workmanship, and material with reasonable business promptness.

3. As one of the considerations to the manufacturing companies in entering into this agreement and into agreements A and D has been and is the information and experience which their engineering and manufacturing departments will acquire by designing and producing devices hereunder, it is agreed that the obligation of the Radio Corporation to place its orders in the ratio of 60 per cent and 40 per cent shall extend to each of the devices (which devices it is licensed to purchase only from the manufacturing companies covered by patents rights under which are granted or agreed to be granted under agreements A and D) of the classes A, B, C, etc., of Schedule X attached hereto and to foreign and domestic business in each of said classes separately, but the manufacturing companies may by arrangement between themselves modify the division of the business or its allocation in classes, either temporarily or permanently, by notice signed by the two manufacturing companies and served on the Radio Corporation.

4. The grants of licenses in agreements A and D to the Radio Corporation itself to manufacture when it is not able to obtain radio devices with reasonable promptness from the respective manufacturing companies are so modified that they shall not be operative except when both manufacturing companies have refused or failed to supply the devices with reasonable promptness as specified.

Article III

The licenses heretofore granted and agreed to be granted by the General Co. to the Radio Corporation and the licenses heretofore granted and agreed to be granted by the Westinghouse Co. to the International Co. and transferred or to be transferred to the Radio Corporation and licenses under the patents of the Radio Corporation, the General Electric Co. and the Westinghouse Co. are hereby extended to such extent as may be necessary to permit the General Co. and the Westinghouse Co. to manufacture for and sell radio devices to the Radio Corporation as above provided and to manufacture for their own use to the extent that such use is permitted by Article V hereof.

Article IV

An arrangement may be made by the Radio Corporation with the two manufacturing companies whereby such companies may on equal terms as agents of the Radio Corporation sell for use in the United States of America radio devices purchased by the Radio Corporation as herein provided, or may otherwise acquire such selling rights as may be mutually agreed upon by the three parties hereto.

Article V

The Radio Corporation grants to the Westinghouse Co. and to the General Co., and each manufacturing company grants to the other manufacturing company (so far as it has the right to do so), the following licenses under all patents, applications for patents, inventions, and rights of licenses under or in connection with patents which the Radio Corporation and manufacturing companies, respectively, now own or control, or which they may acquire during the term hereof, or under which they have or may have the right to grant such licenses, except those acquired by purchase and referred to below.

a. Nonexclusive licenses in the fields of wire and wireless telegraphy for its own communication, or for the purpose of convenience, or to save expense, but not for profit for transmission of messages for the public.

b. Nonexclusive licenses in the field of wireless telephony for its own communication but not for profit or for transmission of messages for the public, nor for toll, nor for the operation of a selective train dispatching system, and not for connection with any public service telephone system.

c. Nonexclusive licenses to establish, maintain, and operate, but not for pay and not to sell or lease, broadcasting wireless transmitting stations.

The grants of this article apply to the companies so controlled by the Westinghouse or General Co. as to subject them to the liabilities of the present agreement.

Article VI

It is agreed that each of the manufacturing companies shall have the right as against the other to enforce the obligations of section 10 (renumbered as section 9 per article 11 hereof) of article 4 of each of said agreements A and D.

Article VII

On the termination of the said agreements A and D the Radio Corporation shall be licensed under all patents of the manufacturing companies under which it was licensed in either of such agreements A and D so far as the manufacturing companies have or may hereafter acquire the right to grant such licenses, to the extent necessary to enable it to manufacture for its own use in accordance with the provisions of said agreements, but not for lease, resale, or other disposal, radio devices which it is unable to purchase of either of the manufacturing companies in accordance with the terms of article 4 of each of said agreements A and D, but only so long as it shall place its orders for devices covered by such patents in so far as they remain unexpired with the two manufacturing companies in general accordance with the provisions of article 2 hereof.

Each of the manufacturing companies is licensed under such patents to manufacture for and sell to the Radio Corporation radio devices in accordance with this article. The grants of article 5 hereof shall extend with respect to all patents, licenses under which are granted or agreed to be granted under agreements A and D. Except to this extent this agreement shall expire with the expiration of agreement A.

Article VIII

The terms "General Co." and "Westinghouse Co." as used herein relate to and include, respectively, for the General Co. and the Westinghouse Co. all controlled companies, branches, factories, and departments engaged in the manufacture or sale of radio devices, and the terms and conditions hereof shall apply to any individuals or corporations who may succeed to the business of either of them. The term "Radio Corporation" includes all of its controlled companies.

Article IX

Paragraph 7, Article II of agreement A, and paragraph 7, Article II of agreement D, are hereby canceled, and the following is substituted therefor:

In case the Radio Corporation shall acquire by purchase from others patents, patent applications, or rights or licenses under or in connection with patents, which have uses or applications outside of radio purposes, it shall disclose that fact to each of the manufacturing companies and shall offer to bring the same within the scope of this contract on payment by the manufacturing companies jointly of a fair proportion of the price actually paid or to be paid therefor, in which case the payment by the manufacturing companies (except as to any subsequent payments depending on the use of the invention) shall be made in the proportion of 60 per cent by the General Co. and 40 per cent by the Westinghouse Co. (with due allowance for any payments made by others and for such rights as do not pass from one company to the other). In case either the General Co. or the Westinghouse Co. shall decline the offer, the other manufacturing company may, nevertheless, acquire for itself (but not for the other manufacturing company) the same rights which it would acquire if the patents or rights in question were brought within the scope of this agreement, by paying to the Radio Corporation the same amount which in the first case would have been paid by the two manufacturing companies jointly.

In case either of the manufacturing companies shall acquire by purchase from others, patents, patent applications or rights or licenses under or in connection with patents useful for or applicable to radio purposes, it shall disclose that fact to the Radio Corporation and to the other manufacturing company. It shall offer to bring the same within the scope of this agreement on payment by the Radio Corporation to it of a fair proportion of the price actually paid or to be paid therefor, and shall also offer to the other manufacturing company to bring the same within the scope of a certain agreement of even date herewith, between the two manufacturing companies, known as agreement F, on payment by the other manufacturing company of its fair proportion of the purchase price unpaid by the Radio Corporation, it being agreed as between the two manufacturing companies that the proper proportion, unless otherwise agreed in any particular case (except as to any subsequent payments depending on the use of the invention), is 60 per cent for the General Co. and 40 per cent for the Westinghouse Co. (with due allowance for any payments made by others and for such rights as do not pass from one company to the other).

In case the other manufacturing company shall refuse to join, the patents or rights in question shall not be within the scope of the said agreement F but shall be specifically excepted therefrom. In case the Radio Corporation refuses to join and the other manufacturing company does join, the manufacturing company so joining shall have equal rights for radio purposes with the company making the purchase. But this, while releasing the manufacturing companies from all obligations not to sell so far as such particular patents or rights are concerned, shall in no way license or empower either manufacturing company to sell for radio purposes under any patents or radio rights which are owned by the Radio Corporation.

The expression "bring the same within the scope of this agreement" wherever used in this present Article IX shall for the purposes of this article be taken to include, among other things, that the Radio Corporation grants to the manufacturing companies licenses for purposes other than radio purposes which are exclusive to the two manufacturing companies jointly, so far as it is free under its existing contracts to grant such rights (except that they are not exclusive with respect to the reserved rights of the Radio Corporation for wire purposes), and in case where one manufacturing company refuses to join, said license shall be exclusive to the manufacturing company which makes the purchase or which joins in a purchase made by the Radio Corporation. Whether or not either or both of the manufacturing companies participate in a purchase made in accordance with this agreement offered to them by the Radio Corporation, the obligations of the Radio Corporation to purchase radio apparatus thereunder from the manufacturing companies as provided hereunder shall not be modified, and the two manufacturing companies are licensed exclusively to manufacture radio devices under patents so purchased to the same extent as though such patent were owned by the Radio Corporation at the date hereof.

Article X

The sentence beginning "But this action" in Article XI of agreement A is canceled.

If at any time in accordance with Article XI of agreement A, or in accordance with Article IX of agreement D above referred to, the Radio Corporation is taken over by any superior authority or its stations are taken over, as provided in such articles, the agreement that the rights of the Radio Corporation shall cease, be reassigned and revert shall not apply to any patents or rights of countries foreign to the United States which shall at that time have been assigned or agreed to be assigned to Marconi's Wireless Telegraph Co. (Ltd.), or Shielton (Ltd.), or the South American Radio Corporation, or the United Fruit Co., or any other stranger to these agreements.

Article XI

Section 9 of Article IV of agreements A and D are canceled, and sections 10 and 11 of each of such articles are renumbered as sections 9 and 10, respectively. At the end of section 10 of each of such articles (now renumbered as section 9) the following sentence is added:

"The agreements contained in this section are conditions and limitations of the licenses heretofore granted and agreed to be granted."

Article XII

The admission of validity implied in the acceptance of licenses and assignments under and in accordance with this agreement and under and in accordance with the agreements known as F, G, and K is limited to the territory and field of use for which such licenses respectively are and may be granted and to the periods thereof respectively.

Article XIII

It is agreed that the Radio Corporation and the General Co. may extend to the United Fruit Co. and to the Wireless Specialty Apparatus Co. rights under the patents of the Westinghouse Co. and of the International Co. for radio purposes to the same extent that they have agreed to extend rights under their own patents.

Either manufacturing company may, however, from time to time authorized the Wireless Specialty Apparatus Co. to manufacture radio devices for the Radio Corporation. Any such devices so manufactured shall be regarded for all purposes under this agreement as manufactured by such manufacturing company, unless the other manufacturing company shall agree that the devices so manufactured shall not be regarded in computing the 60 per cent and 40 per cent under the provisions of Article II hereof.

Article XIV

If any controversy shall arise between any two of the parties as to the performance of any obligation under Article IX hereof or as to the amount of the proportions to be respectively paid under said article, or as to the performance of any obligation under this agreement, or as to the meaning of any definition, the matter in controversy shall be submitted, at the option of either such party, to three arbitrators who shall have the power to decide the matter in controversy, and whose decision shall be binding upon the parties so arbitrating. Upon such contingency each such party shall designate one arbitrator, and these two shall appoint a third arbitrator. In the event that one such party appoints an arbitrator and the other party fails, within 30 days after receipt or written notice, to appoint a second, the decision of the first arbitrator shall be binding upon such parties.

Article XV

No licenses are granted or extended hereby under patents of Canada, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and Japan.

Article XVI

If at any time prior to January 1, 1923, the Radio Corporation and one of the manufacturing companies request, both manufacturing companies will grant to the Radio Corporation the manufacturing rights under their German patents for radio purposes to the extent that and for the term that they have agreed to transfer to the Radio Corporation the selling and using rights.

In testimony whereof the parties have caused these presents to be executed and their corporate seals to be hereunto affixed by their proper officers thereunto duly authorized, at New York City, the day and year first above written.

TRANSMITTING EQUIPMENT

A. Spark sets complete with accessories.
B. Arc sets complete with accessories.
C. Alternator sets complete with accessories, but not including standard power transformers or generating apparatus of standard types.

D. Tube sets complete with accessories—5 kilowatt output and above.
E. Tube sets complete with accessories—below 5 kilowatt output.
F. Tubes only above 1 kilowatt rated output.
G. Tubes only 1 kilowatt rated output or less.
H. Transmitting apparatus not otherwise specified.

RECEIVING EQUIPMENT

I. Crystal detector sets.
J. Tube sets complete with accessories.
K. Tubes only.
L. Receiving apparatus not otherwise specified.

MISCELLANEOUS EQUIPMENT

M. Direction finders, wave meters, and similar auxiliary apparatus.
N. Miscellaneous radio devices not otherwise specified.
O. Standard power and lighting devices other than those included in class C.

LICENSE AGREEMENT—WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC & MANUFACTURING CO., AMERICAN TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO., AND WESTERN ELECTRIC CO.

Agreement made this 30th day of June, 1921, between the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., a corporation of New York (hereinafter called the Telephone Co.), the Western Electric Co. (Inc.), a corporation of New York (hereinafter called the Western Co.), and the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., a corporation of Pennsylvania (hereinafter called the Westinghouse Co.)

Witnesseth that—

Whereas an agreement dated July 1, 1920, has been entered into between the General Electric Co., a New York corporation (hereinafter called the General Co.), and the Telephone Co., under which licenses were exchanged between the two companies under their respective patents for operation in the respective fields of business of said companies; a copy of which agreement is attached hereto and marked "Exhibit B"; and

Whereas by virtue of an extension agreement dated July 1, 1920, a copy of which is hereto attached marked "Exhibit C," the General Co. has also received, under the patents and inventions of the Western Co., rights corresponding to those it received under the agreement "Exhibit B"; and

Whereas, pursuant to the provisions of article 6, section 3, subdivision (b), of said agreement, "Exhibit B," the General Co. desires to extend to the Westinghouse Co., at its request, certain of the rights under the patents and inventions of the Telephone and Western Cos. received by the General Co. under the said agreements, and, at the request of the General Co., the Telephone Co., and the Western Co. have assented thereto, as shown by the assent attached hereto and marked "Exhibit H"; and

Whereas the Telephone Co., the Western Co., and the Westinghouse Co. are desirous of extending to each other certain additional rights, privileges, information, and assistance pertaining to the existing business of the respective companies;

Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises and the mutual covenants herein contained, it is agreed as follows:

1. The Westinghouse Co. hereby grants and agrees to grant to the Telephone Co., and to the Western Co., under the present and future patents of the Westinghouse Co. and rights to and under patents, in so far as it has or may have the right to do so, rights of the same character and scope, and for the same fields of operation, and subject to the same limitations and conditions, as the rights granted by the General Co. to the Telephone Co. in and by the said agreement of July 1, 1920: Provided, however, That all rights, granted and agreed to be granted under this paragraph, are subject to rights which the Westinghouse Co. hereby reserves for itself, for the General Co., and for the Radio Co., and their several successors in business, and which are of the same character and scope, and for the same fields, and subject to the same limitations and conditions, as the rights reserved by the General Co. in and by said agreement of July 1, 1920: Provided further, That no rights are granted by the Westinghouse Co. to the Telephone Co. or the Western Co. pertaining to the fields covered in the first and the last items of section 9, article 5, of the agreement, "Exhibit B." The admission of validity implied in the acceptance of licenses hereunder is limited to the fields for which such licenses exist.

2. The Telephone Co. agrees, in addition to giving its assent to the extension of rights, under its patents, to the Westinghouse Co., as aforesaid, and to the granting of the other rights and privileges herein conferred, to pay to the Westinghouse Co. one-third of the sums paid and payable by the Westinghouse Co. to the inventors under a certain agreement known as the "Armstrong and Pupin agreement," dated October 5, 1920, under which the Westinghouse Co. acquired certain patents and applications of said inventors. One-third of the payments made by the Westinghouse Co. to date under said agreement shall be paid by the Telephone Co. hereunder upon the execution of this agreement, and one-third of future payments as they are due and paid by the Westinghouse Co. under the terms of said agreement: Provided, however, That in case the Westinghouse Co. does not prior to July 10, 1922, acquire the rights relating to "wired, wireless, or so-called multiplex telephony and telegraphy" covered by the "Russell agreements" referred to in paragraph 13 of said "Armstrong and Pupin agreement," and the Westinghouse Co. is not then in position to grant to the Telephone Co. rights thereunder corresponding to those granted in paragraph 1 hereof, then the Westinghouse Co. will, upon demand of the Telephone Co., pay to the Telephone Co. a sum equal to all sums received by the Westinghouse Co. under said "Armstrong and Pupin agreements" for the rights disposed of under the Russell agreements.

3. The Westinghouse Co. agrees that it will not terminate its rights to and under the Armstrong and Pupin patents, under the provisions of paragraph 11 of the aforesaid "Armstrong and Pupin agreement," without first making such arrangements between the parties then interested in said patents that the Telephone Co. shall continue to enjoy the rights herein granted under said patents without the payment of any consideration other than that herein provided.

4. The provisions of articles 6, 7, sections 1 and 3 of article 9, articles 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, and 16 of Exhibit B contract, relating to the licenses granted, the settlement of interferences, cooperation, and exchange of information, purchases between the parties, litigation, releases, arbitration, further assurances, and rights of successors, shall apply to and govern the relations between the parties hereto, the same as if copied in full herein, with the following exceptions:

(a) As to article 6, any extension of rights by the Westinghouse Co. under section 3, subdivision (b), can be made only upon the consent of the General Electric Co., through whom the Westinghouse Co. derives its rights.

The first sentence of section 6, of article 6, is excepted from this agreement, and notwithstanding the remaining provisions of said section 6, it is understood and agreed that the Westinghouse Co. hereby grants to the Telephone Co. nonexclusive licenses and the right to grant nonexclusive licenses to the foreign associated and allied companies of the Telephone Co. and Western Co., under all foreign patents which the Westinghouse Co. acquires under the "Armstrong and Pupin agreement" of October 5, 1920, so far as the Westinghouse Co. has or may have the right to make such grants.

(b) As to article 9, the parties hereto shall be under the obligation to furnish information and permit access to their respective laboratories only with respect to devices, apparatus, systems, and methods as to which the development work is substantially completed.

5. Unless previously terminated by mutual consent, this agreement shall continue in force until July 1, 1930, and automatically thereafter until canceled on three years' written notice given after July 1, 1930, by either party to the other: Provided, however, That it shall not be thus canceled by the Westinghouse Co. during the continuance of agreements Exhibits B and C and its enjoyment thereunder of rights under the patents of the Telephone Co. and Western Co. In the event that agreements, Exhibits B and C, or either of them, are terminated prior to the termination of this agreement, as above specified, the parties hereto shall continue, during the continuance of this agreement, to enjoy rights under each other's patents, and rights to and under patents, the same as prior to the termination of such agreements. If this agreement is terminated by three years' written notice, as above specified, the then existing licenses of both parties shall continue during the lives of the several patents. For the purposes of this paragraph, the Telephone Co. and the Western Co. shall be regarded as one party and the Westinghouse Co. as the other party.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have caused this instrument to be executed in three originals, and their corporate seals to be thereunto affixed, the day and year first above written, by their proper officers thereunto duly authorized.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, there has also been much discussion of the terms of the patent license agreements granted by this Radio Trust to 25 so-called independent competitors to manufacture tuned radio-frequency receiving sets under a royalty of 7½ per cent on their turnover, with a minimum of $100,000 a year from each of these companies. Therefore I also ask to have printed in the RECORD the text of the patent license agreement by which the Radio Corporation is illegally attempting to control the sale of tubes, an agreement which has been declared illegal by the district court of the State of New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The agreement referred to is as follows:

TEXT OF RADIO TRUST PATENT LICENSE AGREEMENT

LICENSE AGREEMENT

License agreement as of ———, 1927, by and between Radio Corporation of America, hereinafter termed Radio Corporation, General Electric Co., and Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., hereinafter termed licensors, and ———, a corporation of the State of ———, having an office at ———, hereinafter termed licensee.

Witnesseth: That—

Whereas the licensors represent that they severally own and/or have the right to grant licenses under various United States letters patent useful in tuned radio-frequency receivers as hereinafter defined; and

Whereas the licensee desires to make lawful use of some or all of the inventions covered by said letters patent of the United States, and to that end desires to acquire the licenses herein expressed;

Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises, the licenses granted herein by the licensors to the licensee, and the covenants herein contained, it is agreed that:

1. Each of the licensors hereby grants under all of the United States letters patent useful in tuned radio-frequency receivers, as hereinafter defined in paragraph (d) of article 2, owned by it and/or with respect to which it has the right to grant licenses, during the term of this agreement or until it is sooner terminated as hereinafter provided for, and upon the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth, and solely and only to the extent and for the uses hereinafter specified and defined, a personal, indivisible, nontransferable, and nonexclusive license to the licensee to manufacture at its factory, located at ———, in the State of ———, and not elsewhere without previous written permission obtained from the Radio Corporation, and to sell only for radio amateur reception, radio experimental reception, and radio broadcast reception throughout the United States and its Territories or dependencies tuned radio-frequency receivers, as hereinafter defined in paragraph (d) of article 2, so manufactured by the licensee, except that no license is granted in this agreement under any letters patent with respect to which a licensor can grant licenses only upon the payment of royalties.

It is specifically understood and agreed that no license is herein or hereby granted or is to be granted, and that nothing herein contained shall be construed as extending or conveying a license, to manufacture, sell, or use so-called superheterodyne or superregenerative receivers or parts therefor.

Nothing herein contained shall be regarded as conferring upon the licensee, either expressly or by estoppel, implication, or otherwise, a license to manufacture or sell apparatus except such as may be manufactured and sold by the licensee in accordance with the express provisions of this agreement. Nothing herein contained shall be construed as conveying any license expressly or by implication, estoppel, or otherwise under any patents of countries foreign to the United States.

2. (a) That the term "amateur reception," for the purpose of this agreement, means reception by one not a professional investigator who is more than a mere broadcast listener, and who evidences his interest in the art of wireless telephony by study, investigation, or experiment in the art.

(b) That the term "experimental reception," for the purpose of this agreement, means the use in a laboratory, college, school, or scientific society, or in professional investigations, but not in any case reception of messages, directly or indirectly for business purposes.

(c) That the term "broadcast reception," for the purpose of this agreement, is defined as follows: The reception from radio telephone broadcast stations of news, music, speeches, sermons, advertising, and entertainments, educational, and similar matter, or any of them, or combinations of any of them, for the purpose of exhibition, entertainment, or instruction.

(d) That the term "tuned radio frequency receiver," for the purposes of this agreement, is defined as follows: A complete radio receiver advertised as such and salable to the using public as such, which may include a cabinet, head set, loud speaker, battery eliminator, etc., and adapted to receive a modulated carrier wave embodying one or more input circuits, tuned or capable of being tuned to substantial resonance with the radio frequency of the carrier wave of the signal to be received, or coupled to a circuit or circuits so tuned or capable of being so tuned; one or more devices for relaying or for amplifying such signals at the said radio frequency; one or more output circuits, tuned or capable of being tuned to substantial resonance with the radio frequency of the signal to be received, or coupled to a circuit or circuits so tuned or capable of being so tuned; a single detecting device for directly converting the signals, so received and so relayed or amplified, from said radio frequency into audio frequency signal currents; and, if employed, one or more devices with their associated circuits, for amplifying such audio frequency currents. In any event, the term "tuned radio frequency receiver" shall not, for the purpose of this agreement, include the so-called superheterodyne or superregenerative receiver or parts therefor.

3. The licensee hereby agrees to pay to the Radio Corporation a royalty of 7½ per cent on the licensee's net selling price of the apparatus licensed under this agreement and sold by it during the continuance of this agreement, except that no royalty shall be paid on and no reports are required with reference to sales of apparatus purchased from or through the Radio Corporation. That for the purpose of this agreement all apparatus shall be considered as "sold" when the apparatus has been billed out, or if not billed out, when it has been delivered, shipped, or mailed.

4. The licensee further agrees to pay to the Radio Corporation during the time that this agreement shall remain in force a minimum royalty at the rate of $100,000 per annum. In case this agreement shall terminate at other than the end of a calendar year, the minimum royalty for such year shall be prorated to cover such part of such year as shall have elapsed when this agreement terminates.

5. The licensee within 30 days after and as of the 1st days of January, April, July, and October in each year, respectively (hereinafter referred to as "quarter days"), shall furnish the Radio Corporation with written statements, under oath, specifying exactly the total number of apparatus sold under this agreement by the licensee during the preceding quarter. Said statements shall show the licensee's net selling price with respect to all such apparatus, the date when each was sold, and the trade or brand name. The first of such statements shall be rendered not later than the fifteenth day after the quarter day next following the date of this agreement, as of such quarter day, and shall cover the period from the date of this agreement to said quarter day. The royalty prescribed herein shall be due and payable on the 30th days of January, April, July, and October of each year upon all such apparatus sold by the licensee during the preceding quarter, or, in the case of the first statement, the period covered thereby. Any amount required to bring the aggregate royalty payments made for any calendar year up to the amount of the minimum royalty payable for such year, as above provided, shall be due and payable on the 30th day of January of the next succeeding year. The licensee shall keep true, accurate, and separate books of account containing all the information required to be given in the statements provided for in the preceding clause, and shall permit the Radio Corporation or its duly authorized agents or attorneys at any time during usual business hours to inspect the same.

6. The licensee shall affix to all apparatus manufactured and sold by the licensee under the terms of this agreement a license plate, reading: "Licensed only for radio amateur, experimental, and broadcast reception" and the word "patented," and giving the dates of the patents which are in the opinion of the Radio Corporation used in such apparatus. The licensee further agrees that any and all catalogues, circulars, or price lists, or general advertising of the licensee shall contain a statement to the effect that the apparatus so manufactured and sold by the licensee is "Licensed only for radio amateur, experimental, and broadcast reception."

7. In the event of the failure by the licensee at any time during the continuance in force of this agreement to render any of the statements called for herein upon any of the prescribed dates, or to pay all the royalties required hereunder when due, or to comply with any of the other obligations of this agreement, it is understood and agreed that should the licensee refuse or neglect so to do for 30 days after notification from the Radio Corporation by registered mail to the last-known place of business of the licensee, of the licensee's failure in any of these respects, this agreement shall cease and terminate, at the option of the licensor, 30 days after notice in writing by registered mail to that effect has been forwarded to the licensee, but no such cancellation shall release the licensee from any of the liabilities accruing to the licensor hereunder prior to the time such cancellation becomes effective. No failure on the part of the Radio Corporation to exercise its right of cancellation hereunder for any one or more defaults or breaches of covenant shall be construed to prejudice its right of cancellation for any subsequent default or breach of covenant. Bankruptcy of the licensee shall terminate this agreement, and the Radio Corporation shall also have the right to terminate it upon the insolvency of the licensee or the appointment of a receiver for its property.

8. Neither this agreement or any of its benefits shall be directly or indirectly assigned, transferred, divided, or shared by the licensee with any person, firm, or corporation whatsoever without the written consent of the Radio Corporation, but this agreement shall inure to the benefit of the successor or assigns of the several licensors, but shall not inure to the benefit of the successors, assigns, or any legal representative of the licensee without the consent of the Radio Corporation in writing having first been obtained.

9. Nothing herein contained shall be construed as conveying any licenses, expressly or by implication, estoppel, or otherwise, to manufacture, use, or sell vacuum tubes, except to use and sell the vacuum tubes purchased from the Radio Corporation as provided herein. The Radio Corporation hereby agrees to sell to the licensee and the licensee hereby agrees to purchase from the Radio Corporation the number, and only the number, of vacuum tubes to be used as parts of the circuits licensed hereunder and required to make initially operative the apparatus licensed under this agreement, such tubes to be sold by the Radio Corporation to the licensee at the terms and at the prices at which they are then being sold by the Radio Corporation to other manufacturers of radio sets buying in like quantities for the same purposes. But the sale of such tubes by the Radio Corporation to the licensee shall not be construed as granting any licenses except the right to sell such tubes for use in and to use them in the apparatus made and sold hereunder.

10. The licensors, or any of them, or the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., shall have the right to acquire for itself or for any corporation or corporations controlled by any of them through stock ownership of more than 50 per cent of its issued stock one or more nonexclusive license or licenses on reasonable terms under any United States letters patent owned by the licensee or under which it may have the right to grant a license or licenses. The terms of such license or licenses shall not be less favorable to the licensed party or parties than any other similar license from the licensee, and such license or licenses shall remain in full force and effect during the continuance of this agreement. If the terms of such license or licenses can not be agreed upon, then such terms shall be settled by arbitration pursuant to the arbitration law of the State of New York. The licensee may terminate such right with respect to any licensor and/or its controlled corporations as above defined and with respect to any specified letters patent by serving written notice upon any licensor that unless said licensor shall advise the licensee in writing within six months of its intention to exercise said right with respect to letters patent specified in said notice such right shall terminate at the end of such six months' period.

11. The licensee agrees to pay and the Radio Corporation agrees to accept, as and for the damages which the licensors have sustained and the profits which the licensee has made by reason of the licensee's past manufacture, use, or sale of tuned radio frequency receivers, as herein defined, of any of the letters patent licensed hereunder, the sum of ——— as liquidated damages therefor.

It is further agreed that such sum is now due and payable to the licensors of which ——— is in hand paid, receipt of which is acknowledged by the licensors. The licensors, however, hereby agree that, so long as the licensee complies with all of the terms and provisions of this agreement, they will—except as hereinafter provided—postpone collection of the remainder of such liquidated damages until the 15th day of January, 1931. It is hereby agreed, however, that, in the meantime, the licensors shall credit to the remainder of the payment of such liquidated damages an amount equal to one-third of each payment of royalty made by the licensee to the licensors on or prior to said 15th day of January, 1931, until said damages are fully paid.

It is further agreed that the obligation of the licensors to postpone collection of the remainder of such liquidated damages shall cease and terminate on said 15th day of January, 1931; and that, in the event of any default hereunder or of any breach of covenant by the licensee, or in the event of the bankruptcy or insolvency of the licensee or of the appointment of a receiver for its property, the obligation of the licensors to postpone collection of such part of the liquidated damages as shall then be unpaid shall immediately cease and terminate, whether or not this agreement shall have then been canceled or terminated by the licensors, as provided for in this agreement; and, in any such event, the obligation of the licensors to credit to the payment of such liquidated damages any portion of royalty payments then, or subsequently to become, due shall also immediately cease and terminate.

It is further agreed that the licensee shall not be required to pay interest upon such liquidated damages unless and until the obligation of the licensors to postpone collection thereof shall cease and terminate as above provided.

12. That the term of this agreement shall be four and one-half years from February 1, 1927, unless sooner terminated, as hereinbefore provided. The termination of this agreement, either four and one-half years from date or sooner, shall not release the licensee from any of its liabilities accruing prior to such termination.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have caused these presents to be executed by their proper officers thereunto duly authorized, and their corporate seals to be hereunto affixed, the day and year first above written.

JURY SYSTEM—ENFORCEMENT OF PROHIBITION

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD two articles from the Baltimore Evening Sun of yesterday, one referring to the jury system and the other to the subject of prohibition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Without objection, the articles will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PEERS

By Gerald W. Johnson

Some of the jurors in the Sinclair case have admitted that they became so utterly confused before the thing was over that they hardly knew what it was all about. This is not surprising, since the case was one of a certain complexity, and to be understood had to be studied with a concentration of which not everyone is capable.

In New York the other day Mrs. Knapp, admitting many of the facts as charged, nevertheless argued so cleverly that what she had done was not criminal that she succeeded in hanging the jury. There was no great complexity about this case, but a powerful personality impinging upon weaker ones swayed them irresistibly.

In Chicago a few weeks ago a juryman voted stubbornly against a verdict for first-degree murder against bandits who killed a man when he interrupted them in the job of robbing his safe. This juryman stated his belief that a man has the right to stage a hold-up if he can, and that when the intruder refused to put up his hands and made as if to molest the burglar, shooting him became an act of self-defense. This juryman, regardless of his intelligence quotient, is evidently a moral imbecile who is incapable of grasping an ethical point which is as plain as a pikestaff to the normal man.

Well, what of it? Is the system of trial by jury becoming hopeless? These three cases certainly reveal defects in it, and they seem to be very serious defects indeed. It is conceivable that here is evidence that it is rotten to the core.

But is our American system, after all, the old system of the English common law? That provides for the trial of the accused by a jury of his peers. Perhaps the Chicago juryman is actually the peer of the bandits; but it is preposterous to argue that the Sinclair jurors were the peers of the accused intellectually, whatever their relative moral rank may be. It is not likely, either, that the jurors in the Knapp case were the peers of Mrs. Knapp, who is a politician—which is to say a practical psychologist—of exceptional attainments.

In the Sinclair case, indeed, we have an unusual proof of this inadequacy of the jury. Shortly before his acquittal on the criminal charge, Sinclair had been tried on essentially the same set of facts before jurors who were at least his equals intellectually and morally, to wit, the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States. They were not in doubt as to their understanding of the case, and their verdict was not that of the petit jury.

The fact is that a man's peers are likely to be rougher on him than are his superiors. This is well understood by veteran criminals. In Maryland, where the accused may elect to be tried by the court without the assistance of a jury, it is exceptional for a man who has been in court on many petty charges to demand a jury. He knows that he has a better chance with the judge, who is socially and financially, as well as morally, his superior.

In England, once, a nobleman, charged with an offense for which an ordinary court would have given him a fine and possibly a short prison term made the mistake of demanding a jury of his peers; that is to say, of members of the House of Lords. He got it, but he wished he hadn't asked for it, for the lords gave him 20 years.

There is much complaint that it is become practically impossible in America to do anything with rich, prominent, and able scoundrels. Perhaps one way of remedying the situation would be to have them tried by juries who are really their peers. If Sinclair had been acquitted by a jury of first-rate business men, men who have made national reputations for their astuteness, his reputation now would be better. Such a verdict would not have been open to the suspicion that it was reached by men fumbling through mental obscurity, and therefore just as likely to return an unjust as a just verdict.

Money enables a man on trial to employ better counsel than ordinarily represents the State, and astute counsel are able to secure endless delays, and when they do go to trial to obscure the issue and obfuscate the jury. But even without this advantage, if the prisoner is obviously an able and successful man, he possesses an advantage over a jury likely to include a large proportion of conscious failures.

Envy of the rich may influence some verdicts, but respect for and fear of a forceful man probably influences a great many more.

But aside from these debatable factors it is perfectly clear that there are certain cases which should be submitted only to specially selected panels. Consider the Sinclair case, for example; it was a criminal prosecution, to be sure, but it necessitated the consideration by the jury of some highly complicated business operations, difficult for well-trained business men to understand and quite beyond the comprehension of a jury drawn off the street. It is really no wonder certain members of that jury are now admitting that the whole thing was incomprehensible to them.

Similarly in the Knapp case the offense with which the defendant was charged lay in the obscure borderland between official discretion and outright embezzlement. To decide on which side of the line it lies requires a nicety of judgment which the jury admittedly did not possess and it never reached a verdict.

So a jury which is to reach a true verdict must be adequate, not only to the defendant but also to the intricacies of the case. Every man above the level of the Chicago juryman already mentioned is aware that murder, theft, and arson are crimes, and in such cases it is simply a matter of proving the responsibility of the accused for the offense which has occurred. Such matters are usually within the comprehension of the first 12 men one meets, and as a jury they are able to return a verdict which is likely to be just.

Even so, a battery of high-priced criminal lawyers and a powerful personality in the accused may defeat justice; but justice has at least a fighting chance. Add to such handicaps a case so intricate that it is altogether beyond the comprehension of the jury, and the cause of justice is lost at the start. It is a gamble then, with natural human sympathy stacking the cards in favor of the accused.

What, then, is to be done about it? Obviously, nothing unless and until we revise our notion that all men are equal before the law. All men are not equal anywhere, and money alone does not constitute the difference. A forceful, successful man has an initial advantage over any jury not composed of men at least as forceful and successful as he is.

But one proof of a man's forcefulness and success in life is his ability to avoid jury duty. In this he is powerfully aided by the bar, for the lawyer who has any doubts about his case usually prefers to try it before a jury whose minds he can mold. Therefore he eagerly assists strong men to avoid serving. He doesn't want them.

The recent failures of the jury system are simply another phase of the protean question with which democracy wrestles incessantly—namely, how the great mass of mediocre men is to control strong and unscrupulous individuals.

FANATICS BARRED WAY TO A REALLY DRY AMERICA

(The Rev. C. W. Tinsley, pastor of West View M. E. Church, writing in the Pittsburgh Press)

For years before 1920 the evils of drink in the United States were lessening, the per capita consumption was decreasing, drunkenness was more and more frowned upon as an inexcusable vice, and social custom was banishing the use of intoxicants from reputable circles. Even extreme prohibitionists concede all this. The situation was not desperate, the patient was convalescent and did not require this violent form of surgery. The people were finding ways to lessen the drink evil, alcohol was being banished from medical practice as useless, and a really "dry" America was on the way, and no doubt would have arrived in time under more local and popular "methods," even if Volsteadism had never been imposed upon the Nation.

It was not because there was no other or better way, but because an intense, intolerant, impatient minority sought a short cut to reform that this assault upon our Federal Constitution was made. Even granting that a majority did it—that does not make it either right or wise. Majorities have no right to impose upon the rest of the people their notions of social conduct when the thing prohibited does not "necessarily" infringe upon the rights of others. American "citizens" should never be made "subjects" in matters of social habit and custom. Before 1920 we supposed that our Federal Constitution was full protection against such tyranny.

To-day "force" has fascinated the minds of many church leaders—a sinister sign of the decadence of faith in spiritual forces. The spirit of the Ku-Klux Klan has invaded certain groups of the Protestant Church. They act as if might could make things right. They would compel men to conform to their notions respecting temperance, the Sabbath, etc.

That "state of mind" is chiefly an inheritance from Calvinism, which held to the ideal of a Biblically controlled society.

They say "God's Word" can make the world right; so write His name in the Constitution, for this is a "Christian Nation." It's the same narrow spirit that caused the burning of the witch and the whipping of the Quaker. Christians should not give it any sanction.

It is high time that all good citizens call a halt to the efforts of these sincere but utterly mistaken people in their attempts to "regulate" everybody.

This is not a "Christian Nation" and never was. Genuine Americanism forbids any such false claim. If it were really "Christian" it would not try to compel total abstinence through "force."

Churches should not attempt to "dragoon the body, but to convince the soul," to use President Coolidge's apt phrase.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 98 to House bill 11577, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, and concurring therein; receding from its disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate to the said bill and agreeing thereto severally with an amendment, and also insisting upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 100, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
May 10, 1928.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 98 to the bill (H. R. 11577) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes," and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Horticultural experiment station, Cheyenne, Wyo.: to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act providing for horticultural experiment and demonstration work in the semiarid or dry-land regions of the United States," approved March 19, 1928, including the erection of buildings and fences, the construction of irrigation facilities, the employment of persons, and for other necessary expenses, to be immediately available, $100,000: Provided, That the limitations in this act as to the cost of buildings shall not apply to this paragraph."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$4,380,436."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$650,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 84, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$1,125,500: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall investigate and report to the next regular session of Congress as to the feasibility of a five-year cooperative program, or a program extending over such term of years as to him shall seem most advisable for the purposes in view, for the eradication, suppression, or bringing under control of predatory animals within the United States, and the estimated cost thereof as compared to the present method."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$1,165,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 86, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$211,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"FLOOD RELIEF, VERMONT, NEW HAMPSHIRE, AND KENTUCKY

"For the relief of the following States as a contribution in aid from the United States, induced by the extraordinary conditions of necessity and emergency resulting from the unusually serious financial loss to such States through the damage to or destruction of roads and bridges by the floods of 1927, imposing a public charge against the property of said States beyond their reasonable capacity to bear, and without acknowledgment of any liability on the part of the United States in connection with the restoration of such local improvements, namely: Vermont, $2,654,000; New Hampshire, $653,300; Kentucky, $1,889,994; in all, $5,197,294, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the sums hereby appropriated shall be expended by the State highway departments of the respective States with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture for the restoration, including relocation, of roads and bridges so damaged or destroyed, in such manner as to give the largest measure of permanent relief, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided further, That the amount herein appropriated for each State shall be available when such State shall have or make available a like sum from State funds for the purposes contained herein."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$139,138,793.88."

That the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 100.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 56, 59, 80, 84, 85, 86, 99, and 102, and that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 100.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX REDUCTION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment on page 15.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fess	La Follette	Sheppard
Barkley	Fletcher	Locher	Shipstead
Bayard	George	McLean	Shortridge
Bingham	Gerry	McMaster	Simmons
Black	Gillett	McNary	Smoot

Cutting	Johnson	Ransdell	Watson
Dale	Jones	Reed, Pa.	Wheeler
Deneen	Kendricks	Robinson, Ind.
Dill	Keyes	Sackett
Edwards	King	Schall

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having responded to their names, a quorum is present.

MOTHERS' DAY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, at the beginning of the session, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] be permitted to address the Senate on the subject of Mothers' Day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOCHER in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

WATER POWER AND ELECTRIC TRUSTS

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, recently there was held in the city of Washington the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. At that meeting a remarkable address was delivered by Mr. Edwin B. Parker, chairman of the board of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. The address is quite lengthy and I hardly feel justified in having it printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in its entirety, but I can not permit the occasion to pass without calling the attention of the Senate and of the country to at least some very important extracts from that eloquent and logical address.

If the doctrines proclaimed in that address by Mr. Parker were lived up to by the business men of the United States, a large portion of whom, as far as money is concerned, he was addressing when he delivered his speech, many of the difficulties that confront society would disappear.

He said, for instance:

> The times demand straight thinking and frank speaking. They demand that we consider the disturbing evidences of a business atavism, of a throwback to a day of unrestrained individualism, a day of "the public be damned," when men of great business ability, with an eye single to their own selfish interest and immediate returns, and without regard to the future, ruthlessly pursued their predatory lusts in a spirit of "after me the deluge!"
>
> The recent conspicuous examples of individuals, prominent in big business, becoming intoxicated with power and involved in transactions tainted with fraud and corruption, violating every principle of sound business conduct, holding themselves above the law, are not peculiar to this day nor to the profession of business. Every generation, every profession has its unfaithful members. But business, which has lately been defined as "the oldest of the arts and the newest of the professions," must, in order to maintain its professional status and reap the unquestioned advantages of group action, scrupulously discharge its group responsibilities.
> Among these responsibilities is to see to it that the profession of business is purged of those pirates whose acts stigmatize and bring business generally into disrepute. Such individuals, unmindful of their duties to the public, inevitably bring upon themselves and the entire institution of business the thunderbolts of public wrath in terms of legislative and governmental regulation that hamper a legitimate freedom of initiative. Ruthless and selfish initiative must be curbed in the public interest and in the interest of legitimate business.

Mr. President, in the few minutes that I have before 3 o'clock it will be impossible for me to read as much of that fine address as I should like to. I ask, therefore, to include in my remarks at this point the marked passages in the address, which I send to the clerk's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> Business does not exist unto itself alone. Business exists only by reason of what it does for others. It finds its opportunities to continue and to develop only in advancing the welfare and the happiness of all those from whom it buys, those to whom it sells, and those whom it employs. In the final analysis business deals with human welfare and human happiness. Its function is to find ways of promoting human welfare and of adding to the opportunities for human happiness. Without teamwork that function can not be successfully performed.
> Just as nations will decline to recognize, as a member of the family of nations, a government committed to destroying the foundations of our civilization; just as the legal profession has taken measures for disciplining and disbarring the "shyster"; just as the medical profession purges itself of the unethical practitioner, so business will decline to recognize as a member of the profession of business, and trade associations will decline to receive into their ranks, or will expel, an individual or an organization that willfully violates the fundamental principles upon which sound business rests, or that persists in ignoring the decencies of business intercourse, and besmatters all business with the slime of corruption or with the muck of unclean practices.
> Shall the business community as a whole lose the ground that it has painstakingly and deservedly gained in order that a few—a very few in relation to the vast host engaged in American business—a few who hold themselves above the law, may crash through and demolish the canons of sound business practices? Those canons have been set up by organized business for its self-government not only for its own protection but as an assurance to the public that business may be trusted to formulate and enforce its own rules of fair play—its rules of good sportsmanship—and to do and do thoroughly its own housecleaning. If organized business is content to sit supinely by and permit the ruthless few to undermine the sound foundation on which it rests, then, indeed, does business richly deserve that swift manifestations of public indignation that will surely be visited upon it.
>
> Much has been said and written of late of the betrayal of public trusts by those in high places. All such must be dealt with by the courts and by the voters to whom they are accountable. I have neither the time nor the disposition to deal with them here. The present concern of business is to cast the beam out of its own eye; to purge itself of those corrupters of public servants whose moral turpitude in making possible the betrayal of a public trust is even greater than that of those whom they would debauch; and to put the ban of outlawry upon those who have a contempt for the public interest, those who have a contempt for the Government that affords protection to them and to their property, and those who have a contempt for our institutions of justice. Organized business will have the courage and the sound judgment to cast out these defilers of the institution of business, both in its own interest and in the interest of the public, which in turn will be quick to brand the offenders with the contempt which they richly deserve.
> Leaving all public agents entirely out of the picture, and dealing solely with the shortcomings of its own members, business is here concerned with purging its profession not only of the principal offenders but of those accessories, either before or after the fact, who, unmindful of the public interest involved and of their duties to the public, are guilty of a suppression of the truth which the public has a right to know.
> It is the function of government to deal with crime. But there is a twilight zone between acts which are illegal and criminal on the one hand and acts which are simply unmoral on the other. Those whose conduct falls within this zone, whose acts, while within the law, are repugnant to the public interest, must be branded as social outlaws.
> We are here concerned in awakening the seemingly dormant business consciences of many of the stockholders of corporations who, through nonaction, impliedly place the seal of their approval on the acts of their offending agents. All such owe it to themselves, to the profession of business, and to the Government publicly to repudiate those who misrepresent them. They can not accept the profits flowing from corruption and escape the moral stigma which inheres in such profits. Neither can they permit those who act for them to profit personally through corrupt corporate transactions or shield others who do.

* * * * * * *

This chamber is committed to the principle that government should not enter the realm of business to undertake that which can be successfully performed in the public interest by private enterprise. This principle is politically and economically sound. We are here concerned in pointing out to business men everywhere that this principle is in far less danger from the propaganda of radical agitators than from the members of the business profession who are faithless to their obligations, who break down public confidence, and who provoke Government regulation!

Congressional investigations of particular business activities are sometimes bitterly denounced. Many congressional investigations are of the highest value to the public, including business. The demoralization to legitimate business that sometimes follows in their wake can be largely avoided by organized business doing its own investigating, and frankly and fully laying all pertinent facts pertaining to any business affected with a public interest before the tribunal of public opinion. A business which can not stand this acid test is not entitled to prosper. The public, which is entitled to know the facts, will be satisfied with nothing less. Organized business should itself perform this task in its own and in the public interest. Failing to do so, Congress should and will act.

* * * * * * *

"Slacking" did not end with the war. Every member of the profession of business who fails to observe the canons of decency and fair play and good sportsmanship, or everyone who, living up to those canons himself, lacks the courage to speak out in condemnation against that minority which brings business into disrepute, is "slacking" in his duty—in his duty to himself, in his duty to business, and in his duty to the public. And organized business, if it is to continue to deserve public confidence, must brand such "slackers" business outlaws.

* * * * * * *

The machinery is at hand. Let us use it to the full.

Will not this chamber at this its sixteenth annual meeting repudiate those whose ruthless methods tend to discredit all business, and reaffirm its allegiance to those sound principles of conduct which beget confidence, upon which to endure all business must rest?

As members of this American federation of business, shall we not pledge ourselves to team play with every element of the community of which we are a part, and with our neighbors of other lands, to achieve an all-embracing prosperity, inclusive of all groups and all classes?

Shall we not dedicate anew our best efforts to the diligent pursuit of the greatest of all vocations—the business of right living—preclaiming to the world that he who would be great among us must become the servant of all?

Mr. NORRIS. I repeat, if the doctrines that should control business as advocated by this able man had been in force, and the business world had adhered to the principles that he has laid down, we would have had no Sinclair case; we would have had no Teapot Dome steal; we would have had no stealing of the public lands at Elk Hills, in California, by Mr. Doheny; it would have been unnecessary to have such a thing as a Daugherty investigation, or a Daugherty trial in New York City. Forbes and Fall and Miller would have been unable to sell the power that they had by virtue of holding public office, because there would have been no dishonest business men to buy them.

But while this speech was being made, an investigation of big business was going on before the Federal Trade Commission, and some wonderful disclosures were taking place there. I read a letter printed in the Washington Herald on May 9, written to J. J. Davidson, president of the National Electric Light Association, by Mr. Charles Penrose, a brother of the late Senator Penrose.

I will omit the formal part of the letter, which I ask may be printed, but will read from the main part.

DEAR MR. DAVIDSON: I greatly appreciate your sending me, received this morning, the editorial from Omaha Bee of January 2. It is fine and very much to the point in the present situation. I shall see that copies get to fruitful spots in Pennsylvania.

Then he goes on to thank this man to whom he is writing for this editorial in the Omaha Bee, which he uses in the State of Pennsylvania, where they are trying to overthrow the advocates of public ownership of public utilities, particularly Governor Pinchot.

I ask that the balance of the letter, together with the comment under it made by the editor of the Herald, be printed at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOBBY PICKS "FRUITFUL SPOTS"

(Personal)

PHILADELPHIA, January 4, 1926.

J. E. DAVIDSON, Esq.,
President National Electric Light Association,
Care Nebraska Power Co., Omaha, Nebr.

DEAR MR. DAVIDSON: I greatly appreciate your sending me, received this morning, the editorial from Omaha Bee of January 2. It is fine and very much to the point in the present situation. I shall see that copies get to fruitful spots in Pennsylvania.

The deeper we go into it the greater appears the realization outside of Pennsylvania of the menace nationally of Pinchotism. In this morning's mail is a letter from Mr. Layman, president of Wagner Electric Corporation at St. Louis, from which I quote in his reference to the giant power situation:

"Some of us outside the State of Pennsylvania have come to look upon Governor Pinchot as a very great menace in public life. Political ambition seems to be his guiding motive, and it is certainly leading him to dangerous lengths."

In the same mail is a longhand letter written on New Year's Day from the president of Mississippi Power Co., Mr. Eaton. I am having it copied in order to attach hereto, as expressing the same thought.

Unmistakable approval of what we are attempting to do to combat Pinchotism is expressed in another letter, dated December 31, from one of the vice presidents of Bankers Trust Co., of New York. Literally, I could cite scores of letters.

I know all of this will be of interest to you at this time.

With warm regards,

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES PENROSE.

Cc. to Maj. J. S. S. Richardson, 1410 Widener Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

Here is Exhibit 1260 in the Federal Trade Commission's current investigation of the power lobby and the so-called Power Trust.

It is a letter from Charles Penrose, brother of the late Boies Penrose, Republican "boss" of Pennsylvania. Charles Penrose is thanking the president of the National Electric Light Association for sending him an Omaha editorial attacking Governor Pinchot's water-power plans.

Mr. Penrose will see that this editorial "gets to fruitful spots in Pennsylvania"; that is, he will see that it is published in Pennsylvania newspapers.

Penrose sends a copy of his letter to Maj. J. S. S. Richardson, who until June of this year was director of the Pennsylvania Public Service Information Committee, the Pennsylvania State propaganda organization. From this job he was last June promoted to be publicity director of the national power lobby.

Very likely Richardson helped Penrose get the anti-Pinchot editorial "to fruitful spots." The present Trade Commission investigation has revealed a letter written to Richardson by the president of the New Jersey Gas Association, and reproduced in facsimile in this newspaper yesterday morning, giving the names of New Jersey newspapers to which Richardson was to send "some of the editorials which are furnished by your bureau."

Another letter to Richardson, disclosed by the Federal Trade Commission, is one complimenting him on the publication of anti-Pinchot editorial material on the editorial page of the Philadelphia Public Ledger. C. R. Stull, of the investment department, American Gas Co., wrote Richardson in August, 1925:

"I want to compliment you on getting this material together as you did, and further for your ability in have it appear in the Ledger in the form which this issue carried it."

Before holding the jobs with the Pennsylvania and national power lobbies, Major Richardson was city editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Mr. NORRIS. There was offered in evidence before the Federal Trade Commission a vast amount of correspondence. It would be interesting, if we had the time, to read all of the correspondence that has been taking place between the officials of the great Water Power and Electric Trusts. But here is a letter dated January 22, 1925, offered in evidence, written on the letterhead of the Philadelphia Co., Pittsburgh, Pa. The letter is as follows:

[Exhibit No. 1192]

PHILADELPHIA CO.,
Pittsburgh, Pa., January 22, 1925.

Mr. J. S. S. RICHARDSON,
Director Pennsylvania Public Service Information Committee,
930 City Center Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR MR. RICHARDSON: At the meeting to-day of the western Pennsylvania executive committee of the Pennsylvania Public Service Information Committee we discussed the résumé of analysis made by the Illinois Committee on Public Utility Information of the accredited textbooks used in the regular courses of the Illinois public schools relative to their treatment of public utility problems. We were astonished at some of the statements to be found in these textbooks. No doubt the books in our own State are much the same.

Mr. Shearer, of Altoona, advised us that the Electric Association had this matter in hand and was making an investigation of Pennsylvania textbooks, and that he would send us a list of the books. Everyone was very much interested. It would seem that here is something that our committee might take a real interest in and see where we could help.

The thought occurs to me that the reason why so many educators are more or less hostile to big business is in many cases due to the fact that they themselves are not successful in a business way. There ought to be some way in which educators could be better paid. It would certainly help to cure at least some of their mental bias.

The same thought has come to me in regard to ministers, who are generally unfairly critical of corporations, including public-service companies. However, this is going pretty far afield, but nevertheless I believe that leaders in our business life could well consider the advisability of giving some real attention to the economic welfare of educators and others who are largely responsible for training the minds of our children.

As I write, the final thought comes to me in regard to the textbook matter—would it not be possible for some of our men to approach the large publishers of textbooks and produce some quick results in clearing up the situation?

We were very sorry to miss you, and hope to see you at the next meeting.

Very truly yours,

A. W. ROBERTSON.

That letter was answered on January 24. The answer reads as follows:

JANUARY 24, 1925.

Mr. A. W. ROBERTSON,
Vice President and General Attorney Philadelphia Co.,
Pittsburgh, Pa.

MY DEAR MR. ROBERTSON: Apparently I had overlooked informing you that for the past three months this bureau has been engaged in making an analysis of textbooks used in the schools of Pennsylvania. The survey is nearly three-quarters complete, and should be finished very soon.

We have encountered obstacles in this State which, I am informed, do not exist in other States. For instance, each district superintendent in Pennsylvania appears to have carte blanche in selecting such textbooks as he deems proper. Consequently we have had to cover much ground. The returns show that several unwholesome textbooks are being used.

I was very glad to note your expressions relating to the underpayment of teachers. If the utility companies, in a discreet way, could foster a movement for adequate remuneration of teaching personnel in our public schools, I am convinced good results could come. The reason some of those superintendents approve the use of so-called Government and municipal ownership propaganda in textbooks is the usual reason for indorsing such stuff. They are sour. Their outlook is distorted and their judgment warped through personal disappointment.

That is true also of some denominational ministers, though not to the same extent.

I regret my inability to attend your meeting, and assure you I shall make strident efforts next month.

Very truly yours,

J. S. S. RICHARDSON.

Here is a letter that was offered in evidence, dated January 21, 1925, directed to Mr. Aylesworth, managing director of the National Electric Light Association:

[Exhibit No. 954]

JANUARY 21, 1925.

Mr. H. H. AYLESWORTH,
Managing Director National Electric Light Association,
29 West Thirty-ninth Street, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. AYLESWORTH: I have not replied to your wire relating to the Chicago meeting of the 28th and 29th, as Mr. Oxley assured me personally he would list me among the starters.

By the way, do you desire an itemized bill of my expenses incurred in preparing the article on the Smithsonian Institution Niagara monograph and unloading it in Washington?

With sincere personal regards,

Yours very truly,

J. S. S. RICHARDSON, Director.

Here is a letter signed by Samuel S. Wyer, who is probably the man who was the author of this article referred to in the leter I have just read. This is written to Mr. Richardson, and reads:

[Exhibit No. 958]

MUSCLE SHOALS, June 4, 1925.

Mr. J. S. S. RICHARDSON,
Director Pennsylvania Public Service Information Committee,
930 City Center Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR SIR: I assume you have received the newspaper story on my Muscle Shoals paper to be released June 7, which Mr. Oxley has arranged to send out.

I understand that Mr. Oxley has also arranged to send a copy of the reprint direct to each Member of the incoming Congress in addition to all of the daily newspapers in the United States. It has occurred to me that some live newspaper man could write a most interesting Muscle Shoals symposium by getting in touch with leading Members of Congress and get an expression from them regarding the Muscle Shoals situation after they have read the report. Furthermore, I believe that such a program would be of very great service in securing a wider diffusion of this information—

He is talking about his own pamphlet, which he sent out—

The electric industry to-day is very much under fire primarily because of the misinformation on Muscle Shoals, and one of the most effective ways of righting public opinions will be to show the insignificance of Muscle Shoals and, therefore, the needless fears from the fictitious Power Trust.

If this suggestion appeals to you and you can do anything with it, then merely act along the lines indicated by your own judgment.

I am inclosing four reprints that you might want to use with local newspapers.

Yours truly,

SAMUEL S. WYER.

Samuel S. Wyer is the same man who has figured in other exhibits offered in evidence. He is the same man who several years ago this trust sent over to Canada. He went over there and with many false pretenses he secured information and gave out misinformation to the people of the United States, all in the name of the Smithsonian Institution in the United States, and under the theory that he was acting for it. I exposed that fraud in the Senate shortly after it occurred and put into the RECORD at that time, two or three years ago, the letter of reply written by Sir Adam Beck. It seemed to me then, it still seems to me, that those in charge of the Smithsonian Institution were conniving with this Water Power Trust through the instrumentality of this Wyer to put out misinformation to the people of the United States under the guise that it was scientific information coming from the Smithsonian Institution. I said then that the head of such an institution who would permit anyone in the name of the institution to participate, even though he might believe he was on the right side, in an activity of that kind, misrepresenting a friendly nation, ought to have been removed from the institution. This bears out that I was right at that time. He ought to have been removed for thus bringing the name of a great institution into disrepute in behalf of the Power Trust in a disreputable way, without letting the people of the country know that this man was paid by the Power Trust for the efforts he was making. This letter shows what a willing tool this man was of the Power Trust.

I have only a few minutes left, and I think I will be justified in reading a letter from my own State that was offered in evidence before the Federal Trade Commission. This letter is dated January 28, 1926. It is written on the letterhead of the Nebraska Power Co., which is a concern affiliated with the trust. It was written to Mr. R. V. Prather, secretary-treasurer Great Lakes division, National Electric Light Association, 205 Illinois Mine Workers' Building, Springfield, Ill. It is as follows:

[Exhibit No. 343]

NEBRASKA POWER CO.,
Omaha, Nebr., June 28, 1926.

Mr. R. V. PRATHER, Secretary-Treasurer,
Great Lakes Division, National Electric Light Association,
205 Illinois Mine Workers Building, Springfield, Ill.

DEAR MR. PRATHER: I wish to thank you for your letter of June 22 for the proceedings of your last meeting, which are both very interesting, indeed. You have a great division and are doing splendid work.

As you say, you are fortunate in having several large companies who can spare men to do the work. We are in rather sparsely settled territory and find it hard to get anything of real value done.

You very kindly requested me to ask any questions which came to my mind. At this time I am particularly interested in public-utility information work. In Nebraska we have a newspaper man in charge of this work, but about all we are doing is putting out a weekly bulletin to all the newspapers in the State. We find that a certain proportion of this material is used by the country papers, although not as large a proportion as we would like.

So they are sending to every newspaper in the State their bulletins, their side of the controversy, and I presume the readers of those papers, if they read the articles, have no information that they are coming from the Water Power Trust.

It would appear from your proceedings as if you are doing considerable work among the schools in your area. We receive reports from your public-speaking activities and know that they are very extensive.

I would be pleased to know if there are any other activities engaged in by the utility-information committee, and would also be glad to know what you do with regard to school work.

They are trying to get ready to go after the school children of Nebraska.

Any pamphlets you have which have been distributed among the schools of your district would be appreciated.

We feel that here in Nebraska there is a fertile field for work in the State which produces a HOWELL and a NORRIS. We feel that this work in the past has not been done, and we are particularly anxious to get any information we can about what a public-utility information committee could do in addition to sending out the weekly bulletins.

I call the attention of my colleague to the fact that—

They have him on the list,
And they're sure he won't be missed.

Thanking you for your courtesy in supplying the information already given and trusting that we are not troubling you too much in asking for this further information, we are

Yours very truly,

MACKIMON.

So, Mr. President, if we would follow the evidence, we would find there is no locality in the United States that is being missed by this great corporation, and everywhere it is developing, so far as anything in that line has developed at all, that they are starting with the children in the schools, they are putting the poison into the minds of the growing children, they are doing it under a deceptive practice, they are doing it without letting the children or the parents of the children know that they are getting information from men whose reputations may be established in the communities, but they are secretly drawing pay from this great trust.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HOWELL. I would like to ask my colleague if there is any evidence indicating that Mr. Wyer was paid by the electrical interests of this country for the pamphlet that was issued under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; it was paid for by the National Electric Light Association. I do not think that is disputed. He was paid, as some other evidence has already developed, for other work he did in Ohio, either directly by the Electric Light Association or some one of the corporations connected with that organization.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR WILLIS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, the clerk will read the special order.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Friday, May 11, at 3 o'clock p. m., be set aside for memorial addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS, late a Senator from the State of Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions which I send to the desk be read and adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 231) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS, late a Senator from the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay tribute to his high character and distinguished public service.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to his memory the Senate at the conclusion of these exercises shall stand in recess.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, on such sad occasions as will mark this hour it is very difficult for one who has been very closely associated with our departed friend to utter what is in his heart, and I do not intend to speak at any length whatever.

I knew Senator WILLIS probably as intimately as anyone outside of his own family would know him. I learned to love him when he first came to the university in which I was at that time a teacher. He was not only in my classes, but he studied his Latin under Mrs. Fess, who was also a teacher in the university. That brought him into close intimate relationship with our family. He frequently came to the home, and later on, with two other students who were quite favorites of ours, was a frequent visitor not only at the home but at the table. I learned to know him very intimately and grew into a very high appreciation of his qualities.

When we analyze characters of his sort, quite naturally we look into what he received from his ancestry and also from his associations with books and friends. From that source of judgment, Senator WILLIS was rich in promise. We find that the Willis family dates back in America as far as 1630, only 10 years after the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. I also note that one of his ancestry owned the property which has been so distinguished by the literature of a great poet in which he christened Wayside Inn. One of the Willis ancestry owned all the property surrounding this particular locality. An ancestor of the Senator built the famous Wayside Inn. The grandmother of the Senator lived there and was married in that famous hostelry. In the famous inn to-day has been placed the furniture by a brother of the Senator, who had collected it in other days and later returned it where it now is.

Senator WILLIS came from an unusually patriotic stock. The father and mother, caught up in the excitement of the movement west, and especially in that stimulating era of 1849, started west and got as far as Kansas in 1850, and, because of illness, they in time returned and took up their permanent residence in Ohio. While in the West the Senator's father fell under the influence of the leadership of Abraham Lincoln when he attended some of the famous debates between Lincoln and Douglas, and became later one of the ardent advocates of the war President. I am of opinion that this background will largely explain a certain type of thought that dominated Senator WILLIS throughout his public life.

I recognized, as soon as an opportunity was given to test him as a pupil, that he was one of the brightest that has come to the university. The one subject which appealed to him most was history. Later on he specialized in that subject together with the kindred subject of political science. He was all eyes and ears for anything of a political nature. The literary societies of the college gave him a forum for his talent, that of oratory. Senator WILLIS was a very clear-headed thinker, and I sometimes think in his frequent addresses that he spoke often without the preparation that he was so capable of giving any subject which he might attack.

Senator WILLIS became one of the most popular men of the college, and on the day of his graduation was made a member of the faculty. I was very closely associated with him in that when I left the university he became my successor, taking up the work that I left. Soon after I had gone he entered the political field. He had been elected to the State legislature, where he added to his record laws that reflected credit upon a constructive mind. He was later promoted to membership in the lower House of Congress. When I came to Congress in 1913 I found my former pupil there to greet me. When I walked down the aisle to take the oath of office I was honored by being accompanied by him to the dais of the Chamber.

After two terms in the House, where he had been very active upon many lines of legislation, he was promoted to the governorship of our State in 1914. Later on he was elected to this body. When I was elected in 1922 I was greeted at the door here by my former pupil, Senator WILLIS, and was accompanied down the aisle by him. He said to me, "The one thing that I wish could happen would be that our old friend, Doctor Lehr," the president of the college which opened its doors to him and thousands of others, "could be alive and see his two boys walk down the aisle of the United States Senate together."

I know very few men who have the lofty ambition to achieve in public life, as did Senator WILLIS. He had so completely devoted himself to public service that at times he was criticized because, it was said, he was doing nothing except serving the public. I recognized that his ambition from the beginning was to be a public servant, and it was perfectly natural, with the background this man had, with the possibilities of the future in a Republic like ours, that he should have an ambition, if the way were opened, to pass from this body to even a higher promotion.

Senator WILLIS was known in his day as one of the best political speakers we ever had in our political history. I need not mention incidents which are historic that would indicate his power. Two or three stand out and will stand alone in the political history of our country. Suffice it to say that he was a very ready speaker, having received the training in his college career. He was a keen thinker, spoke often extemporaneously, and was unusually versatile and fluent. He had a wonderful speaking voice that would immediately command attention either in or out of doors, no matter what size the audience.

Those of us who knew Senator WILLIS best knew his fine personality. I do not think that he had any real enemy anywhere. Those who might differ from him, either in principle or in method, always recognized that he was one of the most lovable characters we ever had in public life. In that way he gripped the public. He probably knew more people whom he could call by name in our State than anybody living to-day, and I doubt whether there was anybody in the past who was his superior in that respect. When he would meet a friend and slap him on the shoulder, sometimes it would provoke a criticism, but it was not the basis for criticism, because that was the heart of FRANK B. WILLIS. It was the sincere expression of his attitude toward friends. To meet him was to like him. To know him was to love him. That can be attested by every person who was associated with him here in public life. He was a genuinely good man.

Mr. President, it seems difficult to explain that one so young, so full of promise, with such conditions of health, with such laudable ambitions, should pass on as did our lamented friend. But if we could choose the way that we were to go, I do not know anything finer than to die with the harness on, in the midst of one's friends who had gathered about to express their great love and gratitude and aspiration for his possibilities, as was the case of our lamented friend. To know him was to love him and the time will never come when we will forget the pleasing personality and the charming individuality of the much-beloved FRANK B. WILLIS, of Ohio.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the State of Ohio has furnished this body with many leaders in legislative science and in political philosophy. Among them we find Jeremiah Morrow, prominent in the affairs of Ohio and the Nation, governor and Congressman; William Allen Trimble, military commander, wounded and decorated at Fort Erie; Ethan Allen Brown, law student under Alexander Hamilton, member of the State supreme court, head of the State government; William Henry Harrison, hero of Tippecanoe, diplomat, President of the United States; Thomas Ewing, Secretary of the Treasury under President William Henry Harrison, Secretary of the Interior under President Taylor, delegate to the peace congress which endeavored to avert the Civil War, tendered the Secretaryship of War by President Johnson, refused confirmation by the Senate; Thomas Corwin, master of humor and of eloquence, notable for utterances that have become a part of our permanent literature; Salmon P. Chase, one of the great figures of the Civil War era, author with Giddings of what has been termed the first proclamation of Republican Party doctrine, writer of a standard edition of the annotated laws of Ohio, drafter of the Liberty platform of 1843, the Liberty address of 1845, and of the declaration of principles of the Free Soil Party, celebrated lawyer, Secretary of the Treasury in Lincoln's war Cabinet and father of the national banking system, Chief Justice of the United States, rendering landmark opinions, in one of which he described the Nation as an indestructible union of indestructible States; John Sherman, 30 years a Senator, Secretary of the Treasury and Secretary of State, influential in party councils, molder of the Government's financial policies in war and reconstruction, one of the principal framers of the Sherman Antitrust Act of 1890; Allen G. Thurman, distinguished for half a century in both law and politics, associate and chief justice of the State's highest legal tribunal, important aspirant for the Presidency; Stanley Matthews, noted jurist, potent in political management and legal disputations of four decades, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States; George Hunt Pendleton, Democrat in the National House of Representatives during the Civil War, scholar, practitioner of the law, railroad president, originator of the initial civil service act, the Pendleton Act of 1883; Warren Harding, the only man in our history elected President while a Member of the Senate.

FRANK B. WILLIS was qualified by nature, training, and experience for a conspicuous place in this succession. Equipped with a university education, member of a university faculty, member of the bar, twice a member of the Ohio General Assembly, Representative in the National House for two terms, Governor of Ohio for two years, he came into the Senate already trained for its multifold demands, with a national standing already his. Also he was already recognized as one of the most powerful advocates of prohibition in the United States.

In committees and on the floor his activities were intense and varied. In fact, they attained such character and volume as to become a peril to his health, vigorous as he usually was. His addresses and discussions in the Senate related to hundreds of subjects, covering almost the entire range of national jurisdiction and concern. He was skilled in the presentation of measures and in conducting them through parliamentary channels. He was especially active in securing substantial additions to the Volstead Act, among them the measures known popularly as the Willis antibeer bill.

His first assignment to committees included Commerce and Territories, and these he held throughout his service, becoming chairman of the latter. In connection with the former he took a deep interest in the Shipping Board, the merchant marine, the improvement of rivers and harbors, the promotion of the foreign commerce service. His work on the Committee on Territories made him familiar with the needs and aspirations of their peoples. He sponsored a number of measures for their advancement. From the Senate and House of Representatives of Porto Rico came official expressions of grief over his death, the house resolution referring to him as Porto Rico's kind and distinguished friend.

Soon after his entry here he became a member of the Committee on Immigration and was one of the chief developers and advocates of legislation regarding entrants from abroad which set up new safeguards for the standards and traditions of our country. Later he reached that aristocrat of committees, Foreign Relations, and became one of the most diligent students, one of the most earnest defenders, of the foreign policies of his party. He spoke with characteristic aggressiveness and thoroughness on the Colombian treaty, naval disarmament, the treaty of peace with Germany, our relations with Haiti and San Domingo, the Isle of Pines, the Near East, the foreign-debt settlements, the World Court, Central American affairs, Nicaragua, and Mexico.

Among other subjects on which he spoke and labored were prohibition, welfare of ex-service men, Federal reserve system, farm relief, national resources, particularly forestation, the tariff, internal tax revision, Muscle Shoals, good roads, postal rates and salaries, commercial and military aviation, cooperative marketing, radio control, railway-labor disputes, the Oldroyd collection of Lincoln relics, compensation for quarantine losses, oil pollution of navigable waters, seasonal coal rates, agricultural diversification, and industrial conditions.

Such is a meager outline of the amazing labors he crowded into the brief space of his seven years and two months in the United States Senate. Impressive in stature, attractive in personality, tireless in research, able, courageous, resourceful; combining with these attributes a boldness, a directness, and a resonance of expression, it is not strange that he loomed large in the Nation's life as orator and statesman. On the lecture platform and as a speaker for patriotic and historic occasions he was in constant demand outside the Senate. Naturally his time and strength were taxed to the breaking point. When to all this was added the strain of his candidacy for President, a distinction that came to him as the logical outgrowth of his career, the burden was too colossal even for his unusual strength. With the plaudits of the people of his home city ringing about him and as he was about to speak before them of his claims to the loftiest position in our political system dissolution suddenly came.

Viewing his life as a whole, we may well conclude that numerous as were the subjects with which he dealt, diversified as were the interests he touched, honorable and exalted as were his public capacities, the dominant feature was his devotion to prohibition. For his work in behalf of prohibition he will be best remembered and most loved. With that momentous cause, that magnificent reform, he was most intimately associated in the public estimation and will be most signally identified in history. From the early contests on local option to the struggles in the States and in the Nation, he was ever at the front for prohibition, a favorite among its hosts, a terror to its adversaries. How admirable such an existence! How glorious to be so catalogued! I would rather be FRANK WILLIS and take to the assizes of eternity the record of a life whose best efforts had been expended against the traffic in intoxicating liquor than to be the monarch of the earth with all its treasure, its glitter, and its pomp at my command.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, to-day our thoughts turn to resignation and reverence as we meet to honor FRANK B. WILLIS with the tribute of our praise. In recollection of when he was here moving among us, beautiful unpainted pictures appear in the mind of how much sweeter life is that he lived. He was a friend, a friend worthy of the name in the best sense of the word, and I would be false to my deepest emotions if I failed to bring the love of my heart and embalm it in his memory to-day.

The warm, red blood of the Anglo-Saxon flowing and commingling with the life currents of other peoples has in all history produced men to stir with quickening speech, to thrill with ecstatic song, to die with superb daring, to live in truth for their loves and in faith for their friends, and with it all to wear a sun smile in their souls that carries warmth and cheer wherever it beams. This was the blood from which FRANK B. WILLIS sprung, and eminently did he illustrate its noblest traits. He had excellent common sense. He was definite in his purposes. He believed in what was just. He never descended to vindictiveness, so often the weapon of the prejudiced and the insincere. He was not a man of expediency, substituting tact for courage; nor did his affection for his friends find its origin in dependence. It was the impulse rather of a heart as tender as it was fearless and true, and his gracious manner and winning smile gained for him the confidence and the esteem of all who knew him. It is not the length of an association that gives it value but the lifelong impression it makes and the good that comes from it.

Death always preaches an impressive sermon and warningly teaches us what shadows we are and what shadows we pursue. We understand death for the first time when it lays its immortal hand upon those we love. We know little of each other, even under conditions of the greatest intimacy. We mingle with men who can never know us and whom we can never know. Our real world is within ourselves, secret chambers to which no one carries a key. Across its portals none may ever step except to catch the imperfect reflections of another soul—the twilight that faintly heralds the glow of the approaching dawn.

FRANK B. WILLIS was typically human—so true and so real. He was untaught to feign. He was wedded to the principles and the practices of self-trust and strong and great in all that should become a man. He saw things straight as a ray of light. He, too, had heard the lions roar, but he knew no fear except the fear of doing wrong. In his real world he wore the breastplate of untainted candor. He believed that the essential element in all life is conduct and that conduct springs from what we are taught, what we cling to, what we yearn for in faith and resolution. He lived the truth that it is not life that matters but the valor we bring to it, the spirit that enables us to do the best we can just when and where we are.

Every environment produces its type, every age its men. In America birth has neither given the rank nor determined the station. Every path leading to a goal has been free to every foot. Our great and worthy men have risen by their innate qualities and powers. Our departed friend demonstrated that it is the thoughts that come from the brain and the heart that move us to action. And as he came and went among us he always sought the contests of struggle and toil, because he realized that all man can do is to turn and face the battle, just as we now know that in the hour of pain and sorrow—

> Memory is the only friend
> That grief can call her own.

Turning to where man meets man in the absorbing activities of life, where can we go or to whom can we point as a truer example of American manhood than Senator WILLIS? No storm of passion ever unbalanced him; and we who knew him realized that he possessed a standard of truth which no ambition could ever cause him to violate. He lived the best of all lives, because he lost self in the service of others. He knew that no man ever makes a friend who has never made a foe. I can never forget him, Mr. President; he was such a sturdy, kindly, rugged man—divine with all the divinities.

After all is said and all is done, when the play is over and the player gone, the spirit of duty remains; not success for its own sake, but the doing justice between man and man, our brother and the stranger within our gates.

There is nothing heroic in the discharge of duty. The incentive is often lacking, and at times it will cost us the admiration and the respect we crave; but if we are content with our part and our share in common hope, and responsive to the highest promptings, then we will the best express, as FRANK WILLIS always did, the ideals of the race and the Nation. He lived a friend of man in that mystic house by the side of the road where all the world is kin. No truer eulogy can be paid his name and his fame than is contained in the words "death" and "duty."

> Dead at the post of duty.
> What finer eulogy—
> All the boast of pomp and glory seem but idle breath
> Beside the calm, quiet dignity of death,
> Where death and duty meet,
> Is found solution most complete
> Of all life's problems; 'tis enough—
> Dead at the post.

Death always leaves in its train the thought that he who was taken was fitted for a higher destiny and for grander achievements. Such occasions always seem like admonitions. To-day our brother sleeps. It is we who speak. To-morrow our lips may be silent and other voices speak as we are doing now. The dread moments are sure to come, when the happiness of a lifetime melts away in one sad moment. Yes; when the pale messenger lays his hand upon an accomplished life, a life which has rounded out the years allotted to human endeavor; when those years have been occupied and filled with usefulness, rewarded by success, and crowned with love and gratitude; yes; when a good man, having performed the trusts and discharged the duties of life, lies down calmly and peacefully to his final repose we may grieve, but we can not complain. The tears of deep affection can not be kept back, but the voice of reason is hushed.

To complain at the close of such a life as FRANK B. WILLIS lived is to complain that the ripened fruit drops from the overloaded bough and that the golden harvest waits for the sickle. To complain under such circumstances is to reprove the Creator because He did not make man immortal on the earth. We can not understand, and here we shall never know.

It is the temporal conception of life that so profoundly disturbs mankind. Three thousand years of profound thought, grave contemplation, philosophy, and religion, and we have advanced no nearer the solution of the problem. We must not despair. This is a world in the making. We must find hope in growth, faith in conscience, courage in knowledge, and inspiration in the listening planets and the sentinel stars. We can do this only as FRANK B. WILLIS did it, by keeping our hearts and our hands clean.

What a comfort it is to have had him with us, and to have heard, as we hear now, the echo of his thrilling and convincing voice! What a consolation it is that where he was known, respected, and loved, undaunted and unafraid, he gladdened the everlasting God by lying down to his dreamless sleep in the unmolested hope of a glorious immortality!

> How wonderful is death!
> Death and his brother sleep.

But he is not dead. He lives in his example and his influence. He lives in the splendor of his deeds. He lives in the hearts he left behind. He will live in the traditions that pass from generation to generation and from age to age. He has just wandered over the boundary, there to illuminate and irradiate the pathway of mankind. His sunset has come, but we believe it was a sunrise that will never again set.

We have gratitude, honor, pride, and affection, but no blinding tears for such a man as he. We should save our tears for those who have failed, for those who have fainted by the wayside; not for those who have finished the journey without a spot or a blemish on their escutcheon.

This we know, that in the death of Senator FRANK B. WILLIS, whose career and whose services we commemorate to-day, an earnest, active intellect is stilled; that just as he harkened to the call of duty, God's finger touched him, and he slept; beckoned him away from all the splendid, majestic achievements and beauties of life, from love and care and sorrow, to awaken in eternity free from grief and pain. He is safe without panegyric. No; he is not dead. The living are the only dead.

The dead live never more to die; and as we bid him a gracious, a sorrowful, yes, a lingering good-by, let us think of him as John o' the Mountains:

> John o' the Mountains, wonderful John,
> Is past the summit and traveling on;
> The turn of the trail on the mountain side,
> A smile and "Hail" where the glaciers slide.
> A streak of red where the condors ride,
> And John is over the Great Divide.
>
> John o' the Mountains camps to-day
> On a level spot by the Milky Way;
> And God is telling him how he rolled
> The smoking earth from the iron mold,
> And hammered the mountains till they were cold,
> And planted the redwood trees of old.
>
> And John o' the Mountains says: "I know.
> And I wanted to grapple the hand o' you;
> And now we're sure to be friends and chums,
> And camp together till chaos comes."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, school days come back to me this afternoon. I find my feelings strangely stirred. The old university rises up before me. Back there was my dear friend, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], who is with us to-day. There also was dear old "Prexy" Lehr, the president of the university. There, too, was this great, big, fine, wholesome young man who had recently become a member of the faculty and whose memory we honor to-day.

How loyal he remained to the old university throughout the years, ever ready to assist in all its worthy undertakings!

For more than a quarter of a century I enjoyed the intimate friendship of FRANK B. WILLIS, and what a loyal friend he was!

Throughout his distinguished career, I have followed him with the greatest admiration and the most profound respect.

To-day, on this solemn occasion, I go back in memory to the first time I ever saw him. It was in 1901. He was a teacher at Ohio Northern University in Ada, Ohio, and I was a student. Big in body and mind, popular with faculty and student body alike, wholesome, magnanimous, he could only be an inspiration to all who came in contact with him.

In those days, as throughout his life, he was universally admired, and with infinite patience he gave of his talent and his genius to the youth of the land. From every State in the Union and from most countries of the earth they came there for light, and none left the university without having been influenced tremendously, and for good, by the nobility of character of FRANK B. WILLIS.

Small wonder that in the years which followed those who had known him in college days rallied unanimously to his support!

His entire life was given to the public service. He was the most industrious man I have ever known. "Toiling upward in the night," he fitted himself for the law, and in 1906 was admitted to the bar in Ohio, where he continued to be an honored member to the day of his death.

We who loved him watched his rapid rise in public life. It seemed his people delighted to do him honor. As their representative he served with distinction in the seventy-fourth and seventy-fifth general assemblies of his native State. Here, indeed, his service was so outstanding that he was promoted to the National House of Representatives, where he was an honored Member during the Sixty-second and Sixty-third Congresses.

That his untiring efforts in behalf of the people of Ohio and the Nation were fully appreciated by the folks at home is attested by the fact that he was triumphantly elected to the office of governor while in the House, and resigned his seat there in January, 1915, to become the chief executive of the State of Ohio.

Throughout these years we who had known him in college days looked on with admiration and applauded.

As Governor of Ohio his courage and force of character were splendidly tested, and the people found him in the forefront and on the right side of every great moral issue.

From this high office to the Senate of the United States was but a logical step and none was surprised to see him overwhelmingly triumphant in both nomination and election.

Coming to the Senate in January, 1921, when his friend and neighbor, Warren G. Harding, became President of the United States, he served with great distinction until the day of his tragic death.

What a wholesome influence he wielded in this body! Genial, companionable, helpful, and withal tremendously able, he was a powerful moral force in the Government of the United States.

Senator WILLIS was a righteous man. He had moral stamina and his counsel was good. He was an ideal public servant who could never be stampeded from what he conceived to be his line of duty.

And now, in the prime of life, he is stricken down. The ways of the Infinite are inscrutable, but we know that He doeth all things well.

The living are the only dead, the dead live never more to die.

FRANK B. WILLIS, in the flesh, has departed this life but his gentle spirit and his great influence for good go on forever. He has passed on, out into the silence and has taken on the robes of immortality.

In the fact that all men speak well of him, that he was a Christian gentleman who rendered outstanding patriotic service to his country and his people throughout his life, he has left a priceless heritage to his loved ones.

America was proud of him and every State in the Union shares the grief of Ohio in the loss of her distinguished son.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish that I might pay suitable tribute to the memory of the late Senator FRANK B. WILLIS, of Ohio. Words do not enable me to do so. A certain physical disability makes it necessary for me to speak but briefly.

Senator WILLIS was a strong man physically. He had all the elements of physical strength which make death all the more difficult to realize. We have always admired strength, even physical strength, since the earlier days, when the crude cave man stood at the doorway of his cave and, with stone-pointed weapons, defended the woman whom his savage heart loved, the children she had borne him. We have always admired fine physical strength and courage.

Our race is no exception. We have admired physical strength, the thing that we call physical courage, and that quality which we call courage which consists of a commingling of both the mind and the heart with the physical strength of the body to endure. As a nation we have admired strength and courage throughout our history, from that hour when Betsey Ross first pieced together the colors in our flag, to the last battle in the last war in which our sons were engaged.

Senator WILLIS was a man of superb physical strength. He was a man of fine mental strength. He was a man of great vigor of intellect. He was a man of infinite good nature and infinite good will.

He spoke often in this body. He spoke upon many occasions and upon many public questions. It would be most difficult to recall a single sentence from his lips which impugned or questioned the motive of any man.

He did not agree with the opinions of men, he differed from their views, he was willing to take his side upon issues, and not one of his colleagues can recall when he failed to take his position upon any question of moment or of importance, whether we agreed or disagreed with the position taken by him.

He fell in the very prime of his life. In action he passed away. It is most difficult for all of us, for any of us, to realize that he has gone. It seems strange that a man of such strong physique, such robust mental vigor, such intense activity, such infinite good will and good faith, should pass away in action in the prime of life. We do not yet realize it. His going serves to remind us again and again that in the midst of life we are in death.

It is difficult to appraise men here, Mr. President. It is difficult to estimate them at their true value. Suffice it to say that whatever may be our judgments in this body, engaged as we are in the consideration of public questions of great moment, it is hardly probable that any one of us comes here who does not possess in some marked degree the elements of human greatness and strength.

In this body the man who does not possess some element of strength, some virtue of mind or soul, some willingness and capacity to work and to labor will scarcely attract the attention of his neighbors about him. Senator WILLIS had a zeal for his work. I think that no one of his colleagues would question that statement. He was always industrious, he was always alert, he was always active, and he seemed to have a zeal for public service. It therefore is not strange when we read that he was a representative in his State legislature, a Member of the other House of Congress, a governor of his State, and a United States Senator from his State.

Certainly there was no abatement of his energy in the study of public questions; certainly there was no slackening of the pace in his prosecution of his duties as a Senator from his State. Back in his State at the time of his death he was engaged in an ardent campaign. He was still carrying forward with that same physical strength and mental vigor so characteristic of him in this body.

It would be untrue to say, and no occasion, it seems, would demand a statement inconsistent with the facts, that Senator WILLIS never made mistakes upon public questions. That we can always occupy the right position upon great questions which disturb the thought of the people is scarcely to be hoped. But whether he was right or wrong his colleagues here knew his position. He stated his position with force and with energy. He was prepared to maintain his position and did maintain it upon every important question to which he gave his thought and attention.

He served his State well in this body. He was alert in the interest of his immediate constituents. But his interest and his sympathy and his efforts were not confined to Ohio. He linked his name with the great causes which have inspired men of this generation in America. He took his side upon a great question, and there was never any doubt about his loyalty and devotion to the side on which he cast his affections. He was a man of loftiest patriotism. He possessed the virtues common to all men of greatness. He possessed a certain fine strength, a certain strong and charming personality, a certain mental and moral vigor that distinguished him even in this body in a day of men of great strength and vigor.

On occasions like this, Mr. President, we regret that we have not the words to pay suitable tribute, but those of us who were privileged to associate with the figures that have left their impress upon this body and upon the history of this time may pay genuine and sincere tribute to one such, who in due season, has been called away.

Mr. LOCHER. Mr. President, as the successor of him whom we honor to-day, I rise to add, in my humble way, an expression of deep admiration for one of Ohio's best loved sons.

Senator FRANK B. WILLIS was a man of the people. He was their leader, and it was their pleasure to confide in him, to trust him, and to honor him. I honor his memory both as a brother Ohioan and as a Member of this body, where his ability as a statesman is fully recognized.

Since the sudden and tragic passing of Senator WILLIS, I more clearly understand the words of Seneca, who said, "All that lies between the cradle and the grave is uncertain." Who in this assemblage to-day believed for one moment that when the departed colleague went forth to seek the highest honor within the gift of his party he would not return again, victorious, perhaps, but in any event he would return the robust, confident, and energetic personality that he was? His was a tragedy of premature death. But if God, in His wisdom, saw fit to beckon Senator WILLIS from the strife and toil of things earthly to a greater, fuller reward, how fitting it was that his last hours should be spent with those whom he loved and who loved him.

Mr. President, I have said that FRANK WILLIS was a man of the people. His early life in Delaware County, where he was born December 28, 1871, was not unlike the childhood days of other illustrious sons of Ohio. After obtaining an elementary education in the common schools of the county, he sought the wealth and satisfaction of a higher education at Ohio Northern University. His alma mater utilized his learning and for several years after graduation he served her as a teacher. During this period he frequently lectured before teacher's gatherings throughout Ohio, and his departure leaves a vacancy in the hearts of many who had received hope and inspiration from him. He was their friend and they were his friends.

Later he was admitted to the bar and set forth to win renown at the polls. After serving two terms in the General Assembly of Ohio, he was twice elected to the National House of Representatives, resigning his seat to become governor of his State, and on January 13, 1921, he became a Member of the United States Senate.

The still recent and still mourned loss of Senator WILLIS presents an opportunity for brief comment on his career. He had an abiding conviction that the application of his time, energy, and talent would produce fairly proportionate results. Conviction and zeal served him as a sustaining force. Politics were never irksome to him. His victories in this realm furnish abundant proof of his popularity, of his affability, of his capacity to make friends easily, and to bind them to him in many ways.

Senator WILLIS was a child of his epoch. It is timely, perhaps, to say a word on the felicitous way in which FRANK WILLIS and Warren Harding complemented and supplemented each other. Each served his native State in the United States Senate. Senator WILLIS, who succeeded Senator Harding, when the latter became President, was energetic, dynamic; President Harding, earnest and devoted. Each was loyal to the other; each was loyal to his friends; each contributed to the other's success; each had a multitude of friends in Ohio who cherish the friendship which only death could sever.

Mr. President, it is unavailing for his friends to speak of what might have been had FRANK WILLIS lived. Verily he had his reward in the hearts of his friends. He fought out well nigh all his battles. His personal character is easily analyzed. Everyone who has intelligently read his life and studied his deeds can not avoid recognizing two outstanding qualities—determination and rectitude. It is needless to eulogize his absolute integrity. To say that he never used his office to betray a trust imposed; that he was never silent when he believed he ought to speak; that suspicion never smirched his name, is to tell his colleagues and his friends that which they already know. The beauty of his pure life overshadows all. If I interpret the psychology of FRANK WILLIS aright, if I apprehend his philosophy of life, I make bold to assert that he would prefer this eulogy:

> His life was devoted to an unending effort to serve those who loved and honored him.

As his successor in this honorable body, which universally mourns his sudden and untimely passing, I say with the poet:

> Early didst thou leave the world, with powers
> Fresh, undiverted to the world without,
> Firm to their mark, not spent in other things,
> Free from the sick fatigue, the languid doubt.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I had not intended to make any remarks on this occasion, but as I have listened to other Senators I have felt impelled to give expression to some of the thoughts that have crowded through my mind.

I was born, reared, and educated in the State of Ohio. I have always kept in closer touch with that State than with any other than my adopted State. I know something of its people and its history. I had heard of Senator WILLIS when I was a boy, long before he had become so noted as he became in later years. I heard of him as a young professor in the normal school at Ada, who had a great future as yet undetermined.

After I had gone to the Northwest I learned of his rise to Congress, and then when I came to the House he became governor of his State, and when I came to the Senate I met him here. I knew him best in my associations with him here, and his robust, earnest personality often made me think of the saying of the Greeks, "Those whom the people love, they place in charge of their city."

There is one of his characteristics I want to mention which impressed me most, namely, his genial nature. I believe that you can best gauge and test the character of a man when you see him in a fight. Then pretense is put aside and the real character stands forth. I have never seen a man fight on this floor with a smile as effectively as did FRANK WILLIS. I have seen him attacked, sometimes abused here, and always he would meet it first with a smile, and then with arguments, plain, direct, and effective, but never personal nor bitter. I have always felt that his hearty handclasp and his broad smile, his friendly voice, and his wholesome attitude on every question were expressive of his great soul and his big heart.

I regretted to see him enter the race for the Presidency, not because I felt he was unworthy of it at all, but because that road is such a broad and steep but dangerous pathway over which so many men pass to political misery or to world fame. And yet it was but natural, coming from the great State of Ohio, that he should turn toward the White House. It is worth recalling again that, just as the great State of Virginia was the pivotal State in the early history of the country which supplied more Presidents than any other State, so the State of Ohio has been the pivotal State of the Union since the Civil War.

Every Republican President who has entered the White House by the votes of the people since the Civil War has come directly from Ohio or been born in Ohio. The only other two Presidents of the Republican Party who entered the White House have entered by way of the Vice Presidency. So I say it was but natural he should turn his attention toward the Presidency; and from the standpoint of integrity, of character, and of ability he was fully fitted to occupy that or any other office.

I have often wondered why the State of Ohio has produced so many notable men in so many different walks of life during the last 75 years, and I was impressed recently in talking with the governor of that State when he said that one of the explanations might be found in the fact that there were more soldiers of the Revolution buried in the State of Ohio than in any other State in the Union; in other words, it was the aggressive, active men of the Revolutionary period who crossed the Allegheny Mountains and settled in the then great Northwest Territory, largely as the result of grants of land that were given them, that caused the population of Ohio to be descended from the best blood of the Colonies. It is but natural, therefore, that such a remarkable galaxy of men and women in every walk of life should come from that great State.

We shall miss FRANK WILLIS. We shall miss him not only here in the Senate and about the Capitol, but we shall miss him in Ohio, and we shall miss him in the public life of the country, because he was a man who had not merely opinions on public questions but he had convictions. Having convictions, he stood for them, he fought for them. He was not concerned so much about the temporary victory or defeat that might come in a contest as he was that he should do his part and make his record clear, so that all who run might read. His life and his work should be an inspiration to the young men of the country and to public men everywhere.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, this is a sad occasion to me. A fine and great American Senator has gone from this august and historic place. I recall his service in the House of Representatives. We served together in that body, and as the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] has said, he resigned his place there to become Governor of Ohio. I remember how happy and cheerful FRANK WILLIS looked when we were telling him good bye as he went away to fill that lofty place in the great Commonwealth of Ohio. He served with distinction as governor, and then came to this body. He merited every political position that he ever held. He filled every one of them with credit to himself and credit to his country. He was a brave fighter, and he always fought in the open. There was nothing hidden about FRANK WILLIS. He was absolutely fearless in the positions which he took, and he never took a position until he felt that he was right, and then well and ably and powerfully did he defend that position.

As the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has said, in the heat of debate in this body Senators frequently indulge in sharp and caustic language born of the deep and intense interest Senators on opposing sides had in the cause being discussed. The fine and genial smile of FRANK WILLIS, which has been spoken of, was a wonderful weapon in debate, but following that smile he had a magnificient ability to argue his cause and he presented it in powerful fashion.

He was a man of deep convictions and high ideals. He was a clean man; his life was without spot or blemish so far as I know, and that is what those who knew him best and loved him best say of him. Senators, a name like that is a noble heritage to leave behind by a man who has been in lofty station, as FRANK WILLIS has been. He died fighting for the things that he had fought for so effectively in the Senate. Duty had called him into a larger field where friends delighted to support him for the highest office within the gift of the American people. He fought against overwhelming odds; he was fighting against forces that spent a vast sum of money to defeat him. I talked with him about these things and he talked to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. He knew what a difficult undertaking it was. Some people advised him not to go into the race for President; his great admirers and friends in Ohio and elsewhere urged him to run. They said "it is your duty." He told me that he felt that it was his duty to carry forward the great principles that he and his friends had fought for, and that he would do so at any cost to him politically or otherwise.

He viewed with alarm the bold declaration that the old barroom forces were coming back into control in the United States. He was an ardent prohibitionist. He was not a crank on the subject, but he was thoroughly convinced that the whisky traffic and the return to the United States of the open barrooms, with all their attendant evils, would do more than anything else to drag down the young manhood of the country and to crush out the hopes and ambitions of bright boys who, if free from that awful influence, would become good and useful citizens. The petitions of the good women of the country who have suffered most from that terrible monster, the open saloon, appealed strongly to and touched deeply the heart of FRANK WILLIS; and when his Republican friends looked with fear and trembling upon the bold announcement that the enemy would bring those evils back and said, "Senator, it is your duty to get out in front and lead this fight for us," he bared his breast to the enemy and led the fight. He did not ask any quarter, but waged an open, effective, and aggressive war; and if he had lived there is no question under the sun about his carrying Ohio, his home State, to the Republican National Convention. The truth is he almost carried it after death had silenced his eloquent tongue.

He was a splendid public servant and a fine and wonderful man. He spread sunshine and good cheer wherever he went. He was outspoken, as I have said. It was not necessary to take a search warrant to find out where FRANK WILLIS stood on public questions, and if the question was one between good morals and bad morals you knew without asking that he was on the side of good morals.

Shakespeare has nobly said:

> Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's,
> Thy God's, and truth's.

FRANK WILLIS was on the side of his country; he was on the side of truth; he was on the side of his God. He fought a good fight; he kept the faith; he died as die the brave—in the forefront of the fight; he never lowered his banner or surrendered his convictions. He did not flee from the enemy.

Immense sums of money and corrupt practices were in evidence in the Ohio campaign against him for the Presidency, but that did not intimidate or deter him for a moment. He was making a triumphant march toward the convention, with his State delegation solidly behind him, when mysterious death came and touched its dreamless slumber to his eyelids, and he fell asleep.

Mr. President, before I sit down I must say a word about her who through all the years of his useful and eventful life was his good angel. Tender, affectionate, and loving, she walked by his side, aiding, comforting, and cheering him to the day of his death. She was with him in his home State when he was at various places in Ohio, when he died amongst those whom he had served and whom he loved so well, and amongst those who loved and honored him. It was a beautiful life that they lived. We resided at the same hotel for years. I admired and esteemed them both greatly. They were devoted, congenial, and happy in their daily life. Senator WILLIS could say truly that she was his good angel.

We have lost a dear friend and a great American statesman has gone. Every man in this body respected and admired FRANK WILLIS. Every Senator here who knew FRANK WILLIS well loved him. The Senate and the country mourn the untimely taking off of this fine American citizen, this devoted public servant, and this splendid Christian statesman.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, as a part of these proceedings, the prayer of the Chaplain of the Senate delivered on April 2, at the first meeting of the Senate after an adjournment upon the news of the death of our departed friend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOCHER in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

"One sweetly solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and o'er;
I am nearer home to-day
Than I've ever been before.

Nearer my Father's house,
Where the many mansions be;
Nearer the great white throne,
Nearer the crystal sea.

Nearer the bound of life,
Where we lay our burdens down;
Nearer leaving the cross,
Nearer gaining the crown.

But lying darkly between,
Winding adown through the night,
Is the silent unknown stream
That leads at last to the light.

Father, be near when my feet
Are slipping over the brink;
For it may be I am nearer home,
Nearer now than I think."

Let us pray. O Almighty God, who art found of those who seek Thee in loneliness, and whose portion is sufficient for the sorrowing souls of Thy children, remember in tender mercy the family and loved ones of him who has now fallen on sleep in the full strength of his glorious manhood. Thou only canst keep our feet from falling and our eyes from tears. Make us, therefore, ever mindful of the time when we shall lie down in the dust; and grant us grace always to live in such a state that we may never be afraid to die; so that, living and dying, we may be Thine, through the merits and satisfaction of Thy Son Christ Jesus, in whose name we offer up this our imperfect prayer. Amen.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a brief character sketch of Senator WILLIS by the one who was more closely associated with him officially than any other person, Charles A. Jones, his secretary for seven years. I ask unanimous consent to have it inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SENATOR FRANK B. WILLIS AS HIS OFFICE ASSOCIATES SAW HIM—TRIBUTE PAID AT THE FUNERAL SERVICES IN GRAY CHAPEL, AT DELAWARE, OHIO, TUESDAY, APRIL 3, 1928

By Charles A. Jones, for 7 years private secretary to the Senator and his associate in political campaigns for 14 years

If I can control the emotions that overwhelm me to-day, there are just a few things I want to say relative to this chief of ours who has gone. I want to speak not only for myself but also for the two Marthas who have typed tens of thousands of his messages to the people of Ohio; to speak for Mr. Tipton, who was his secretary when he was governor, and for Mr. Dodds, who was his secretary when he was in Congress; to speak for that little group who have had the great privilege of living intimately with this man who lies here now at the close of a strenuous life of 30 years, leaving as was so fittingly stated by the Cleveland Plain Dealer in its editorial "A record that calls for no excuses."

The public in general, many men who have been acquainted with him from time to time, know, of course, a great deal about Senator WILLIS. I am not going to try this afternoon to say anything about his public career. All I want to do is to say a few things of a personal nature that I know, that we know, about this man.

You know when men live in an office with a man, when they see him in the early morning hours and in the nighttime, when they see him in the hours of victory and in the hours of defeat, when they see him when the shadows have fallen upon him and when there is triumph in his voice, they know what the public sometimes does not know.

This morning, as the birds began to sing I wondered what I might say to best sum up his life. Leafing through this same little New Testament that I have seen him read hundreds of times, and which I took from his body after he had gone away over here on Friday night, I found these words, and I do not believe that there are anywhere words that sum up more clearly what this man tried to be than these words, which are the only ones of the Beatitudes that are underscored: "Blessed are the pure in heart." That was what Senator WILLIS wanted to be.

I want to say first of all that this man who served supremely never had a servant. There was never anybody in his office who felt that this man wanted him to be a servant.

When I first went to his office in 1921, he called me in one day and said to me substantially this: "Jones, you are new to Washington. Before you have been here very long you will see many people who have become mere clerks, who because they are in a sense employees feel that they can not express to the man with whom they work their real thoughts. I want you to understand that what I ask of you is service and not subservience. Because I am a Senator and you are my secretary does not mean that I shall always be right. I shall sometimes be wrong. When you think I am wrong, I want you to counsel with me. And when the time comes that you can not tell me exactly what you think about things that are important to me, then, I do not want you with me at all." That was the spirit in which Senator WILLIS always carried on.

He himself gave service, but no man or woman ever found him subservient. I saw Senator WILLIS angry very few times. Most of the times when I did see him angry was when somebody came to him and said, "Senator WILLIS, I have 10,000 votes in my pocket. If you do not vote for a certain bill, these 10,000 votes will be cast against you." On an average, a man never got that sentence completed. Senator WILLIS let him know immediately that he would vote for the bill if he thought it was the right bill; but if he thought it was not the right bill, he would not vote for it, votes or no votes.

The Senator, of course, recognized the dignity of his high office. He understood the distinctions of life. He recognized them. But there was no division line when it came to the friendship which he showed to us and which we tried to show to him.

I never saw anything in Senator WILLIS's life any place, any time, that will contradict the statement I am now about to make, that Senator WILLIS played square in all the relationships of his life. He did not believe in, he did not practice, and he did not permit those who were with him to put into execution the petty tactics of politics that are so often permitted.

I never knew him to make a decision on an important question on any other basis than that which, as he saw it, was for the best interests of the people.

The thing he was most criticized for in all of his service in the Senate was his vote for the adjusted compensation bill. I think that the morning that he voted for the passage of that bill over the President's veto was to him one of the most trying mornings in his entire life. I took in and put on his desk 1,457 telegrams that said, "You must not vote for this bill," and 53 that asked him to vote for it. And I said to him, "Senator WILLIS, most of those 1,457 telegrams are from the most prominent men in Ohio. I do not know from these other 53 whether the soldiers are much interested in this bonus or not."

We discussed the whole question, the two of us alone there in the office. Finally I said to the Senator, "If you vote to override the President's veto to-day, you may be voting yourself out of public life." He looked at me about a half a minute, then he turned around and looked at the picture of his soldier father, to which he always gave the place of prominence in his office. Then he turned back and looked again at those 1,457 telegrams. And he said to me this: "Jones, you were not reared in the home of a soldier. You did not fight the battles of the Civil War at the breakfast table and at the luncheon table and at night. I promised these soldier boys I would vote for this bill. They know I will. They know it is not necessary to send me these telegrams. So far as voting myself out of public life is concerned, that is much less to me than believing myself a coward every time I look at my face in the mirror the rest of my life. I am going to vote for that bill this afternoon because I think it is the right thing to do. The effect of my vote upon my future political career must take care of itself."

I could tell a similar story about the way in which he drafted the famous Newberry resolution. This man always faced questions, whether they were great or small, faced them in his office where none of us knew and the world did not need to know, on the same basis that he always advocated outside.

Moreover, Senator WILLIS never forgot and he never betrayed a friend. When he was thinking about what he would do for a man, he never asked what that man would do for him. Time after time he did things for men who had done things against him, and then when they did new things against him, he did new things for them, because he thought he ought to do them.

I never knew this man but once to say that any other man had deliberately falsified to him. He said it once in all the seven years that I was with him. He was far more lenient in his judgment of men than sometimes I thought they were lenient of him while he lived.

It is my firm judgment to-day that the faults which Senator WILLIS had, and every man has certain faults, were faults more harmful to himself than to others. He never knew when to stop work. So long as there was something to do for his people he did it. He was happy when he was doing something to help somebody in Ohio, or in the Nation, and lonesome when there was nothing of that kind to do. I believe the highest tribute I cay pay to him to-day is this, and I have paid him this tribute before: That in all the years of my association with him, I never knew him to do a thing that, from the viewpoint of broad manhood, from the viewpoint of truthful and courageous relations with his fellowmen, could be called a 'little thing.' He was a Christian gentleman everywhere.

Not very long ago I related to him in full detail evidence that he was very loath to believe of a mean, little trick that a man whom he had befriended far beyond his deserts had done to him. There was a way in which he could have returned the meanness in kind, but when the story had been finished he looked across the desk and said, "Jones, I am not going to degrade myself because somebody else degraded himself." He stood on that principle.

I said on this platform just after he had gone away Friday night that Senator WILLIS had come home to go home, or substantially that. I also said that if he had been choosing—and I know he did not choose to go now, because he fully expected that there would be many, many years of life and activity ahead of him—but if he had known and he had been choosing, this was the place, among the friends who knew him all his life, who knew more about him than anybody else, this was the place where he would have liked to have gone. And I think he went the way he would have liked to have gone, in the full vigor of manhood, without any sickness, without any impairment of his powers. Oh, I think he would have liked to have had long enough to have said good-bye to his loved ones. I know he would have liked to have had that. But if he could not have that, he would have preferred death the way it came. He would have preferred to have gone home here at home among his friends.

Doctor Smith has said a great deal about the friendships of this man. I never got over being amazed at the number of friends he had. Glancing over the thousands of telegrams and the thousands of letters that have come in since he went away, the one outstanding note is his friendship. And I do not know how many hundreds of men have grasped my hand to-day and yesterday simply to say this, "Mr. Jones, Senator WILLIS was my friend." They have said that more than anything else. And he was their friend.

Oh, how he liked to sit down and talk to a humble citizen of this country about the interests and the joys and tragedies of life, and how he tried to help them. I presume we have larger files in the Senator's office in Washington relative to compensation for the soldier boys, relative to pensions for the comrades of his father, than has any other office in the whole Senate Building—thousands and thousands of cases. No case was too humble, no case involved too much time and trouble for Senator WILLIS to give it attention. Whether the man could write English or could not, it was all the same. One of the touching things that has come since he went away was a little tribute from one of these soldier boys who could not write either the Senator's name or his own legibly upon the envelope which he addressed.

He was a man who loved his country and loved to serve his country. He gave to his country everything that he had to give. Often he talked to me about the fact that so many people wanted to get from their country, rather than give to their country, and he often wondered what the future of a country was to be, in which almost everybody wanted something from it, not to give to it. He gave a full measure of patriotism and devotion; all that he had and more.

I could speak about his love for his family. He thought a great deal of McKinley. All of you know that McKinley has been the family ideal of the American people. I never knew, I never saw, Mr. McKinley. He was gone when I was a boy. But all I need to say to-day, I think, is this: Whatever was true in his life, in his purity of family relationship, was true also of Senator WILLIS.

From his pocket on Friday night, after he had gone, I took this book of poems, which he long sought for and which, after he had obtained, he carried with him many, many times. In it I found that he had cut out this poem. Because it represents him to me, as I believe he wanted to be represented, I am going to read it. It is not an uncommon poem at all:

"There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are brave and true;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

"Give love, and love to your heart will flow,
A strength in your utmost need;
Have faith, and a score of hearts will show
Their faith in your word and deed.

"Give truth, and your gift will be paid in kind,
And honor will honor meet;
And a smile that is sweet will surely find
A smile that is just as sweet.

"Give pity and sorrow to those who mourn,
You will gather in flowers again
The scattered seeds from your thoughts outborne,
Though the sowing seemed in vain.

"For life is the mirror of king and slave,
'Tis just what you are and do;
Then give to the world the best you have
And the best will come back to you."

Looking back over the inexpressibly beautiful associations of these seven years now brought to a close, associations that I scarcely expect shall again be duplicated in life, I say on my own part and on the part of the others of us who were so intimately in touch with him, he has fought a good fight, and in all things he has kept the faith.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the funeral oration of the Hon. Ralph D. Cole, who was a colleague of the Senator's in the university, and was his predecessor in the House of Representatives. Mr. Cole would have presented the name of Senator WILLIS at the Kansas City convention had the Senator lived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. RALPH D. COLE

We have lost our leader; our noble friend is gone; our chief has fallen in battle. In the hour of his supreme triumph his spirit took its flight to Him who gave it. On the 30th day of March, in the city of Delaware, Ohio, Senator FRANK B. WILLIS, forty-fifth Governor of Ohio, responded to the final call of the Great Commander.

He was at home, in his native city, decorated in the emblem of the Republic, the colors of the flag that he loved; all her streets, thronged with a mighty host of his fellow countrymen, who loved him; proudly proclaiming him worthy of highest honors; in this very hall, consecrated to the exalted purposes that inspired his life, all hearts united in harmony to the sweet strains of "When we come to the end of a perfect day," the final summons came and he waved a last farewell.

Fortunate city! You did not wait until to-day to pay your tribute. He saw your faith, he heard your praise, he felt your love and loyalty; you filled his heart with joy as his ship sailed out to sea.

He died in the afternoon of life, in the fullness of fame, rich in honors, royal in friendships, with all his great faculties and powers mantled about him, and before time had levied its relentless toll upon a life of unceasing action.

The career of FRANK B. WILLIS is the grand epic of American nobility. Observe the familiar steps so many of the inspiring leaders of a great enlightened people have trod in their march to the heights of immortality. Born on a farm, nurtured in a Christian home, educated in the public schools, taught school, attended college, a professor in law, admitted to the bar, member of the State legislature, United States Congressman, Governor of Ohio, and United States Senator. Study the lives of American immortals, compare their career with his, and behold how perfect the climax—the Presidency of the United States.

In the analysis of his character we find body, mind, and heart perfectly balanced. He was marked from boyhood in the image of his Maker. His commanding presence was but counterpart to his high intellectual and moral endowments. The dominant characteristic of Senator WILLIS was his humanness.

He was thoroughly human. He loved his fellow men and sought to serve them. He was natural, not artificial. He despised hypocrisy. He possessed intellectual as well as moral integrity. He was dignified; not the sham pretense of selfish exclusion, but a noble simplicity, the unfailing work of genuine greatness; not a puppet of conventions, but the natural conduct of a man endowed with a wealth of human sympathy and understanding. He was loyal—to betray a trust was not in his power. He was loyal to his home, his State and Nation. He was an ardent patriot. He was loyal to his friends. A host of witnesses will rise and give proof. Duplicity he despised. Disloyalty he abhorred. Honest criticism he coveted, for that dispels all clouds of doubt and lets in the sunlight of truth. Magnanimous, generous, appreciative, and always grateful.

Love of country was kindled in his heart at the fireside of his father, a Union soldier. He was an American. He was willing and anxious to extend a helping hand to all nations, but entertained an unchangeable conviction that America's primal duty is to America. The greatness of FRANK B. WILLIS is America's greatness, truly typical of this continent; God's eternal gifts of freedom and opportunity, embraced by an honest boy and transmuted by the alchemy of toil into the gold of exalted manhood.

The home life of Senator and Mrs. FRANK B. WILLIS was a gem of domestic felicity, an inspiration to the various circles in which they moved and the communities in which they lived.

They were childhood playmates at Galena, Ohio. From the date of their marriage, through the changing years and all of life's vicissitudes, they were almost inseparable. Notwithstanding almost continuous public activities, Mrs. Willis was always at her distinguished husband's side.

She was with him at the home-coming meeting where his life came to its tragic but glorious close.

Their home life was shared by a daughter, Helen, who now is a teacher in the university where the Senator received his education and in which he always maintained a keen and active interest.

The constant devotion of the members of this family to one another should prove a lesson to others and a source of treasured memory to them.

The public life of Senator WILLIS covered a period of 30 years, during which time I knew him intimately. I know the motives that determined his course in relation to questions of public welfare. He did what he thought was right as God gave him to see the light. On all questions involving a moral principle he was adamant. Immovably centered in his high purposes, he defied all danger and battled every adversary. He threw his shining lance full and fair in the face of public wrong, and so fighting fell on the field of conflict. As a soldier falls in battle, so fell he in action.

On questions of public policy and administration he was guided by principles fundamental to the public weal. He had faith in free institutions and in the capacity of the people for self-government enlightened by the truth. The people of Ohio reciprocated that trust and had faith in him, as he held the greatest and most loyal personal following of any Ohio leader since William McKinley.

He believed that a democracy could best be preserved and its administration most efficiently served through the agency of political parties. He therefore fought fearlessly for his political faith. He advocated principles as the foundation of political parties and not personalities. In his last public address, with what now appears as prophetic vision, with most impressive solemnity, he declared, "Men pass on, but principles endure." He was not an opportunist, never "embraced doctrines fashioned to the varying hour." He determined his course on the high seas of public service by the fixed stars of fundamental principle. It can be said of Senator WILLIS, as was said of Fabricius, the great Roman consul. "It would be as difficult to turn the sun from its course as to turn Fabricius from the path of honor."

Senator WILLIS was a man of God; as Lincoln was in deep devotion true to God, so WILLIS had faith in a Divine Providence that determines the destinies of nations and guides in the affairs of men; that faith in God that marked his long career radiating from his life brought him through the storms and tempests of the voyage with a reputation stainless as a star, a character rugged and invincible as truth.

Better than all wealth, better than all power, better than all position, to have the character, courage, and manhood of FRANK B. WILLIS.

Farewell to you, my noble friend! Farewell to you! "Men pass on. Principles endure."

Mr FESS. Mr. President, I also hold in my hand two editorials, one from the Cleveland Plain Dealer—an independent paper with Democratic leanings, which makes a very splendid statement on the character of the Senator—and one from the Cleveland News. These are very significant utterances. I ask unanimous consent to have them inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Cleveland Plain Dealer of April 8, 1928]

SENATOR WILLIS

FRANK BARTLETTE WILLIS died as one might wish to die—painlessly, at the peak of a notable career, in the midst of friends gathered to do him honor, in the town which had proudly sponsored him through many years of public service. Political history affords few incidents so dramatic as this passing of Ohio's senior Senator.

Tongues that yesterday were denouncing WILLIS as a contender for the favor of his State as a presidential aspirant will to-day speak the Senator's praises. For both as a man and as a public servant there was much in WILLIS that merits praise. He embodied many of the traits that has made America a nation powerful and respected. The bitterness of a primary campaign is hushed in the presence of death.

Mr. WILLIS expected to be an educator, but politics captured him young. As a member of the legislature and then of Congress, as a governor, and as a United States Senator he continued to advance in the esteem of his party in Ohio. Whatever else be said of his desire to be nominated for President in June, the ambition was natural and logical and none now will ever know what chance he might have had in the convention.

In politics WILLIS played the game hard and square. The fact that in his long career he never lost a primary battle indicates a hold on his party in this State that had given his opponents in the present campaign more than one moment of concern. Even when defeated for re-election to the governorship in 1916 he ran many thousands of votes ahead of his ticket.

During the years when Ohio was slowly emerging from the wet column to join the dry States, WILLIS made himself a leader of this reform movement; with the advent of State and national prohibition he continued its spokesman at home and in Washington. No man was quicker to accept the challenge of the wets on the floor of the Senate than this school-teacher from Ohio. No one could rattle him, bluff him, or scare him. Prohibition was almost a part of his religion and he defended it with militant sincerity.

In elections the Senator was always stronger than his party. By long service he had built up in the minds of thousands of Ohioans the conviction that FRANK WILLIS was honest, that he saw problems from the viewpoint of average people, and could be trusted to do the square thing always. The rough politics of his early years taught him the art of mixing with folks. The high hat was no part of his equipment. No man had a heartier handshake or a more cordial manner of greeting his friends.

Mr. WILLIS falls in the hardest battle of his life. It was fairly characteristic of him that when his political dominance in his own State was assailed he lost no time in buckling on the armor worn through so many fights and made straight for the scene of conflict. He had never learned to dodge a blow, but stood to take and return it. It was the same old WILLIS of a decade or more ago who swung into the primary fight in Ohio at the challenge of Hoover—the WILLIS who asked no quarter but knew that the outcome of this primary battle would determine the most momentous issue of his political life.

Death scores against a man whom no party opponent had ever been able to down. * * *

Friend and political foe alike may well pause in homage to one who served his State diligently and creditably, and who leaves at death a record that calls for no excuse.

[Editorial from the Cleveland News of April 1, 1928]

NATION MOURNS HIM

Ohio has lost a loyal son, an honest, able, and courageous man, in the untimely passing of Senator FRANK B. WILLIS. The Nation, too, has suffered the loss of a loyal servant, a worker at all times intensely devoted to the welfare and happiness of the people.

It is doubtful that Ohio has ever produced in its long list of illustrious sons a man more lovable and beloved in both his public and private life than was Senator WILLIS. Not only was he esteemed for his works as a lawmaker and executive but he was ardently loved for his personal deeds and his affection for his fellow men. He was personally known to tens of thousands of men, women, and children throughout the great State he was so proud to own as his birthplace. Each of these thousands had for him the warmest of affection, and in his or her turn was proud to acknowledge the friendship of FRANK B. WILLIS.

Possessed of indomitable courage and determination, he was a persistent and unrelenting fighter for any cause he believed to be just. He never compromised on an issue or with his political foes, nor did he ever give up a fight for an ideal until he had won the victory. He never dodged meeting an issue face to face, nor could he ever bring himself to avoid conflict because of any political expediency. His political enemies were among his warmest personal friends, for no one could do other than admire his sincerity and unflagging courage.

His whole life was one of contest, of battling for the things he believed to be right. Often abandoned by his party leaders in the midst of a strenuous campaign or given half-hearted support, Senator WILLIS never complained nor became bitter. He went on with his fight, determined to carry on to the last, along the lines he had mapped out for himself. By force of habit and character he became to a large extent an individualist. He sought help in his campaigns from those he believed should be allied with his cause. If this help was not forthcoming, he went ahead on his own. Like all men of his determination, he was bound to suffer many defeats along the way. But defeat no more shook his courage than did victory cause him to cease struggling. His characteristic determination was shown when he told those who led the campaign of Secretary Hoover against him that he would not compromise with them on the naming of the Ohio presidential primary candidates. He told them that even if defeat for him in the primary campaign meant the end of his political career he would not waver in his plans to carry on the fight to a finish. He would put his fate to the test, regardless of the outcome and regardless of the fact that an easy way out of the problem could be effected by acceptance of a compromise plan.

No man can but admire such courage. His ardent devotion to prohibition cost him many friends, yet he never permitted criticism or certain loss of votes to influence his open campaigning for the cause he espoused. Nor did he ever stay away from the enemy's strongholds in his campaigns. He loved to carry the fight into hostile towns and cities; fear had no part in his make-up. Warned often by friends that he would be making a mistake to talk prohibition in a locality known to be opposed to that proposition, he still would insist on carrying on his campaign in that place, and with added vigor and intensity.

In this characteristic, at least, he was Rooseveltian in his make-up. As a teacher, Congressman, governor, Senator, and candidate for the greatest office open to any American, Senator WILLIS was ever an able, courageous, honest, and sincere man. He loved to fight for the right as he saw it. And he died as he doubtless would have wished to have passed, had he his choice. Death came to him in the midst of the greatest fight of his life. A tragedy, it is true, that has shocked and saddened Ohio and the Nation. But he went down fighting to the last, a glorious death for such a man as he.

The Nation's estimate of Senator WILLIS is well expressed in the message sent to Mrs. Willis by President Coolidge. It follows:

"News of the sudden passing of your husband has been a great shock to me. He rendered distinguished service in his State assembly, later as Governor of Ohio, and also in the National House and Senate. He was an earnest and effective advocate of causes which he considered just, and a man of upright character. His going will be a distinct loss to our public life. Mrs. Coolidge joins me in deep sympathy for you and your daughter and his other relatives and friends."

A fitting epitaph, indeed, for any man!

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of our deceased colleague, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, May 12, 1928, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, May 11, 1928

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Holy, true, and merciful Lord, Thou dost always keep in remembrance Thy gracious promise, namely, "I will never leave nor forsake thee." O God of our fathers, withhold not Thy presence from our beloved land. Come Thou to all the children of men and put a new face on this weary old earth, and the power of intellect and the skill of genius shall be superseded by the holy Babe of Bethlehem. Oh, that all men would be lovers, diligent and faithful, patient and hopeful, justifying their presence in the world. It is our mission and our glory. O teach us that blessed is the man who is guided along this way. In the blessed name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

R. 11577) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes," and recedes from its amendment numbered 100 to said bill.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate numbered 42 and 43 to the bill (H. R. 12875) entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes.

HISTORICAL MUSEUM IN DEFIANCE, OHIO

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the resolution (S. J. Res. 82) providing for the erection of a public historical musuem on the site of Fort Defiance, Defiance, Ohio, and consider the same in the House as in Committee of the Whole. If consent is granted, I shall move to amend by certain amendments which were embodied in the report from the House Committee on the Library in a similar bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 82, and consider the same in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 82) providing for the erection of a public historical museum on the site of Fort Defiance, Defiance, Ohio

Whereas on the 9th day of August, 1794, Gen. Anthony Wayne, a gallant and distinguished soldier of the Revolutionary and Indian Wars, erected a fort at the confluence of the Maumee and Auglaize Rivers, known as Fort Defiance; and

Whereas the original site of old Fort Defiance is now preserved as a public park of 3 acres, wherein the State of Ohio has expended $26,000 to construct a concrete retaining wall, and a further appropriation by the State of Ohio is available for landscaping and beautification of site; and

Whereas the site is one of national as well as local significance: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed (1) with the approval of the proper official of the State of Ohio, to select a site in the public park maintained by the State of Ohio on the site of Fort Defiance, at Defiance, Ohio, and (2) to construct thereon, as a memorial to Gen. Anthony Wayne, a public museum suitable for housing a collection of historical relics which is already available; but such museum shall not be constructed until the State of Ohio has made adequate provision for its care and maintenance, and the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, suspend all construction under this act until the State of Ohio has made available a sum equal to that hereinafter authorized to be appropriated, to be used in the construction of such museum.

SEC. 2. The plans for such museum shall be subject to the approval of the National Commission of Fine Arts.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

Mr. LUCE offered the following amendments: Line 1, page 2 of the Senate bill, strike out the words "with the approval of the" and insert the words "to cooperate with the."

Line 2, strike out the words "to select" and insert the words "and the proper official of the county of Defiance, Ohio, in selecting."

Line 11, page 2, strike out the words "a sum equal to that hereinafter authorized to be appropriated" and insert "the sum of $50,000, and the county of Defiance, Ohio, the sum of $25,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the preamble.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The motion of Mr. LUCE to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

NATIONAL SAFETY LESSON CONTEST

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the "Winning Lesson," by Miss Anna M. Keedy, of North Dakota, in the national safety contest conducted by the highway education board under the auspices of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks, I desire to insert in the RECORD the winning lesson in the 1926–27 National Safety Lesson Contest. This was submitted by Miss Anna M. Keedy, a teacher in the Minot (N. Dak.) public schools, and won for her first national honors in the sixth of a series of similar contests, conducted each year by the highway education board among the elementary-school teachers of the Nation.

By process of elimination, Miss Keedy's lesson was chosen successively as the best from her school, the best from North Dakota, and eventually, over more than 80,000 other lessons, as the best from the United States. The committee that awarded her first honors for North Dakota was named by the State superintendent of public instruction, while the national judges were Dr. M. L. Duggan, State superintendent of schools, Atlanta, Ga.; Mr. Bruce Wilson, national director, American Red Cross, Washington, D. C.; and Mr. A. H. Hinkle, highway engineer, State Highway Commission, Indianapolis, Ind. By the decision of the committee Miss Keedy has won a trip to Washington from her home in North Dakota, with all expenses paid, and a check for $500. Her awards are the gifts of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, donor of approximately $6,500 in prizes for pupils and teachers who participate in the essay and lesson contests. Miss Keedy is in Washington this week, and on the 9th was received by President Coolidge. By him she was presented with a certificate of award for meritorious achievement in street and highway safety education.

The question of safety on our streets and highways is becoming more and more one of national importance. These contests serve a most useful purpose in educating the youth of the land and in molding public opinion. As the Representative of the district in which Minot is located, I take this opportunity of saying that all North Dakotans are proud of the merited honor which Miss Keedy has brought to our State.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WINNING LESSON IN THE 1926–27 NATIONAL SAFETY-LESSON CONTEST—STREET AND HIGHWAY SAFETY COORDINATED WITH ORAL AND WRITTEN COMPOSITION

Keeping in mind characteristics always found in the average child of the eighth grade, a project was planned for the boys and girls, with an endeavor to stimulate interest along chosen lines. It was carried out by means of pupil activity under teacher guidance.

The grade is composed of five divisions, averaging 42 pupils in a division.

Project: Teaching street and highway safety.

Teacher's aim:

1. To help my pupils to realize that education in safety on streets and highways is necessary.
2. To create in each pupil a desire to prevent accidents on streets and highways.
3. To aid them in the formation of habits of safety.
4. To assist them in their desire to help others, especially younger children.

Early in October I had told my pupils to keep their eyes open for anything dealing with safety on streets and highways. Now that the time for the safety campaign had arrived, they brought to school great quantities of material—magazine and newspaper clippings, pictures, street and crossroad diagrams, etc. The following are some of the facts gleaned from this material:

1. Travel and transportation in the United States have greatly increased in the last 20 years.
2. Means of travel and transportation have changed in recent years.
3. Transportation and travel are much more rapid.
4. Population has greatly increased.
5. The number of motor conveyances has increased. In 1912 there were 1,000,000 automobiles in the United States; in 1926, 22,000,000 motor vehicles. (North Dakota has 1 automobile to every 4.5 persons.)
6. There has been a resulting increase in traffic fatalities. (In 1926, 7,000 children under 15 years of age were killed in or died as a result of traffic accidents. There was an annual average of 25,000 deaths and 100,000 injuries because of accidents on streets and highways.)

A brief discussion of the foregoing facts at once led to the statement, "Something must be done to meet this new condition."

It was decided that each pupil find out all he could about what had been done and bring in at least one new suggestion.

The recitation next day showed that many things had been done—highways graded, embankments fenced, streets widened, curves posted, etc. One boy said he really believed the sign, "Caution—School," placed about a half block from our school grounds helped, and that people in general respected these signboards.

All this had been done, but accidents continued to increase. What more could be done?

The most interesting part was what the pupils thought they could do. Their suggestions were:

1. We can write a code of safety laws and live up to them.
2. We can help each other in obeying these laws.
3. We can make posters and put them up in public places and in other schools.
4. We can write plays and put on a safety program.
5. We can make speeches, and we might have a debate.

In order to facilitate the writing of the safety code each division was further separated into eight groups. (Five pupils constitute a good working unit.) Each group wrote a code of 10 laws. These eight sets of rules were submitted to a committee made up of one representative from each group. This committee sifted and revised the eight codes, making a new one. This was then placed on the blackboard, discussed, revised, and adopted by the class. Each of the five divisions made its own set of laws. The following set of laws was adopted by one division:

1. I will not play on streets and highways.
2. I will always stop, look, and listen before crossing the street.
3. I will cross streets at crossings and always at right angles.
4. I will not compare my rate of speed with that of an approaching vehicle and take a chance.
5. I will hold my umbrella upright when crossing the street.
6. I will avoid running behind and in front of cars.
7. I will not hook rides on automobiles, trucks, and other moving vehicles.
8. When riding in an automobile I will not attract the driver's attention.
9. I will always try to help elderly people and little children when crossing the street.
10. I will try to make these laws a habit.

In order to assist the children in living up to their "safety code," and in so doing form habits of safety, a "roll of honor" was devised. Each pupil who for one week lived up to the code accepted by his division was to have his name placed on the "roll of honor." This was very successful, the children keeping check on each other. Additional interest was aroused by this recognition of satisfactory results.

One day was poster and slogan day. Another day was safety verse and song day. Two days were spent on oral composition work. At this time we had try-outs to choose the members of the flying squadron, composed of girls, and the minute men, composed of boys. These pupils gave talks on safety on streets and highways to the children in the fourth, fifth, and sixth grades and carried safety posters, which they explained to the first, second, and third grades. These talks were very helpful. The older children felt that they had a responsibility. They must not only tell the younger children but must set them a good example.

One day the pupils put on a safety assembly program. Original poems and codes of laws were read. Safety songs were sung, and talks on safety were given. The following playlet and song, written during our 1924 safety campaign, were again presented:

SAFETY DIALOGUE FOR EIGHT PUPILS

CHARACTERS

Uncle Sam, an eighth-grade boy, dressed as Uncle Sam, seated at desk, reading statistics and looking very much worried and perplexed.

Traffic, large boy, carrying box of shredded wheat, box of coffee, sack of salt, etc.

Carelessness, girl dressed in keeping with her name.

Selfishness, small eighth-grade boy.

Law Enforcement, boy dressed as traffic officer.

Education, girl wearing college cap and gown.

Courtesy, girl wearing crown marked "courtesy," in gold letters.

Obedience, boy wearing scarf marked "obedience" in blue letters, carrying the pledge of carefulness.

UNCLE SAM (slowly leafing over papers and talking slowly): Twenty thousand killed or died as a result of traffic accidents in 1926. An annual average of 25,000 deaths and 100,000 persons injured because of accidents on streets and highways. Something must be done. Something—must—be—done.

(As Uncle Sam is meditating, Traffic enters and salutes.)

UNCLE SAM: Traffic, I am glad to see you. I have a problem on hand just now. It is one in which you, too, are interested and will be likely to give valuable assistance.

TRAFFIC: Oh, certainly, I will be glad to help you in any way I can; wondrous busy, though. Not a ton of coal is mined or a bale of cotton grown but I carry it to its destination. The West wants what the East produces, and the East wants what the West yields. I am kept ever increasingly busy, to the great enrichment of our people.

UNCLE SAM. That is very true; and if that were all, we might well rejoice. I read here, however, of the great loss of life by accident. It makes me think of widows, orphans, childless homes, and of untold suffering.

TRAFFIC. Yes; I am responsible for some of that; but I'm not always to blame. People are so thoughtless and selfish, and some are ignorant. They rush headlong into my way, and I can not stop for them. Commerce demands that I hurry.

UNCLE SAM. I wish you would remember that human life is a sacred thing, and the lives of my people are dear to me. It pays to be careful.

TRAFFIC. Your wish is law to me.

(While Traffic is leaving the platform, Carelessness enters.)

CARELESSNESS. Oh, I am so worried and so sorry! Can't you help me?

UNCLE SAM. And what is the trouble now?

CARELESSNESS. My brother, Jay Walker, has had both his legs cut off right above the knees. He was just running across the street from the Globe Gazette to the Benno Drug, when Traffic came along and ran right over him.

UNCLE SAM. Was not Traffic doing his duty?

CARELESSNESS. Oh, maybe he was. Of course, the street is slippery there, and he says his brakes did not work quickly. He knows Jay Walker and should have been on the lookout for him. Poor Jay just wanted to see what the boys were looking at in the shop window. He always said he was not going to walk his legs off by going to the crossings.

UNCLE SAM. The person who crosses the street in the middle of a block invites an extra hazard, for statistics show that half the traffic accidents occur in that way. Does Jay Walker not know the laws of proper conduct on streets and highways?

CARELESSNESS. Oh, yes; Mother Love and Education both have taught him; but when Jay Walker was a little fellow he chummed with Disobedience, and he likes to have his own way.

UNCLE SAM. I am sorry, but lawbreakers must take the consequences of their own acts, and it is much the same with those who violate traffic rules.

(As Carelessness leaves, Selfishness enters.)

SELFISHNESS. There, now, that car of ours was just smashed all to pieces just because that truck load of grain was in my way.

UNCLE SAM. And where did all this happen?

SELFISHNESS. Right out of town on the Burlington Road. It wasn't my fault, either. I know all about the traffic laws and can manage a car perfectly. Never get a bit nervous. It was just a new car, too, and I was trying it out to see what I could do. We were coming down the hill at a great rate when right around the curve we struck that truck. Its driver should have heard us coming and have pulled out to the side.

UNCLE SAM. Seems to me you are hardly old enough to drive a car.

SELFISHNESS. Well, I'm not, according to the law, but sometimes I take Dad's. He'll not like it when he finds this out. I'd have gotten along all right if I could have had the whole road.

UNCLE SAM. Selfishness, I do not like your manner, and scarcely believe the public would be willing to maintain roads solely for you. But here comes my good friend and helper Law Enforcement.

(Law Enforcement enters and salutes; Selfishness leaves.)

UNCLE SAM. Glad to see you. How are things coming now?

LAW ENFORCEMENT. Accidents are not a necessary evil. The number can be greatly reduced. Education can do more than all other agencies, but her work must be continuous and systematic. The public must be educated in traffic regulations, safety-first measures, and the duty of the pedestrian as well as that of the driver.

UNCLE SAM. I am told Education is already at work. I will call her.

(Education enters as Law Enforcement leaves.)

EDUCATION. I will help solve this great problem. Was it not I who taught the children the harmful effects of alcoholic liquors? I have the power to mold the lives of the youth of this great land, and I will teach childhood the lesson of safety. I am already at work, but the accomplishment of so great a task will take time.

UNCLE SAM. I am interested to know some of your plans.

EDUCATION. I intend, of course, to continue the instruction of the public in the general laws of safety first and in all traffic regulations, but my real effort is to be with the children. Some school systems have already adopted a course of safety lessons as a part of the curriculum. Safety subjects are used in various phases of classroom work, where the constructive side of safety is emphasized. Children of all ages are interested in learning ways and means of saving life. The Highway Education Board is rendering valuable assistance by its annual campaign with essay and lesson contests.

UNCLE SAM. Education, I like your plan of work. You have accomplished great things, and I believe you can do even greater. What you tell me sounds encouraging, and I hope you will go right ahead. There is need of more education as to individual responsibility.

EDUCATION. I hasten, that no time may be lost.

(Education leaves as Courtesy enters.)

COURTESY (bowing). I beg your pardon for this intrusion, but I have heard of the great problem that confronts this Nation of ours, and I am come to offer my assistance. I would teach youth to respect the rights of others, to be quiet and thoughtful on streets and highways, to help the aged and little children, and always to remember "safety first."

UNCLE SAM. Courtesy, you were ever an obedient daughter, and will be a worthy helper of your elder sister, Education.

COURTESY. Thank you. Good-by.

(Enter Obedience, Traffic, Carelessness, Selfishness, and Education.)

UNCLE SAM. Obedience, what news to-day?

OBEDIENCE. I carry here the pledge of carefulness (reads the pledge):

"PLEDGE OF CAREFULNESS

"Realizing my responsibility as an American citizen to secure the safety of others by careful conduct on the streets;

"Realizing that the accident and death toll of my Nation, State, and city can best be reduced by thoughtfulness and carefulness;

"I pledge myself to be considerate of the rights of others while on the streets and highways; to learn and observe traffic rules and regulations to the best of my ability; to cooperate in a campaign of carefulness, either as a pedestrian or as a driver of a vehicle; and I will, by precept and example, endeavor to assist others in making streets and highways safe."

These are the signatures of the children.

TRAFFIC. I, too, would sign the pledge.

CARELESSNESS. Education has made me ashamed of my old habits. I now wish to sign the pledge. My brother is working hard to earn a new name, and desires to sign the pledge.

SELFISHNESS. I, too, am ashamed of my old self, and have turned a new leaf.

EDUCATION. I will sign, for it points in wisdom's way.

COURTESY. I pledge to be considerate of the rights of others.

OBEDIENCE (handing pledge to Uncle Sam). That safety and happiness may dwell in our land.

SONG

(Tune: "Marching Through Georgia")

Come we now with joyful hearts
To sing our safety lays;
Sing them with a fervor we'll
Remember all our days.
Sing them now and always sing,
In gladsome happy lays—
Three cheers for Safety,
Grand old Safety.

Then hurrah! hurrah! for the safety laws we know;
Hurrah! hurrah! these laws to all we'll show;
So let us shout their glories, be we far or be we near,
Three cheers for Safety—grand old Safety.

Safety first and safety last
And safety all the way;
Safety now for you and me
And safety every day;
Safety first for young and old
Means more to us than gold.
Three cheers for Safety,
Grand old Safety.

When to this slogan all give heed,
What joy will here be found,
What pleasure then to be abroad
On highway or in town.
So let us wave her banner, wave
It higher than before;
Three cheers for Safety,
Grand old Safety.

Exhibiting the gold medal, State prize, won by one of our boys in the 1926 safety campaign, essay writing was motivated; all the awards offered by the highway education board and the prizes offered by the State were explained. Every member in the eighth grade then wrote an essay on safety on streets and highways.

The lessons in safety were carried into the homes, the older pupils acting as teachers. The pupils seem to realize that they have an active part in the life of their community and are in a great measure responsible not only for their own conduct but for that of their companions.

The street and highway safety campaign has been an annual event in our school for the past five years and is now a recognized part of our junior high-school work.

PENSIONS

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13511) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13511) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendments:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, strike out lines 4 to 9, inclusive.

H. R. 1942 (Rept. p. 61). Mae Washburn. The beneficiary in this case is deceased.

Page 60, line 26, after the word "of," strike out the numerals "$50" and insert in lieu thereof the numerals "$30." And on the same line, after the word "month," strike out the words "in lieu of that she is now receiving."

H. R. 3188 (Rept. p. 105). Dianna C. Alters. The claimant in this case is not now receiving a pension, and the committee recommends $30 a month which is the usual rate in this class of claims.

Page 74, strike out lines 5 to 9, inclusive.

H. R. 3778 (Rept. p. 128). Eleonora B. Beatty. The beneficiary in this case is deceased.

Page 77, strike out lines 20 to 23, inclusive.

H. R. 3840 (Rept. p. 134). Stattira Y. Eicher. The beneficiary in this case is deceased.

Page 150, strike out lines 15 to 18, inclusive.

H. R. 9407 (Rept. p. 258). Ellen R. Phillips. The beneficiary in this case is deceased.

Page 169, line 9, after the first word "of," strike out the numerals "$50" and insert in lieu thereof the numerals "$70."

H. R. 10782 (Rept. p. 290). Zippora B. Sowards. The beneficiary is now receiving pension at the rate of $50 a month under the act of July 3, 1926, she having been the wife of the late soldier during his service in the Civil War, and the committee recommends her pension be increased to $70 a month, to include $20 a month to the helpless and dependent son, Charles M. Sowards, subject to the usual provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill. I want to know for my information and the information of the country what is the rule of the committee with reference to the allowance of $50 a month for widows? I want particularly to direct attention to the inquiry as to the date of marriage. Are there a number of special pensions for widows of the Civil War veterans included in this bill where the marriage has been subsequent to June 27, 1905?

Mr. ELLIOTT. In answer to the gentleman's question I will say that the present law provides that widows who were married to soldiers prior to June 27, 1905, are eligible for pensions under the existing law provided the husband had 90 days' service in the war and was honorably discharged. We have been granting pensions to widows who were married between June 27, 1905, and June 27, 1915, where it was shown that they were in destitute circumstances or where they were very much in need on account of the lack of money or were not in good health.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to ask if you have allowed pensions to any widows where the marriage took place after June 27, 1915? I thought I noticed in the last report a case or two of that kind.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I do not remember of any case of that kind.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am making the inquiry not on account of any opposition to such legislation, but I have to write to my constituents on the policy of the committee, and I therefore make the inquiry so that I may inform them correctly about it. As I understand it, it is the policy where they are shown to be in destitute circumstances to allow some increase where the marriage took place after June 27, 1905, and not later than June 27, 1915.

Mr. ELLIOTT. As I understand it, the gentleman from Oklahoma has one case in this bill—I can not recall the name of it at this time—where the widow was married some time between June 27, 1905, and June 27, 1915.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to know whether or not a pension in any case so far has been granted where the marriage took place after June 27, 1915.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I do not know of any case of that kind. It is the policy and the rule of the committee that they must be married prior to June 27, 1915, in order to get a pension by special act. The gentleman asked another question in regard to the increase of the widow's pension, where the widow is now on the rolls at $30 per month. Here is the rule of the committee in regard to that:

(b) No bill proposing to increase the pension of a Civil War widow now receiving the maximum rate provided by existing law will be favorably considered unless it is clearly established by competent testimony that the applicant for such increase is old and helpless and dependent; and where any such widow is the owner of a comfortable home or possessed of a substantial income aside from her pension, no recommendation will be made by the committee to increase such widow's pension over the rate allowed by existing law to the thousands of other widows of veterans who may be less favorably situated.

Mr. HASTINGS. The reason I ask now is that I do not want to be writing erroneously to the people whom I represent in my district. I want to know whether that is a fixed rule of the committee.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I suggest to the gentleman that there are printed rules of the committee which he can procure at the committee rooms, and he can send them out to people who make inquiries, if he desires.

Mr. HASTINGS. And also I want to know whether the rules are adhered to.

Mr. ELLIOTT. They are.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Just a few days ago I had an inquiry from a widow of a Union veteran, and I made inquiry at the Pension Office to find out if she was eligible for a pension. She married the veteran in 1907. The Pension Office replied that under the law she would not be eligible to a pension. They did not tell me that she might come within the provisions of the rules of the committee and be eligible under a private bill. The gentleman said that if it could be shown that the widow is in destitute circumstances, that the committee would go beyond the law and grant a special pension if the marriage occurred prior to 1915. Is that true?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In all cases where destitution or poverty is shown?

Mr. ELLIOTT. In all cases where she would have been entitled to a pension under existing law, if she had been married to her soldier prior to June 27, 1915.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the character of proof required by the committee on the showing of poverty or destitute circumstances? Does the committee refer that to an inspector?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No; that is proved by affidavit. We have blank affidavits in the committee which the gentleman can procure and send out and get this evidence from the people who know the conditions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have very few of these cases. I am not familiar with the law. My inquiry is purely for information.

Mr. ELLIOTT. If the gentleman would go to the clerk of the committee, he could have the matter cleared up.

Mr. HASTINGS. What is the status of the bill that was passed by the House and sent to the Senate increasing the pension of widows in all cases to $40 a month?

Mr. ELLIOTT. The Senate passed that bill last night, and as I understand it as the Senate passed it, it gives a pension of $40 per month to all of the widows who are now entitled to a pension under existing law, provided they have arrived at the age of 72 years.

Mr. HASTINGS. And 75 years was the limit in the House bill. That is the only difference between the House bill and the Senate bill?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I think so.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is a matter of three years.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Can the gentleman tell the House whether the House committee proposes to accept that amendment?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I could not tell the gentleman at this time.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The sentiment is very strong for that.

Mr. ELLIOTT. That is a matter that we have not had a chance to take up. We will take it up in due time.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Under the provisions of the bill which the gentleman said the Senate passed last night, will this increase to $40 to widows now receiving $30 be automatic with the department?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I think that they have to prove their age.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ELLIOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OKLAHOMA—ITS THIRTY-NINTH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the thirty-ninth anniversary of the first opening of public lands of Oklahoma to white settlement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House: Thirty-nine years ago, on the 22d day of April, several thousands of sturdy pioneers engaged in a mad race for homes in a most virgin part of this country that was the first opening to white settlement of public lands, and marked the beginning of what is to-day one of the greatest States of the Union. That race for homes was the start of the construction of the great State of Oklahoma. That fertile country which was inhabited in the morning by the occasional cowboy and coyote, at eventide of that same day boasted of cities of thousands and a population running nigh to the hundred thousand mark. Thereafter there was opened to settlement in succession the Cheyenne and Arapaho country; the Sac and Fox Reservation; the Cherokee Strip; the surplus lands of the Pottawatomies and the rich and fertile Kiowa and Comanche domain. After that for about six years Oklahoma was one of the bright young territories of this Nation. Then in 1907 by act of Congress this great domain, comprising what is now the western part of the State of Oklahoma, was merged with that great country, famous for its fertile valleys and prairies, known then as the Indian Territory, and through that merger there came into the Union the forty-sixth State of the Nation, and there was formed what is to-day probably our richest State in agriculture and mineral products. The name of Oklahoma was selected for this great State and very appropriately so, the word Oklahoma being of Indian origin and meaning "Happy Home of the Red Men."

About the first history we have of this great country was from the pen of Washington Irving, who during his celebrated tour of the prairies told the outside world of the wonders of Oklahoma 96 years ago. But the Oklahoma he knew was a land of varied forests, mountains, and plains, populated with wild Indians and the habitat of roaming herds of buffalo.

A short time before his death, in speaking of the great State of Oklahoma, the Hon. Champ Clark said:

Of the many things I have done in my 26 years of service in the House there are many upon which I look back with pride and pleasure. One of these is that for years I did my best to bestow the boon of statehood upon Oklahoma. Two of the most pleasant weeks of my life were spent in that beautiful land hunting and fishing. I drove over it in a spring wagon and viewed the landscape o'er with ever-increasing delight. Anybody could tell that it would some day be a great agricultural State, but the chances are that in that far-away day even the most imaginative and enthusiastic of boomers never dreamed what a rich and mighty Commonwealth she would become within two decades, with fair prospects of becoming one of the greatest and wealthiest States of the Union. Neither Jules Verne nor any other novelist ever wrote a tale so fetching as the history of Oklahoma. Her population is composed of the very cream of the peoples of the older States—the young, the vigorous, the adventurous, the daring.

The story of Oklahoma by these two great men was the story of it before it had an opportunity to respond to the industry of men and the advance of civilization. The story of Oklahoma to which I want to direct your attention is the story of its 39 years of development.

In 1889 Oklahoma was a virgin wilderness, only a few thousand tons of coal being mined each year at McAlester, in the Choctaw Nation. At the beginning of the present century the mineral production of this region amounted in value to less than $4,000,000 a year. To-day it is over $500,000,000, or an increase of 12,500 per cent. Only two States—Texas with four times our area and twice our history, and Pennsylvania with 200 years of civilization and her vast stores of anthracite coal—exceed Oklahoma to-day in new wealth per year from the two great basic industries—agriculture and mining. Yet our resources have scarcely been tapped.

In 1907, when Oklahoma became a State, Louisiana had been a State for 95 years, Missouri for 86 years, Arkansas for 71 years, Texas for 62 years, Iowa for 61 years, Kansas for 46 years, and Nebraska for 40 years.

To-day Oklahoma leads the Nation in the value of diversified crops; is second in the value of minerals produced each year; is second or third each year in the production of cotton, and produces more broomcorn than all of the other States in the Union combined.

One county in Oklahoma, Ottawa, produces more zinc than the rest of the United States.

Mining coal to-day at the rate of 3,000,000 tons a year, at that rate we have a supply of this fuel which will last for 25,000 years.

For 8 of the last 11 years crude oil produced in Oklahoma was worth more at the well than the output of any other State. In 1926 the State of Oklahoma produced more oil than Russia and Mexico combined. This State is first in the Union in wealth derived from petroleum, and its two allied products, natural gas and casing-head gas. There are more than 100,000 producing oil and gas wells in Oklahoma, located in more than 100 separate fields in 40 of the State's 77 counties.

But we should not permit the State's vast mineral production to overshadow the unexampled progress of the Oklahoma farmer.

In three and one-half decades 197,218 farms, averaging 156 acres, have been opened and are operating to-day. This land is valued at $897,334,827; their farm buildings at $169,422,459; livestock on these farms is worth $102,998,393, and the implements, $58,379,199.

Oklahoma has a growing season of 209 days with a soil and climate adaptable to a variety of crops. Significant is the fact that in 1926 this State produced cotton worth $95,550,000 and wheat worth $87,019,000. What other State ranks as high in the production of these two all-important crops?

Yet, that is but a small part of the story. That same year Oklahoma produced 61,178,000 bushels of corn, 38,304,000 bushels of oats, 6,856,000 bushels of peanuts, and tame and wild hay valued at $13,672,000. Oklahoma alfalfa was shipped as far east as South Carolina, and other dairy feeds, such as grain, sorghums, oats, corn, by-products of wheat and cottonseed meal, were shipped to distant points in Scotland, France, Germany, and Denmark.

Each year Oklahoma's dairy products are valued in excess of $18,000,000.

In 1924 at the International Exposition at Chicago, Oklahoma won more championships on lard hogs than all other exhibitors combined. The highest-price brood sow sold in the United States in 1927 was produced in Oklahoma.

The first year Oklahoma entered into national egg-laying competition it ranked third in the United States in the average production per hen, and in the second year the winning pen in the State contest ranked as the highest-producing pen in the United States for that year. The State has a poultry population of 13,023,482, with commercial poultry plants springing up to build up this new industry.

Oklahoma is known as one of the billion-dollar States, deriving that income from three sources—$500,000,000 from agriculture, $500,000,000 from minerals, and $400,000,000 from manufactured articles.

Oklahoma is over 400 miles long from east to west, extending from the foothills of the Rockies in Colorado to the Ozark Mountains of Arkansas. Its elevation slopes from 4,000 to 400 feet. It has many kinds of soils, and the precipitation varies from 55 inches on the eastern border to 20 inches on the west border. It overlaps the grain and livestock regions of the North and the cotton regions of the South. It is the meeting place and overlapping grounds of all crops, all conditions, all peoples. From each region have come pioneer men and women to seek homes in a new and growing country. This mixing of peoples and interchanging of ideas has resulted in a condition that has been very beneficial. Development has been fast and permanent, and conditions are so favorable and the resources of the State so great that there is no question but that development in the future will continue perhaps even more rapidly than in the past.

As a result of legislation passed by this session of Congress there will be placed upon the markets within the next two or three years hundreds of thousands of acres of virgin, fertile, and productive lands to which I have referred. No doubt thousands of citizens from other parts of the Union, seeking new fields and new homes, will take advantage of the opportunity that will be offered. Let me say to them that from the progressive, patriotic, and industrious citizens of Oklahoma they will receive a royal welcome and will find there a people whom they will be delighted to live among.

No spot in all the world has undergone a similar transformation in the last 39 years. Illustrations of this are plentiful, but one will suffice to indicate many others. It is: Twenty-five years ago Tulsa, which is my home city, was a struggling village of a few hundred inhabitants. Neighboring villages laughed at the city of Tulsa for building a 48-room hotel. To-day that same village has grown into a city of 150,000 people. It is known for its progressiveness throughout the civilized world. It is the oil capital of the world, and in contrast to the 48-room hotel of 25 years ago it to-day possesses more rooms and finer hostelries than any city of the great Southwest, regardless of size. Twenty-five years ago its country banks boasted of deposits of a few thousand dollars. To-day the deposits in its banks average daily more than $100,000,000. All other lines of commerce and trade have kept pace, while in its schools and churches few, if any, cities of equal or larger population measure up to the high standards in these matters set by the city of Tulsa.

Mr. Speaker, this is only a brief and hurried outline of the story of the settlement, development, and accomplishments of the great State of Oklahoma. It has taken its place as one of the great States of the Union. Her hills and valleys are dotted with schools and churches where the children of these sturdy pioneers, and those who came after them, are being educated, according to the highest standards, and where we worship God according to the dictates of our own beliefs. Her citizens are comprised of the very best blood from the East, from the West, from the North, and from the South, and to those others who decide to make Oklahoma their home they extend a friendly and welcoming hand. They are not jealous of their blessings and prosperity, and those who journey there will find a wide field before them, for their efforts, if they are industrious, ambitious, and honest, will be crowned with success in Oklahoma, the land of happy homes, if they but persevere.

THE M'NARY-HAUGEN BILL

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of farm relief.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, the McNary-Haugen bill has been sent to a certain veto, and by whom? By those claiming to be the only Simon-pure friends of the farmer. They have insisted upon the objectionable and unconstitutional equalization fee being placed upon cotton, tobacco, hogs, cattle, and other farm products. It has deliberately and knowingly been sent to a certain veto, for the President vetoed it before because of this tax, and everybody knew he would veto it again. I voted for the bill with the fee stricken out. I, of course, could not vote for the tax that it proposes to levy on every bale of cotton, each pound of bright-leaf tobacco, every pork and beef, as well as other agricultural products, with its fixed penalties to be exacted in the United States courts if not paid.

VOTED FOR FARM RELIEF BUT AGAINST TAXES

No one can truthfully say I have not voted for farm relief, and if the so-called "friends of the farmer" had been in earnest they would have joined in and helped pass the bill without the fee, and in this way we would have made available $400,000,000 as a revolving fund that would have benefited the farmer, and it would have carried no tax or fee upon his products. Likewise, it can also be truthfully said that I have voted to protect the southern cotton and tobacco farmers against the greatest nuisance and injustice that has ever been proposed in Congress, and that is the levy and collection of the proposed equalization-fee tax on their products.

WHAT SOUTHERN DEMOCRATIC LEADER THINKS

Congressman FINIS J. GARRETT, of Tennessee, the Democratic floor leader in the House, in speaking on this bill on April 30, 1928, said:

> I have never been able to bring myself to the belief that the complicated system which it is proposed to found upon the stabilization fund, which fund is to be created by the levy of a tax, called an equalization fee, will prove workable in fact or beneficial to the farmer. Upon the contrary, it has been and is my firm belief that such a system would subject the agricultural interests to an exploitation exceeding anything that we have ever witnessed, and not only that, but I fear it would lead almost if not quite to revolution.

Thus it will be seen that Mr. GARRETT, a southern Democrat, and one of the most sincere, fearless, and able men in public life, predicts that the levy and attempts to collect the proposed tax on each bale of cotton, each pound of tobacco, each pound of meat, and other products would perhaps lead to revolution. The people would not submit to it. Why try to deceive them when we know what would result if it happened to go into effect?

SOUTH CAROLINA DEMOCRAT AND FARMER AGAINST THE FEE

Congressman STEVENSON, of South Carolina, one of the ablest men in Congress, in discussing this bill on April 30, 1928, in his opening remarks said:

> I happen to be one of the class they are trying to relieve. The only industry I have, outside of being a politician, is being a farmer.

In speaking of the application of the fee to keep up the revolving fund, by putting the tax on cotton, tobacco, and other farm products, Mr. STEVENSON said:

You are not going to have the money to do this unless you take it out of the farmer who is selling his cotton upon the market, and what will be the result? There will be the devil to pay by the time you get through with it. I will tell you that right now, because they are not going to stand for it, and I do not blame them.

I have belonged to cooperatives, and, as I have said, I have no stones to throw at them. They had a difficult problem, but I will tell you now you can not force the American farmer, as I know him, into belonging to a cooperative if he does not want to any more than you can force him to belong to the Catholic Church or to the Ku-Klux Klan. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON, continuing in the same address, with reference to forcing all the farmers into the cooperatives, said:

I tried the cooperatives. My croppers said that we prefer to sell it on the market, and do you know what my colored men did? I am not saying it disrespectfully, but they beat the cooperatives 3 cents a pound for three years in succession in selling cotton, and when the colored people on my farm can do that I said, "You go to it, boys; I am not in the cooperatives any more," and I told the cooperatives so.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman had better cotton.

Mr. STEVENSON. No; I did not—the cotton went to the gin side by side. The cropper and I got alternate bales. My colored men sold their cotton for 3 cents a pound higher on the average than it brought by putting it into the cooperative.

THE BILL FORCES FARMERS INTO COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS

The bill provides that whatever funds that might flow from the revolving fund, whether it be the fund appropriated by Congress or as built up through the tax on cotton, tobacco, and other farm products, must and shall be through the cooperative associations. In Georgia there are less than 6 per cent of the farmers in the cooperative associations. About 94 per cent of the farmers have not joined. I have nothing to say against the cooperative associations. The general idea of cooperative marketing is good, but for some reason the farmers in Georgia have not seen fit numerously to join the association. While the bill was up under the five-minute rule on May 3, Congressman BRAND of Georgia, a gentleman of long legislative experience and splendid ability, offered an amendment, and I quote from the RECORD, as follows:

The amendment is to that part of the bill which provides for cooperative associations creating corporations to be controlled by them. I add to it this [reading]:

"or corporations created by the laws of any State, members thereof to be composed of bona fide farmers who are not members of any cooperative association or any corporation created by a cooperative association, provided such corporations created by the laws of the State are given no more or other authority than the cooperative associations possess."

In Georgia, for instance, and it is true of almost every cotton-growing State, we have not 30 farmers out of a thousand who belong to a cooperative association. Nine hundred and seventy farmers out of a thousand will not get the benefits of this bill in so far as the loan privileges are concerned unless you adopt an amendment like this or something similar to it, so that they can, under the laws of Georgia, form a corporation and become eligible to receive the full benefits of this bill.

What went with this splendid amendment providing that not a few but all the farmers might get the benefit of whatever relief funds we might appropriate? It was immediately voted down by the Corn and Wheat Belt machine. They are driven by the cooperatives and are determined that the American farmer must join the cooperatives whether he wants to or not. This bill would force them in.

NO DEFINITE ALLOCATION FOR COTTON

As I stated in my address in the House on May 2, 1928, the revolving fund could all be used for wheat and corn to the exclusion of cotton, tobacco, and other southern crops if the board so decided. To correct this, Congressman W. C. WRIGHT, of Georgia, another experienced and able legislator, offered an amendment to allocate or set aside a part of the fund for the use of cotton producers, which was as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WRIGHT: On page 57, line 4, after the figures "$400,000,000," strike out the period, add a colon, and insert the following: "Provided, That at least $200,000,000 of said revolving fund is hereby made available and shall be used as a stabilization fund for financing the purchase, withholding, or the disposal of agricultural products in the event that a marketing period shall be declared for one or more of such products as hereinbefore authorized, and that said fund shall be allocated ratably to the stabilization funds of the several products according to the values of their respective exportable surpluses."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

This wise, just, and helpful amendment went "up the creek," just as Judge BRAND's amendment went. The Wheat and Corn Belt, from which the South buys flour, meal, and meat, is not keenly interested in doing what will materially help the cotton producers. Those western people want cheap cotton and tobacco, but they want to sell the South their flour, meal, corn, and bacon at as high a price as possible. It is that selfishness that is found in all people, each taking care of his own section and his own products. I cite these two worthy amendments offered by these Georgia statesmen to show the attitude of the Corn and Wheat Belt machine toward the South.

THE TAX IS CERTAIN, UNLIMITED, AND COMPULSORY

If there is any doubt about the tax on cotton, tobacco, and other agricultural crops being unlimited and compulsory, listen to what Leader GARRETT said:

Let it be borne clearly in mind that the proposal of the bill is to clothe a board of 12 men with the power to levy a tax upon every bushel of wheat or corn, upon every bale of cotton, upon every pound of meat—in short, upon some unit of every product of the farm. There is no limit placed upon the board's discretion as to the amount which it may levy, and the fund thus created is to be expended by the very board which levies it.

* * * * * * *

This fee is to be compulsory; it is not a matter of free action on the part of the farmer entering into a contract as he does when he joins a cooperative marketing association or other farm organization. It is to be levied upon him by a board and collected from him by the agencies of law.

Surely no one will deceive himself into the belief that this fee will not come from the farmer himself. It is immaterial at what point in the handling of the product the tax may be imposed, whether at the time of the first sale or when it is transported or when it is processed, it will be paid by the farmer who grows the product.

* * * * * * *

If that be true, how is the farmer to be benefited by paying his own losses from his own pocket?

* * * * * * *

Vice can not well be made a foundation stone upon which to erect a structure of virtue.

* * * * * * *

Is it possible that there are any considerable numbers of people in America who believe that the farmers are ready to have their farms and industry placed in the category of a public-service corporation and made subject to governmental regulation and control?

If so, they will be rapidly undeceived once the effort is made.

No man has yet denied what Mr. GARRETT, the great Democratic leader, said. There is no wiser man in or out of Congress than Congressman GARRETT. The whole country and men of every party respect his opinions and admire his ability as a statesman of the very highest order. It is the general opinion in Washington he is the ablest man in Congress and he ranks as one of the greatest thinkers in the United States.

IS THE TAX ON COTTON AND TOBACCO UNLIMITED?

While the bill was under consideration I interrupted Congressman LANKFORD, who has shown great interest in trying to bring about farm relief, with two questions which, with his answers, convince me the tax on tobacco and cotton, two of Georgia's leading crops, is unlimited. The questions and answers were as follows:

Mr. EDWARDS. Is the equalization fee on tobacco limited or unlimited in the bill?

Mr. LANKFORD. It is unlimited.

Mr. EDWARDS. The same is the case with cotton?

Mr. LANKFORD. Yes. Some people say that it will not be very high. If it is not going to be high, why not put a limit on it? Tobacco, of all farm products, has borne a greater burden of taxes in the past than any other one farm commodity. Ever since the Civil War there has been a tax on tobacco. It has always been borne by this commodity, and under this bill you seek to put a heavier and more direct tax on tobacco than upon any other one commodity. It is not fair, it is not just. I will not vote for the bill if it stays in. [Applause.]

This was in the presence and hearing of Mr. HAUGEN and others advocating the fee on agricultural crops. No one rose then, or at any other time, to deny what Mr. LANKFORD said, and it is true that these taxes are unlimited and compulsory. Do the people of the South want these taxes levied upon them? I think not.

It is a rather significant thing that each time the Haugen bill with the fee in it passes Congress the price of cotton takes a drop. It went off this time nearly 2 cents on the pound. The fee means no increase in the price of cotton or tobacco.

THE POWER TO TAX IS THE POWER TO DESTROY

In his splendid address before the House on May 1, Mr. LANKFORD said:

> The bill gives the board—a big majority of whom would not live in the South and all of whom probably would not be in sympathy with the cotton and tobacco growers—the full authority to assess taxes against the production of cotton, tobacco, and other products grown by my people. "The power to tax is the power to destroy," and I will not knowingly give the power to destroy my folks to those who do not live among my people, who are not in sympathy with them, and who ofttimes hate them.
>
> The older the McNary-Haugen bill gets, the worse it gets. It does not at all improve with age.

He further said:

> * * * You are about to tie the farmer hand and foot and deliver him into the hands of his avowed enemies. * * * There are many other objections to the bill which have been in the bill from the beginning. * * * I have tried to point out wherein the bill is now much worse than ever. The vicious provisions now so far outweigh the meritorious ones until I can not vote for the measure in its present form. * * * All bills have in them the good and the bad. To my mind at present the bad in this bill predominates.

Mr. LANKFORD, an experienced and able legislator, from a cotton and tobacco producing district, who has heretofore supported the Haugen bills, saw grave danger in the present bill, with its unlimited and compulsory taxes on cotton, tobacco, and other products of the State he is from, and he opposed and voted against the fee. He condemned it as vicious and unjust. He, like nearly all the Georgians, voted for the Haugen bill, as I did, with the fee stricken out. This is the way the bill should have passed and it would have no doubt been signed by the President and the farmers would have gotten a revolving fund of $400,000,000, without the taxes. My vote was for the bill with the fee out and then against the tax. There is no fairness in taxing the farmer to keep up the revolving fund. The fund ought to be appropriated directly out of the Treasury and be free from taxes.

The defeat of the Haugen bill can be laid at the door of the Corn and Wheat Belt group who have insisted upon this iniquitous tax on cotton, tobacco, hogs, cattle, and other farm products or nothing. The bill that was up in the House, as I stated in my address of May 2, is quite a different bill to the McNary bill as it passed the Senate. The Senate bill carried the McKellar amendment that practically rendered the fee inoperative.

I VOTED FOR HAUGEN BILL WITHOUT THE TAX

We passed the bill, carrying $400,000,000 as a revolving fund, without the fee or tax, in the Committee of the Whole House, when Congressman ASWELL, of Louisiana, moved the Haugen bill without the tax as a substitute for the one carrying the tax; but the Corn and Wheat Belt machine was too powerful for us, and in the House, after the committee rose, the tax was put back in the bill. They were determined that the fee should be in shape where if the $400,000,000 was used on wheat or some other crop, the revolving fund could be speedily rebuilt out of money exacted from the cotton and tobacco growers, and other farmers, by the levy and collection of the fee. It would be levied upon every bale of cotton, every pound of tobacco, and upon other crops, just as Mr. GARRETT, Mr. ASWELL, and others have said.

WOULD THE TAX ON COTTON EXCEED $10 PER BALE?

Congressman WRIGHT, of Georgia, offered an amendment to limit the fee to $10 per bale on cotton and it was voted down. How high would this tax be levied? Evidently they expect to pop more than $10 per bale on the farmers or they would have been willing to limit it to that amount. Is this good and wise legislation for the Georgia farmer? Let him decide, especially as no one argues it will increase the price of cotton or tobacco. They merely argue it would "stabilize" it, but it might be stabilized at a price below the cost of production by a board that has all authority over the machinery. I can see wherein it would not only possibly bring revolution but absolute ruin to the South. The South now has a monopoly on raising cotton and tobacco. Why should we bind our farmers hand and foot and deliver them and their destinies into the hands of a board that might not be friendly to the South? Only 3 out of 12 members of the board are to come from States primarily interested in cotton and tobacco; 9 out of 12 of the board come from sections that want cheap cotton and cheap tobacco. What would that board likely do in stabilizing the prices of cotton and tobacco? There is too much at stake to take a chance, and I can not conscientiously vote to "hog tie" the farmers of the district I represent and turn them over to a board that will not be from our section and which might not be friendly to the South, nor can I stultify my conscience and vote for taxing the farmers.

They are already too heavily taxed, and if you are as interested in their welfare as many of you profess to be you would be trying to reduce their taxes by cutting down the tariff rates and otherwise making their burdens lighter instead of increasing them with additional fees. I will vote for tax reductions, but not for new taxes or higher taxes. Relief can only come through this course. The people know this, and you are not fooling them with this complicated piece of demagoguery.

I, of course, preferred my own bill, which I introduced early in this session, somewhat similar to the Crisp and Hare bills, which carries $750,000,000 as a revolving fund for the farmers and has no tax or fee in it. It is a straight-out governmental appropriation to make and keep up the revolving fund for the agricultural industry, for the good of the whole country, without further burdening the farmers with fees and additional taxes. It carries nearly twice as much money as any of the relief measures. Along with my bill many other good bills that carried no fee were pushed aside by the Corn and Wheat Belt machine who seemed to be determined to levy the fee tax or let farm relief fail. They have sacrificed the whole thing rather than take it and experiment with it without the tax as many of us tried to get them to do. The blame is not with me and others of my view. It is with those who have insisted upon additional taxes upon the people in the nature of the fee, which the President has held is unconstitutional and which he will almost be obliged again to veto.

WHY IT HELPS WHEAT AND NOT COTTON AND TOBACCO

The question arises, If the fee helps wheat, why will it not help cotton and tobacco? The answer is simple and conclusive. Cotton and tobacco are exportable crops. The tariff is not effective on these raw products, but it is effective on wheat and corn, and the fee would be a boost in conjunction with the tariff. There being no tariff that can give a boost to raw cotton and tobacco, then there can be no boost in the price thereof from the fee. The fee might become a help to the Wheat and Corn Belt but would prove to be a decided detriment to the Cotton and Tobacco Belt.

It would increase the price of flour that the poor man has to buy in the South by $2 per barrel, and it would increase the price of meal and western meats, but would not nor could not increase the price of cotton and tobacco, the principal money crops of the South. That is exactly what the Corn and Wheat Belt group want. They want the price of flour, meal, and western bacon, which their section produces, increased in the price the South and the rest of the country pays, but likewise these same shrewd but rather selfish gentlemen from the West are also interested in seeing their people in the West get cheap cotton goods and cheap tobacco without regard to the results to the South that produces cotton and tobacco.

OUGHT TO BE INDEPENDENT OF THE WEST

The southern farmer ought to become independent of the West. Wheat, corn, cattle, and bacon can and should be raised in the South. It can be successfully done. The South is a golden empire in opportunities. Nearly anything and everything will grow there, and we have the best climate in the world. The South's great son—the statesman and orator who "died literally loving a nation into peace"—the sweet-spirited and nationally beloved Georgian, Henry W. Grady, had this vision when he said:

> When every home-owning farmer in our Southland shall eat bread from his own fields, meat from his own pastures, disturbed by no creditor and enslaved by no debt, shall sit amid his teeming gardens, fields, orchards, vineyards, dairies, herds, and barnyards, with his money crop a surplus crop, selling at his own time, getting cash and not a receipted mortgage—then will be the breaking fullness of day.

These words were spoken by this great American years ago, but time has demonstrated clearly that he was right in his conception of diversified farming as a means to prosperity in agriculture. In Mississippi, where the farmers have turned from cotton to dairying, many large milk-condensing plants and cheese factories have been located and are meeting with great success. The people who have diversified in Mississippi and elsewhere are prosperous and happy.

I wish the good people whom I represent might give more attention to diversified farming and to dairying, for I think they would be more prosperous and consequently more happy than they are. God knows, I hope and work for all that I believe will bring better things to our section that has suffered so much. Because of my interest in farming and the interest I have in the people who have intrusted me here to speak and vote for them, I can not vote for anything that I believe hurts more than it will help them. God being my judge, I believe the proposition to tax cotton, tobacco, and other crops is unjust and wrong in principle. I have acted and voted at all times as I conscientiously believed to be in the interest of the good people who sent me here as their Representative. If I have made errors they have been of the head and not of the heart, for I yield to no man in my devotion to the people and the section I have the honor to represent. I have tried to see the good others claim to see in the equalization fee, I have worried and prayed over it, but my conscience has ever pointed an accusing finger at this proposed tax and has condemned it as unfair and unjust. While I have voted for everything that promised relief for the farmers, even for the Haugen bill itself with the fee eliminated, I have felt it a duty to protect, as far as possible, the cotton and tobacco farmers of the South against this Corn and Wheat Belt idea of an unlimited and compulsory tax on every bale of cotton, every pound of tobacco, and other farm products. This tax is wrong and nothing but trouble, annoyance, and additional burdens can possibly come to the South from the scheme. I have been honest in my convictions and have discharged my duty in the light that has come to me on it. In it I trust I may have the approval of the people of the first Georgia district, one of the greatest agricultural districts in Georgia, in whose interest I have voted for the bill without the tax and in whose interest I have voted against the tax, believing that they do not wish to be burdened and annoyed with additional taxes and believing it is wrong, unfair, and unjust to put this tax upon the men who toil in the sun, who work early and late, on the farms of the Southland. [Applause.]

NATIONAL SAFETY ESSAY CONTEST

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, recently a contest was held throughout the Nation participated in by the intermediate school children on the subject of street and highway safety. The contest was participated in by something like 400,000 school children. The winner of the contest, Miss Chloe Hawkins, is a resident of my district, living in Centralia, Ill. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having printed the essay which she wrote on this subject. It is not over 500 words in length. It may serve as something of a caution to people in respect to streets and highways.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following essay by Miss Chloe Hawkins, of Centralia, Ill., in my district, who was the winner of a contest participated in by the school children throughout the Nation for the best essay on the subject of street and highway safety:

WHY I SHOULD BE TAUGHT STREET AND HIGHWAY SAFETY AT HOME AND AT SCHOOL

By Cole Hawkins, Central School, Centralia, Ill.

One of the problems of the present day is traffic on our streets and highways. Each year there is an increase in the number of motor cars, and with the increase of traffic there is an increase in accidents and fatalities.

Last year there were approximately 24,000 deaths, and many more were injured in the United States by motor cars. This is approximately one-third the number which America lost on the battle fields of the World War. Of all the causes of accidental deaths, the motor car heads the list.

It can reasonably be expected that traffic over the country will increase, and as it increases the traffic will become more complicated. There seems to be but one way to cope satisfactorily with this problem, and that is to educate the public as to street and highway safety.

Laws and traffic rules are no protection to a public ignorant of them.

Safety councils of States and "safety-first campaigns" can not reach the masses as they should.

Everybody should be taught to feel a personal responsibility in trying to lessen traffic accidents, and this can be done only when traffic rules are taught systematically at home and at school.

It would appear that there are but few subjects, if any, taught in our public schools worth more than a thorough knowledge of street and highway safety. Is not the law of self-preservation one of the fundamental laws of life? An education is incomplete if it does not include knowledge that will enable us to survive the best possible. Our environment is changing all the time and nowhere is this seen more than on our streets and highways.

Twenty-five years ago traffic was slow and rarely congested, and there were but few fatalities; it was therefore unnecessary to know much about traffic rules; now traffic is fast, congestion is a big problem, and the traffic fatalities are so great as to claim approximately 100,000 victims every four years.

What we learn becomes a part of us, or, as some would term it, "second nature"; so must street and highway safety laws and rules become second nature to us and a real part of us. This can be done by repetition and systematic teaching, beginning when we are small children. To accomplish this best the mind of youth is best adapted for the training. Street and highway safety should be taught in the home as well as in the school because the first six years of one's life is before school age, and all children are in danger of traffic accidents.

True mothers should not depend altogether on the school to form the habits and dispositions of their children which go to make up personality and character; nor should they depend altogether upon the school to teach their children street and highway safety, so necessary for the protection of their lives and well-being.

ARTICLE BY MR. WHEELER W. MOORE, OF ILLINOIS

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Wheeler W. Moore is a resident of Buena Vista Township, Schuyler County, in my district. His business is that of a farmer, and he runs and owns his own farm. He is a student of agriculture from personal study of actual conditions, in other words, "a dirt farmer." He is also a student, and the time on his farm has not succeeded in a failure to cultivate his mind, with the result that his studies in his library on the farm, coupled with the exploratory trips, have led him to the firm conviction that the geologists are in error as to the real formation of the glaciers. This confronts us with a very important and startling suggestion, one that might well attract the attention of Congress and the general public when it is announced. So full of startling information is his development that I think it wise to give his theory to the world's greatest publication, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The following is the theory of Mr. W. W. Moore, set out verbatim as he has sent it to me:

INTRODUCTION

With a spirit of respect to the pioneers of America who made our land one of the free and peaceful nations of all the earth, and with full confidence in believing the Congress of the United States will ever retain its good will and confidence by fair and impartial dealing with its own native inhabitants and with the world at large, I thus submit a subject of the deepest import, suggestive to the removal of a clouded title now shadowing every interest existing under man's observation.

The rising and passing of a clouded title shadowing a public school or free institute or the world's business enterprise at large is nothing more than a budding and growth of another new truth, which, in the march of events, continues to displace theories and establish facts in harmony with the Divine Providence who created all; but why delay and grope in darkness and the shadow of ignorance while an endless world of undiscovered treasures resolved under a master mind, yet remains to compensate a worthy deserver?

It seems from the tide and trend of things our vision of fame and honor is being misdirected, inasmuch as it confirms too much to the massing of great wealth and fortunes, which, while being of a noble and worthy purpose when rightly used, yet there seems to be an urgent and more demanding need for intellectual thinking and physical exertions in the open field of undiscovered realities.

Civilization, while owing much to its wealth saved from its country's earnings, its educational system and moral obligations, depend largely upon scientific discoveries and a true vision of realities. The truth along these lines is the source of peace and freedom; every new discovery is educational and intensifies an optimistic vision of the immeasurable wealth and opportunities of our land.

As proof of my convictions I will follow these pages with a few inclosures disclosing only a few of the shallow mysteries of nature now existing under our everyday observation. With a foundation based upon the truth, the phenomenon of every object will correlate with every other object and with such measurable reactions as to withstand every test and give cause for every effect.

In the very heart of our civilization we stand aghast and amazed at our own ignorance as we refresh our minds with these simple problems of vital importance. We are not responsible for what we perceive in nature or our deduction and view drawn therefrom. We ask no one for enlightenment; we accept no one's conclusions except as they conform to the laws of ethics and the geographical engraving on the trestle board.

The whole phenomenon of both land and sea is a self-explanatory history of the works of the wise Creator; every object on the map, both animate and inanimate, is observed with utiring interest and understanding as it is surveyed and marvelously measured by the power of the mind.

There is no insane wondering in the field of natural science; our mighty rivers, our expanded lakes, our snow-capped mountains, the canyon, the cataract, the high and low plains are all explanatory subjects with such measurable relations as to carry us far into the deeper mysteries of nature, which likewise surrenders their secrets.

Novel as it all seems and the endless pleasure it affords, it carries with it a spirit of the truth which enriches us with useful and valuable knowledge concerning our lands, their soil, and the importance of their conservation. Every object, animate and inanimate, only functions as an effect; the cause is that of a higher power; thus science and religion are inseparable associates, harmonizing with every spirited truth in the Bible.

A revelation of the truth is the source of inspiration by which we are guided. We are not laboring under a false illusion or confronted with perturbing question which can not be understood, answered, and substantiated; neither is it possible to doubt the existence of an intelligent creator from a true knowledge of science.

Close the great open book of all the ages and cancel all its records; shadow the calendar of the whole world's activities, and from afar off into the background of chaos, try and feature the unfolding of all the marvelous wonders of creation as they now appear without a divine Creator and it can not be done.

From every angle and point of view consider the lightning and its trackless path as it flashes before our eyes and from a vision of our own we behold a helpless collection of electrons driven into seclucion and commanded to action by that same Master Mind that brought forth the beast of the fields, the fowls of the air and all the creeping things of the earth, and of which our own observing mind is a part.

Consider the ninety some odd elements of nature with their billions of infinitesimal electrons, timed, proportioned, and locked in secrecy and subject to release and made available under advancing conditions in the formation of countless living organism, and all is a ceaseless tide of evolution acting under the command of a Master Mind.

Why all this fuss and prejudice toward evolution? Is it because Darwin and his theories on the subject were not in full accord with the divine truth? It may best be understood from a standpoint of knowledge of that of my own experience.

My view of Darwin and his prescribed theories up to the time I was past 21, was transitory and of a skeptical and prejudiced nature, acquired in my home, the school, church, and from public opinion, and many of whom, like myself, no doubt, had no personal knowledge of what his work consisted other than that of hearsay.

In following the regular prescribed course of study in the latter part of my school days, some 38 years ago, I found it necessary to take up the study of zoology and as a matter of consequence, I frequently referred to the preface of the book (the fourth edition by A. S. Parker) in which it referred to the works of Darwin for collateral reading.

I believed him an atheist and that his work in support of his belief and to prove that man was a descendant of a monkey and the monkey from something lower and so on down the line; I thought seriously over the matter and wondered why a religious institution such as I was attending should allow a book in the school that would refer the student to an infidel's work as that of the Origin of Species, by Darwin.

However, deciding to carry out the instructions of the author and decide for myself as to the harmful atheist's influence that I expected to find in the work, I thus secured a book from a friend and with some fear and wonder I secretly and promiscuously scanned its pages from cover to cover, but to my surprise and astonishment I could only feature the strenuous effort of an honest man in search of the truth.

From my own point of view, his object of purpose was to prove by test the theories of evolution. He actually saw a varying difference between the species—a missing link and a whole chain gone—and set out to find it through propagation and breeding. But his method of practice was not in full accord with the Divine creation of things and his work stands in proof of his application.

Every species of the land is a relative compound made up of a certain number of distinct elements, united and commanded to action by a compelling force that demands a division and the missing link was a purpose of God.

Darwin went to the extreme limit of his ability with his tests and most of his answers were minus and negligible. Many times he detached himself from his regular course of procedure and studied his problem from a standpoint of geology. In this field he found it unexplored, misinterpreted, and a mystery, and with an open mind announced there was something wrong with geology.

But his work was not a failure; it stands as one of the greatest educational works in the support of a Divine creation and a Christian religion that ever was published; not that it is based upon the facts and conforms to the truth in all of its phases, but it reveals the lack of a divine inspiration which, as a matter of consequence, he could not vision the functioning of nature in a true science for an explanation.

Thus Darwin, honest, sincere, and an earnest student of the material things of life, should not be stubbornly condemned for his untiring efforts in proving to the world that no method of practice will ever enlighten or civilize humanity only as it conforms to the spirit and letter of a Divine Power.

The question of evolution covers a broad field and as a matter of judgment, in keeping the reader within the bounds of reason and understanding, I refrain from giving all my views to the full depth of my vision at this time.

It has now been some 10 or more years since I made these simple discoveries which I herewith disclose as only a part of the work. The whole scene was flashed before me in a moment of time as I approached a narrow gorge extending eastward of a lonely valley of which I had just passed through.

God, science, and all the wonders of the world, previous to this time to me, were bewildering and a tangled net of unrealities. I halted with astonishment and for a few moments stood motionless, silent, and alone in solemn meditation and thought. I was not confronted with a stupendous flight of imagination in the field of endeavors. The curtains were lifted and some of the world's greatest tragedy stood before me in reality. I featured the land of promise from "Dan to Beersheba," and staged the last grand drama as played by the ten tribes of Israel, and with new thoughts, new aspirations, and with a spirit of delight I proceeded on up through the narrow gorge of which I had previously traveled in ignorance, mystery, and wonder as to its formation.

The World War was on at that time and my first thought was something for peace and America first; but all my efforts to make a thing worth while proved futile, and instead of finding a place in our modern school curriculum it became a secret functioning barometer in a field of conflict and the author an innocent victim of circumstance.

As an American citizen functioning off the stage of action with a matter of such import as to interest every nation of the earth, I ask that every honorable Member of our Congress detach himself from his public duties at a convenient time and study this matter from an educational point of view. My composition and ways of explanation are faulty and hard to understand. Our thoughts are the only things worth while. We are all geniuses in this field if we will only think for ourselves.

If, from the meaning of the eighth clause of section 8 of article 1 of our Constitution, I should secretly withhold scientific discoveries or permit them, first, to go beyond the confines of our own borderland, then I stand as a selfish and unworthy citizen of the United States, disloyal to my family, and ungrateful to my God for a gift of intelligence.

The suppression of these facts, in so far as they have not added to my comfort or welfare or become known to the general public, they had just as well be sleeping in the silent tomb of some Egyptian king, and the world at large moving in ignorance and worshipping idols.

This long-protracted siege of silence concerning matters of such deep import and concern as to interest every nation of the world seems to be out of all reason and an insult to the intelligent acts of our early statesman, who, by an expression of their wisdom, granted certain powers to Congress as means of promoting the progress of science and useful acts by securing for limited times, to authors and inventors, the exclusive right to their writings and discoveries.

It is not so much of a question of time, energy, and expense involved in the accumulation of the required data from research and study in awakening the world to thought as it is to overcome the disqualifying effect that keeps a living truth off in the background.

However, the truth can not be suppressed only as it arises again, and without praise to myself or prejudice or gratitude to any particular party, creed, or race, I submit a minor part of my conclusion in evidence of my convictions.

In all of my physical industrial functioning and mental exertions in the acquirement of a purpose worth while, it seems to have proven futile and without success. I go back over the field and from a standpoint of my own implication I try to adjust my affairs to a more scientific and economical method of practice and every new effort seems to tide me still farther away from the things that make for success.

Where is the trouble? We try to play the game of life on the square. Is success, after all, an act of dishonesty? We are not different from that of other people except that our own immediate industry is carried on wholly within the confines of our own native land, while that of many others are national and international in scope, where we find from experience their operations are intricate and delicate—where a disorganized world seems to be making its last grand play for the natural resources of the land.

Scientific men are no different than other people, only that they stand aghast and amazed at the indifference of the jazzy, on-rushing crowd with silent tongue and thoughtless minds in the face of the facts and revelation of the Divine truth. Science sees God in all nature and to ignore the truth is to deny Him, which, as a matter of consequence, he bows and becomes a worshiper of idols in which there is no future, no fame, and no honor.

The world's evil seems to be the results of illiteracy, ignorance concerning the laws of nature. Science demands forethought, exactness, and a knowledge of the truth in every honest effort of purpose if peace and prosperity is to reign and rule in our land and in the world at large.

Science seems to have been ignored, despised, and suppressed throughout all the ages of time. Isaiah away back 712 B. C., as we read in the book, was ignored and despised. In the twenty-fourth chapter and seventeenth verse we read: "Fear, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee, O inhabitants of the earth," and in reading the remaining verses of the chapter and we find his thoughts were based upon fact and was in evidence of the truth concerning the previous dangers of the ten tribes of Israel and other inhabitants in similar ones throughout the region.

With a definite understanding of Isaiah's ideals, as found in his prophecies, might have enabled the Congress of the United States in 1922 to have conformed to a more definite and peaceful and practical measure relative to their active part taken in the Illinois and Michigan canal without a comeback of just grievance by a certain cooperative group of inhabitants from the peaceful valley of the Illinois River now after more than a century of time. Congress sanctioned the act and should pay for their blunders.

Isaiah's prophecies were in a manner correct, and if he had had the support of the leaders of organized societies during his time he would have walked the streets with a spirit of dignity and honor and well dressed, and the 10 tribes would have been saved from one of the most tragic deaths in the history of the world.

Illiteracy and the suppression of the truth and the loss of the multitudes throughout the land is what drove Isaiah to appear as a crank or bore, and walked the streets in an old slave coat and finally condemned to death. Every public enterprise constructed and carried on in ignorance and disrespect to science and the laws of nature will function out of harmony and destroy the cooperative spirit between city, State, and Nation.

As a native-born inhabitant of the Middle West, and reared and schooled on the border of the Mississippi River, my chief prayer is that the Seventieth Congress of the United States may study, analyze, and know for themselves all the details of this age-old Indian corpse, and with skill and the aid of science control the tidewater rushing through the bowels to the good and satisfaction of the inhabitants living therein.

My school days up to the time I was 21 years of age were limited and my studies consisted only of the three R's, and from practical experience since that time I have added another R to the common curriculum, and it is only through the kind consideration of men of thought and understanding and honor that I confront with these simple interesting problems at this time.

Our aim of purpose and activities seems to be misunderstood and objectionable to the swiftly moving crowd who apparently have detached themselves from their duty and obligation and gone afar off on an exploration tour of the world, leaving us isolated, alone, and tangled in our own net, with an impression that fortune only knocks but once at a man's door in a lifetime.

But with all of our trials, discouragements, and adversities we are not without hope, promise, or opportunity. The world's geographical area at large is our vineyard. The harvest is ripe and the reapers are plentiful. Our Government officials are America's gardeners—servants of the people's choice for world service.

As an overreaching ambitious individual, delinquent in the field of conservatives, I ask our worthy captains of the vineyard to pause for a moment of time for thought, study, and consideration of this amateurish, paradoxial introduction. I urge that they detach themselves from their earthly duties at a convenient time and follow me afar off into the jungles of time, where I have frequently ventured in quest of health, wealth, and wisdom, and a remedy for the inveterate ills of a certain class of agriculturists.

As a special introduction to my observance and as a further guide into my foregone conclusions, I herewith rehearse the scenes with a new spirit of hope, confidence, and independence.

RETROSPECTION

Reviewing the scene of the past as it appeals to our imagination and vision of thought from the totality of things, and there is a reverential and awe-inspiring significance which leads us to believe the works of nature to be an act of purpose at the command of a Divine Providence.

From the sequence of events every river system of the land was once a living organ, created, dominated, and controlled by a master mind in a manner susceptible to our knowledge and understanding and explanation.

They all lived in reality, and after years of growth and preparation each gave birth to a certain type of creature, all specific in kind and nature and endowed with a faculty of defense and an instinct to act in behalf of their own common good and in the propagation of their offspring. Thus they all march in separate and distinct cooperative classes from their humble beginnings throughout the entire period of time with man and mind in the lead of the procession.

Deviating from a summary of our retrospective views to a more minute and rational point of view, we thus compile our deductions and views as it conforms to the interpretation of life from its earliest somnolent awakening on the paradisiacal isles of peace through a period of disaster, isolated confinement, solitudes, wars, and on up to our present era.

RIVER SYSTEMS

Research and study of the Mississippi River system throughout its breadth and length and all, reveal time perspective in which various changes are recorded, portraying the spectacular stage of action in which animal and vegetable life were brought forth and conditions made possible for a continuance of their existence, with man and mind in lead of the procession.

From every angle and point of view we conceive the entire Mississippi River system as once a molecular eroded excavation extending out from beneath the Gulf of Mexico to the extreme end of all tributaries—an act of creation at a period of time in which the entire region was submerged from below sea level.

Upon the receding of the water from the highlands as the consequence of the lowering of the sea floor at the Gulf, the highest land elevation throughout the region was that of the upland plains extending out over the broad reaches of the valley lands and the groups of mounds on the invisible bluff connected therewith.

For a long period of time these upland plains remained a paradise for the peaceful abode of all the species existing thereon and created therein, but, like that of the Garden of Eden, the water level fell below a point of support and the broad plains, with their flourishing growth of vegetation, were broken down and countless living creatures were lost, including many of its tribes.

PARADISIACAL ISLAND

The history of the species from its beginning throughout the period of time in which they inhabited these upland-valley plains was one of peace and tranquility. The region abounded with a prolific growth of vegetable life, which being most suitable in kind and quality to satisfy the cravings of the beast of the field, they thus remained peaceful and harmless throughout the period.

Tree, vine, and shrub of a fruitful kind and of many desirable varieties were scattered throughout the plains and offered their wasting quantities to the full requirement and desire of man, fowl, and the creeping things thereon; and they, too, remained in peace and satisfied until the plains became submerged and broken down and all surviving the catastrophe were forced to retreat to the bordering hills where they took on a new aspect of life and fought for supremacy, food, and control.

SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST

The surviving multitude, after a division of the lands, took refuge in caves and on high hills and on isolated structures over the tributaries, which being too limited in scope in many regions for the occupancy of its number, man, beast, and varmint all fought, suffered, and died unitedly in their struggle for existence.

In other less populated regions of greater dimensions and food in sufficient quantity for their existence, many of the species multiplied and as the water receded from the land they emigrated and replenished the earth.

LAST GEOLOGICAL ERA

The last geological era represents that period of time in which the igneous and stratified rock were polished and conditioned by nature as implements of defense for the use of man and scattered throughout the land in various assortments, which, upon the settings of the stone age, man found flint the most acceptable to his use and skill.

FIRST GEOGRAPHICAL SETTING

The first geographical era of our earth covers that period of time in which the upland plains of all our river systems existed as a suitable structure for the propagation and abode of their own created species, with a special and distinct type of man and mind, created in the image of God, in their midst. This period ended at the time their plains were broken down and the inhabitants were forced to the hills, where history, archæology, and geology were dawning as a feature of understanding.

SECOND GEOGRAPHICAL SETTING

The second geographical setting began at the dawn of the old stone age and extended throughout that period of time in which the water was receding from the river systems and the way made passable for the multiplying inhabitants to roam the country at large. This period ended preparatory to the uniting and intermingling of the distinct species and tribes of the various river systems of the different continents.

MORAINE HILLS

The Champaign moraine and the Shelbysville moraine and all moraine hills extending throughout the Mississippi River system, like that of all river systems of the land, are natural conditions contributed to the actions of a portion of the invisible atmospheric elements while confined within a subterrane channel preparatory to the receding of the water from high lands.

We vision the entire load of these terminal moraines, preparatory to the receding of the water, as an active swiftly shifting débris, slowly advancing to a higher elevation under the influence of the molecular confined forces and terminated under a diminishing pressure. The scene as it lays before us suggests itself as an unfinished product of our basic soil.

Singling out and speculating upon the altered and relative features of the moraine's rocky débris and all is a self-explanatory history from which we record our conclusion. If the débris consists principally of unworn limestone fragment, we know they were carried but a short distance and suggest that the soil extending out from the region from whence they were removed should be rich in lime. If the débris consists principally of particles of coal, slate, shale, and sandstone, likewise we know it was removed from stratas of like proportion but a short distance from below, and suggest a soil extending out therefrom as of a less value.

Every questionable feature of the whole phenomena is a revelation and acts as its own interpreter. Some moraines were released abruptly, while others were released under a slow declining pressure, suggesting a condition in which many of the great bowlders throughout the land were suspended while in a balanced condition and in conspicuous places.

Propounding for a while upon the many interesting and suggestive features of the moraines, we divide our time and from the valley below make a research of relative condition as proof of our conclusions. From observation we measure the width of the valley and from their sides speculate as to the amount and kind of material detracted therefrom, and from a topographical feature of the surrounding country contiguous thereto determine with some degree of accuracy the kind of soil and the value of the land.

In conclusion, every terminal moraine is the result of advancing gases and the receding of the water under which the load was advanced, and each in their turn were consecutively suspended, beginning at the highest elevation and extending back each at a lower level.

CANYONS

All rivers of the land were eroded at the same period of time while the land surface yet remained submerged and it was during this closing period that all canyons were eroded. Canyons were eroded by the same molecular forces that eroded the river systems and under the same condition. These turbulent forces by which a canyon was created circulated their many tons of bowlders and rock fragments into a sand and soil producing material beginning at the bottom of the canyon and continuing upward until the great mass was removed and crushed in a manner beyond description, except, as may be suggested by the action of the silent whirlwind which in its trackless path we observe its captured débris circulating hither and thither cushioned under the canopy of a serene, calm atmosphere which, in all its aspects, rehearses a scene of antiquity which made man an active intelligent possibility.

As all rocks and other stratified material were laid down and consolidated in water with the greatest contraction, it is evident the concentrated energies of heat accompanying the molecular forces in their subterranean advancement was the principal agent in releasing by expansion and reducing by friction and force the detracted material in the most rapid and terrific manner.

The canyon, while it exists as an endless feature of beauty and grandeur, is not without its aspects of fear and displeasures, all of which interwoven on the mind of man presents a vague conception of realities susceptible to a revelation of the divine truth.

The questionable bowlder alone, scattered throughout the valleys and many suspended high upon the bordering cliffs of the canyons and apparently of but little interest to the observer, yet they present a text of the deepest thought and study; its size, shape, color, position, composition are all associated acquirement with measurable relations to that of every other material object under our observation.

The bowlders of the canyon and the creeks and the tributaries throughout were implements of nature in the erosion of the rivers and in part were extended from beneath the gulfs of their rivers in which they were extended therefrom.

There is a sublime significance on the mind of every man as he looks down into the abyss of the canyons and rivers within which his own soul once united in simplicity and bliss as its architect, sculptor, and artist, and with equal dexterity and skill subjected the detracted material as elements of affinity and endowed them with life and mind as an intelligent observer and interpreter, bringing to our minds the words of St. John when he said, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God."

Our minds and explanations are not limited or contented with a short version of the material aspects of the canyon alone, which, in a sense, the scene is only a prototype or design portraying the spectacular stage of action within which the activities of reality was an acquirement of necessity.

The alluring broad bands of opulent colors and varying tints extending from the tops of the canyon to their lowest depth are all explanatory features as to the dramatic actions of the material elements while perpetuating in strict obedience to the God commanding spiritual forces.

There is a reverential and awe-inspiring significance on the mind of every human being as he gazes upon the immensity of the canyons whereby we may know the elementary principles constituting our bodies were detracted participating parts of our river systems and made available as an acquirement of an ethical law which abides with us throughout all life and is the soul after death.

PERSONALITIES

From this geographical field of exploration we come out into the open and stand before the bar of human judgment, realizing that no one lives unto himself alone; consequently, our action and behavior must function within the bounds of justice and fair play. These thoughts bring us into the open field of personalities, where we all stand on an equality to judge and be judged. Each has his own definite and distinct qualifications, known best to himself only, and it is only through an impartial trial and inquiry that we are correctly rated and classified as an acceptance in our choice of duty.

Our thoughts as compiled by the pen are in evidence as the worst that is in use, for there is a deduction to be made from much of our radical aggression, which in all is not a part of our own. I have written much, perhaps too much, but it is original—it is the outburst of a smoldering fire started and known to certain Congressmen more than 10 years ago.

From the nature and importance of these questions and my long enduring patience, I feel I am acting quite within my rights without being condemned or classified as a weakling, a crank, a bewildered hybrid acting without forethought or an object of purpose or without an ethical or ethnological anchorage.

I am not in the field as a fraud or an impostor or a shiftless nonproducing entity to beg and subject myself to the grievance of my fellow men while I continue with a normal mind and a will and physical ability to put into design and carry on a desired purpose of a worthwhile effort.

Neither is it my desire to spend the remaining days of my life fighting an army of disguised atheists or other selfish aspirants seeking whom they may devour through a silent intolerant attitude of dogmatism and illiteracy, thus forcing one to appear as a subject of sympathy and an object of pity. We may be censured, condemned, and burned at the stake or run through the saw, but we will never retract or deny what we know to be the works of God.

While my object of purpose was to confine my thoughts wholly to geographical conclusions, I find myself continually diverging from the subject into the field of personalities where conduct and behavior is a demonstrating feature now on trial through the entire world—where personalities are tried, condemned, and booked as an artificial barometer and a "Fox" in the field of honest endeavors. Thus as a matter of consequence we reason and compile our thoughts from far-reaching conclusions quite apart from the subject of the text.

But inasmuch as all of the material constituting the earth's stratas were reversed upon deposition our thoughts are not entirely out of harmony with nature when we diverge from the subject and write the first as last and the last as first. Thus we continue on with our lines crossed in this unfashionable way in order to obtain the right focus for a correct understanding and a revelation of the divine truth.

CREATION

The creation of the world and that of the universe was a preconceived plan of a master mind as a place of abode to the awakening activities of all prevailing life and the soul of man as a predominating feature in control of the entire kingdom.

As the beginning of time and the extension of space is not within our scope of vision or computation, we can only interest and concern ourselves from the beginning of the earth and that of the planetary system of our universe which carries us back into a period of time when all material matter was an ever acting composition resolved under a mind-commanding force which we call God.

In all of our computation relative to the myriads of living species and their diverging difference of composition which, continuing on in the same definite proportions under normal conditions, we thus have a perfect right to feature the human family, who with a creative mind of his own, as a specific creature akin to God and created in His image.

Owing to perplexing problems of a personal nature and of a serious lingering consequence, it is only recently that I have gone over my former preface with an object of making some deductions and molding it into a short introduction suitable to the work, but as an amateur in the field of composition the finis of the subject seemed to be an acquirement of an additional thought rather than that of subtraction; thus, as a matter of consequence, I made a few revisions and continued on with the discourse in the way of least resistance and now, without further apology or comment, this concludes my text.

WHEELER W. MOORE,
Rushville, Ill.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NO QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have a full membership of the House here, and anyway I am going to make a point of order. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 77]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and twenty-eight Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 15 minutes to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal and the disposal of routine business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. CLARKE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, on what subject?

Mr. ALMON. It is on a very important piece of legislation pending before this Congress, of very great national interest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

THE SHOOTING OF JACOB H. HANSON

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, it is my desire to announce to the House that on Sunday morning last the secretary of the Niagara Falls Elks Lodge, Jacob H. Hanson, while returning to his home from a fraternal mission, was held up on the public highway, his automobile riddled with bullets and himself shot through the right temple, blinding both of his eyes, fracturing his skull, the bullet lodging in the back of his head, by members of the United States Coast Guard, disguised in the garb of bandits and highwaymen. These men waited for him on a hill which has sharp curves where it is difficult to make speed. When this splendid citizen of Niagara Falls came along, driving alone in his automobile, these men pounced upon him and shot him, perhaps, fatally. To-day he is lying between life and death in St. Mary's Hospital in Niagara Falls an innocent victim of the agents of the Government of his country.

I tell you, my friends, that local feeling in the Niagara district runs high. Mass meetings are now being held, and while the citizens on the Niagara frontier are as patriotic and as law-abiding as are the citizens of any other part of the country, these Federal officers, unless they are demobilized, unless they are prohibited from the promiscuous use of guns and gun play, it will be difficult for them to enforce the law. Respect for their calling is at a very low ebb, and some prompt and definite action must be taken on the part of our Federal officials, and at once.

It is my purpose to introduce a resolution in the House at once calling for immediate congressional action. I am going to insist that those in charge of the Coast Guard of this country, in keeping with the time-honored traditions of that splendid branch of the Federal service, drive from its personnel these thugs and gunmen who go about the country disguised in the uniform of Federal officials unnecessarily molesting our people. We are all in favor of the enforcement of the law and of the Constitution, but we desire to voice our strenuous protest against the tactics pursued by these men; tactics which permit them to cover the real object of their calling with the uniform of the Coast Guard, hidden, in the darkness of night and acting like gunmen and bandits shooting our citizens down on the highway.

This almost fatal accident did not occur on the International Bridge or on the ferry leading into the United States from the Dominion of Canada; it occurred on an inland road in America, where every citizen should be protected by both Federal and local officers, rather than to be shot down in the murderous way in which this splendid officer of a lodge of this great fraternal order was cut down while returning from his mission of mercy.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Of course, I yield to my colleague.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Is it not a fact that, rather than putting those men out of the Federal service, their superiors protect them and lend no aid to the prosecuting officer, but circumvent justice in every way possible? Is not that the situation.

Mr. MEAD. That is exactly the situation in this case, I will say to my friend. The local authorities took immediate action, but the Federal officials rushed forward men to take and seclude them from the local authorities. My friends, such occurrences are doing more to bring law into disrepute and contempt than any other force that I recall in this country. These alleged enforcement officers are lower and have more evil in their hearts than the very bootleggers whom they are supposed to be seeking.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes. I gladly yield to my colleague.

Mr. O'CONNELL. This speech of my colleague from New York is a most damning indictment. It is a repetition of what we are hearing from all sections of the country. In the effort to enforce an unpopular law those whose duty it is to see that the law is enforced have, as my friend so aptly said, engaged the services of men who have no regard for the rights, or even the lives, of our citizens or their property. I ask the gentleman from New York, whose speech has electrified the membership of the House, if it is not a fact that, judging from these ruthless murders all over our country, the men who are expected to protect our citizens are in many cases persons of questionable character who should never be associated with positions of such responsibility and authority?

Mr. MEAD. Yes, sir. The gentleman states the exact fact, and I thank him for the interruption. This is not a party question. It is a human question, and in the name of humanity I come to you, my colleagues, for immediate action. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may have two additional minutes in order that I may ask him a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. I simply want to ask the gentleman from New York whether he is familiar with the case of Perle S. Thomas, of Florida, who a few months ago was murdered on a public road under exactly the same circumstances? When the officers were indicted for murder they were defended by attorneys sent by the Attorney General of the United States and they also employed a local attorney at a high fee to defend them. The jury found the officers guilty of murder and one was sentenced to death, and now the Federal Government is still further defending those murderers by appealing the case to the upper court.

Mr. MEAD. I am indebted to the gentleman for suggesting a parallel case.

Mr. WYANT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WYANT. Do I understand that these two men were Coast Guard men dressed in overalls?

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

Mr. WYANT. I am advised that this occurred at 3 o'clock in the morning and that the car was full of liquor—is that correct?

Mr. MEAD. It certainly is not correct. There was absolutely no liquor in the car. There was a meeting of the lodge of Elks at Tonawanda and this officer of the lodge in Niagara Falls attended that meeting. It was a large meeting and in order to accommodate several friends he took them from Tonawanda to Lewiston, quite a distance from his own home, and he was returning to Niagara Falls when this brutal attack upon him occurred, but there was no liquor whatever in the car. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Under permission to extend my remarks I herewith print a statement furnished to me by Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, Member of Congress, Illinois, as to the murder of Perle S. Thomas, of Fort Pierce, Fla.:

MURDER OF PERLE S. THOMAS

Perle S. Thomas, of Fort Pierce, Fla., was a traveling salesman for the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co. He was a peaceful, inoffensive citizen, living with his wife and children and supporting them out of the wages he received as a traveling salesman. On the night of the 4th of February, 1927, he was driving home in his car to spend the following day, Sunday, with his family in Fort Pierce. About 4 miles south of Fort Pierce, in a lonely spot on the road, he was commanded to halt. A short time prior to that, while traveling over this same road and returning to his family at the end of his week's work he was stopped at about this same point on the road and assaulted by two drunken men. When the order came to him to halt he speeded up his car, thinking that he was again to be assaulted. The men who commanded him to halt were United States immigration officers, employed by the Bureau of Immigration at Washington. When he failed to stop, the officers got in a high-powered car, which they had parked by the roadside, and quickly overtook him and passed him. They stopped the car ahead of him, blocking the road, and he was compelled to stop. Without any explanation to him as to the reasons for their attempt to stop him, they fired into his car and killed him. Soon afterwards these officials, six of them in number, were indicted by the grand jury of that county in Florida and were tried. Two of them were convicted of the crime of murder in the second degree and were sentenced to the penitentiary in the State of Florida for life. One of them was found guilty of murder in the first degree and was sentenced to death by electrocution. The case was dismissed as to two of them, and the case against the remaining officer has not yet been finally disposed of. The Department of Justice, under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, without any examination into the merits of the case, sent an Assistant Attorney General to Florida to defend the murderers. Under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, a local attorney was employed, for a very large fee, to defend the murderers. Arrangements have now been made by the Department of Justice to appeal the case to the Supreme Court of Florida, and attorneys have been employed to exhaust every resource of the Federal Government to overturn the verdict of the jury and to secure the acquittal of these murderers.

The estate of Perle S. Thomas has been appraised, and the entire value of his estate is appraised at $200. Mob violence in Florida in this case has been prevented only by transferring the murderers to a jail in another county. The relatives of Perle S. Thomas, of whom I am one, are contributing to a fund for the purpose of employing attorneys to see that justice is done in this case and that proper punishment upon these murderers is inflicted. We have opposed to us all the resources of the Department of Justice of the United States.

It occurs to me that when murders are committed by officers of the United States it ought not to be within the province of the Department of Justice to defend the murderers. I have not the slightest doubt but that the entire resources of the Federal Department of Justice will be exhausted in an attempt to save from proper punishment these Federal officials in New York who have been guilty of a similar crime. In such cases as the case of Perle Thomas, if there is any interference at all on the part of the Department of Justice, I submit that it ought to be in the direction of seeing that justice is done and that murderers are properly punished under the laws of the States where the murder is committed.

HENRY T. RAINEY.

CAPT. GEORGE R. ARMSTRONG

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 4664, an act for the relief of Capt. George R. Armstrong, United States Army, retired, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 4664, and agree to the Senate amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill and the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Senate amendments were read.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the reading of the Journal on Tuesday next I be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of other matters on the Speaker's table on next Tuesday he be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KETCHAM. Upon what subject?

Mr. CELLER. Upon the subject of letting Army contracts.

Mr. KETCHAM. The gentleman's remarks will have nothing to do with the question now under consideration?

Mr. CELLER. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE SEPARATION OF JURIES IN THE TRIAL OF FELONY CASE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on H. R. 12350, to regulate the separation of juries in felony cases in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent granted me, I call the attention of the House to the bill I introduced, known as H. R. 12350, entitled "To regulate the separation of juries in the trial of felony cases in the District of Columbia," which was unanimously reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia with a recommendation that it do pass without amendment. And likewise to the report submitted on the bill by Judge GILBERT, a member of this committe, which is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred H. R. 12350, a bill to regulate the separation of juries in felony cases in the District of Columbia, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass without amendment.

First amendment prohibits separation of juries during the trial of capital cases, except the jury may be permitted to separate temporarily in cases of absolute necessity.

Second amendment prohibits separation of juries in the trial of felony cases less than capital unless counsel for the Government and the defendant consent for the jury to separate.

Information has come to the committee that it has been the practice in the criminal courts of the District of Columbia, probably always in the trial of felony cases less than capital, and for several years in capital cases, to allow juries to separate during the trial of such cases.

The object of this bill is to put an end to such practice and to keep the jury together when trying a capital case, except the jury may be permitted to separate temporarily in cases of absolute necessity.

And likewise to keep the jury together when trying a felony case less than capital, though the bill provides the jury may be permitted to separate during the trial of such case if the attorney for the defendant and the Government consent.

The common law which is in force in this district is mandatory on the part of trial judges not to permit the jury in the trial of a capital case to separate.

Under the common law the trial judge trying a felony case less than capital may, in his discretion, permit the separation of the jury, notwithstanding objections may be urged against separation by the Government's counsel or counsel for the defendant.

The judges of the District of Columbia have in the majority of instances in the exercise of such discretion permitted juries in the trial of important felony cases to separate during the trial of the case. Authority to do this under this bill is still retained by the judge, provided counsel for the Government and the defendant consent thereto, and not otherwise.

A correct interpretation of the common law uniformly recognized in respect of the separation of a jury in the trial of a capital case is thus stated:

"In capital cases, the jurors may be kept together by an officer and not allowed to separate from the time they are impaneled and sworn. It is not permissible to allow a separation even by the consent of, or at the request of, the defendant. This rule does not apply, however, to a temporary separation in cases of absolute necessity."

The rule of the common law in regard to felony cases not capital is thus interpreted:

"In felonies not capital, it is within the discretion of the trial court to determine whether or not the jurors may separate; but, where they are permitted to separate, the judge should admonish them not to hold conversations among themselves or with other persons, or allow other persons to talk with them concerning the case on trial."

There are no court records in any of the States, so far as can be ascertained, which show the practice of the judges of the States in the trial of important felony cases as to locking up or permitting the jury to separate, though it is generally understood that the practice is, and the committee thinks it is the proper practice, to keep the jury together during the trial of such cases, unless counsel for the Government and the defendant consent for the jury to separate.

In the judgment of the committee, the rule in the trial of capital cases, which requires the jury to be kept together except in cases of pressing or absolute necessity, should never be relaxed; and that in the trial of important felony cases less than capital the jury should be kept together, unless counsel consent for them to separate.

The right of trial by jury has always in England and in this country been considered of such vital importance to the security of the life, liberty, and property of the citizen that great care has been and should be taken to preserve it unimpaired. That the person accused may have the full benefit of a judgment by his peers, it is absolutely necessary that the minds of the jurors should not have prejudged his case; that no impression should be made to operate on them, except what is derived from the testimony given in court, and that they should continue impartial and unbiased.

In the opinion of the court, Chief Justice Gibson presiding, in the case of Pieffer v. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, being a murder case, decided in 1851, this excerpt appears:

"Even the forms and usages of the law conduce to justice; but the common law, which forbids the separation of a jury in a capital case before they have been discharged, touches not matter of form but matter of substance. It is not too much to say that if it were abolished few influential culprits would be convicted and that few friendless ones, pursued by powerful prosecutors, would escape conviction. Jurors are as open to prejudice from persuasion as other men, and neither convenience nor economy ought to be consulted in order to guard them against it. Let them have every comfort compatible with their duties; but let them not be exposed to the converse of those who might pervert their judgment.

"A juror is charged with a prisoner as soon as he has looked upon him and taken the oath. The trial has commenced, and the prisoner stands before him as one of his judges. In this case the jury were allowed to separate after they were empaneled and sworn. True, that took place with the prisoner's consent; but there is right reason and sound sense in Chief Justice Abbott's remark in Rex v. Wolfe that he ought not to be asked to consent. Who dare refuse to consent when the accommodation of those in whose hands are the issues of his life or death are involved in the question? He would have to calculate the chances of irritation from being annoyed on one hand or of tampering on the other."

The practice in the trial of capital cases in the different States of the Union in respect of separation of juries pending trial of the case may be divided into three groups:

First, those States where the judges don't permit separation, except temporarily in cases of absolute necessity.

Second, those States where the judges do permit separation by consent of counsel for the defendant and the prosecution.

Third, those States where the lawmaking bodies thereof have vested in the trial judges discretionary authority to keep the juries together or to separate, which discretionary power is usually exercised against separation of a jury, particularly when requested to do so by counsel for State or defendant.

The practice in the trial of felony cases less than capital in the different States of the Union in respect of separation of juries pending trial of the case may likewise be divided into three groups:

First, those States where the judges don't allow separation in important felony cases, except temporarily in cases of absolute necessity.

Second, those States where by common or statutory law it is discretionary with the judges to allow the jury to separate or be kept together.

Third, those States where the judges do permit separation in important felony cases by consent of counsel for the defendant and the prosecution.

It appears that in approximately 60 per cent of the felony cases tried in the States and Territories the trial judge does not permit separation of the jury except in emergency cases and then only temporarily; that in about 20 per cent of the cases in the States and Territories where trial judges have discretionary power in respect of the subject matter the trial judge permits separation upon his own initiative; and that in the remaining 20 per cent of the cases in the States and Territories where trial judges have such discretionary power, if objection is submitted by attorney for the defendant or prosecution, the trial judge does not permit separation.

It is no reply on the part of any judge, attorney, or juror to say if a jury has been tampered with, the person doing so is guilty of and could be prosecuted for embracery, this offense being an attempt, whether successful or not, to influence a jury corruptly to one side by promises, persuasions, entreaties, money, entertainments, and the like. This offense is very difficult to prove. However, the committee can not believe that any trial judge of this District will entertain any objection to this bill for the reason that it relieves him of the embarrassment of keeping a jury together, and of the great responsibility of allowing a jury to separate.

Due to the fact that juries have been allowed to separate in the trial of important felony cases in the District of Columbia, the conviction has been formed in the minds of many citizens that while it is an easy matter to convict defendants who are poor, unknown, and leading obscure lives, it is a very difficult matter, even when the evidence demands a verdict of guilty, to convict men of great wealth and political influence, and especially is this true if the juries trying this class of persons are allowed to mix and mingle with the multitude and come in elbow touch with the lawless and criminally minded element, including the briber and the jury fixer.

OPIUM AND DRUG ADDICTION IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on drug addicts and drug addiction, a subject which is attracting very great attention in the country at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, under special leave granted the following is a statement made by me before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, April 26, 1928, at the request of Hon. STEPHEN G. PORTER, who with myself has long been interested in the solution of the problem of opium and drug addiction in the United States:

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN JOSEPH KINDRED, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF NEW YORK

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as a physician and legislator I am naturally interested in this very important question, more particularly because I have, as a specialist in mental and nervous diseases, in hospital and private practice, in the city of New York for 40 years past had direct and personal contact with the care and treatment of drug addicts.

Drug addicts, as a class, have certain characteristics, generally speaking, that are very outstanding. In the first place, from the medical point of view, they are of what we call a psychopathic make-up, not meaning by that term, speaking of this phase as an alienist, that they are definitely insane or have an overt specific form of insanity. But they are in that class of human beings who belong to what we physicians know very definitely as a class who have psychopathic and neuropsychopathic tendencies.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Do you mean that people of that sort are more susceptible of becoming addicted, or made that by reason of becoming addicts?

Mr. KINDRED. I mean that they are very susceptible because of this make-up. They are more susceptible, and therefore they are easily the prey of the environmental influences by which they may be surrounded. If I may illustrate it, just as a child born of parents who are both tubercular has a strong tendency toward tuberculosis, and which will develop in an unfavorable environment, so neuropathic persons are prone to develop drug addiction, especially in an unfavorable environment.

There are various other physical characteristics of this class to which I am not going to refer in greater detail, because there are so many large phases of this large question which should be presented to the committee and to the public as a matter of education.

The treatment of this class can be summed up in a few words which would be indicated to me by the symptoms, which, however, would be the minor part of the treatment. Fundamentally the treatment must be founded not only on the environment, not only on the essential features of environment, but there must be the power to detain the addict while he or she is being treated. That brings up the discussion of the various laws, and the defective laws in the various States and the defective Federal laws, too, in this respect. They will invariably break away during treatment, although they may commit themselves voluntarily, as they can in the States of Connecticut and New York, by simply signing a slip of paper, and they can under certain conditions be committed by the courts of record in the State of New York; but the greatest need in the treatment of nearly all narcotics in this country is a uniform law which would legally detain them while under treatment and provide a proper environment during and after treatment.

Now, as to the important matter of the period of treatment and the result of treatment. We treat patients in private institutions, and, of course, I have naturally seen a great deal of that class of patients treated in private institutions, because I own two such institutions which treat them, and also in the public institutions, and agreeable results can be obtained, both physically and mentally, in restoring stamina and will power all within four weeks, but the fundamental point about this is that while I have seen a celebrated actress gain 30 pounds in 30 days, a hopeless addict to narcotics—and I knew another very interesting case of a druggist under my treatment in a private institution who took daily 240 grains of sulphate of morphine and 60 grains of the alkaloid cocaine over a period of years, and while they both were pictures of despair physically, mentally, and morally—they fully recovered, showing the extent to which narcotic addicts can go toward being wrecks and still be restored. This brings me to the important question as to how long the restoration or cure will last. Such treatment is from a medical standpoint seemingly successful, the patient is "cured," his bodily health is restored, his mental condition has been restored, but the will and moral fiber is not restored. But there have been "vicious circles" established in the cerebrospinal system—that is the best explanation we have, and, perhaps, it is no explanation at all, and all drug addicts are apt to relapse.

The modern theory is that there develops in the body of the narcotic who has been addicted to drugs for some time abnormal or chemical or other substances as the result of their addiction. I think there is little or no scientific proof to bear that out.

I wish here to refer to Lawrence Kolb, who has for many years been a surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, and to introduce into the record an article by him, "A clinical contribution to drug addiction."

I had a conference with Doctor Kolb yesterday at my office, and I wish to introduce into the record his and other nonsensational, definite, and reliable findings on this whole subject, particularly by the Public Health Service and by other reliable State and Federal agencies, because there has been, as there is in regard to any disease which has proven the opprobrium of medicine, so much fallacy, so much quackery, and so much misunderstanding, so much cruel defrauding of the victims who have already victimized themselves in the field of the treatment of drug addiction.

Doctor Kolb's contribution will be found at the end of my statement.

Even reputable or so-called reputable physicians have used, in my opinion, disreputable methods in the treatment and the so-called cure of this unfortunate class, because they misunderstood the cause and nature of the disease, drug addiction, or because they were commercial.

Now, as to the period of treatment which will restore. I believe the result of observation, not only in the private hospitals but with the opportunity of observing during the period of Mayor John Purroy Mitchel's administration, in the penitentiary and workhouse of the city of New York—I found as a matter of fact from personal experience and observation bearing on the question, which the chief of police of the city of Pittsburgh has brought out—that while some few of them will commit felonies, the most of them are misdemeanors, and will require for successful treatment a period of from one to two years.

Mr. DYER. I regret that the committee will have to discontinue the hearing at the present time.

Mr. KINDRED. May I place in the record such matters as I think fit?

Mr. DYER. You may.

[The matter referred to is here inserted in the record in full as follows:]

I wish to emphasize, however, that while drug addicts, even the most chronic and unfavorable cases addicted to the use daily, for many years, of large quantities of habit-forming drugs, can, in a comparatively few weeks, have the drug completely withdrawn with comparatively little discomfort or suffering (and are apparently restored to their normal condition, mentally, physically, and morally), they are not "cured" in the sense of having their stability restored as against the temptations of again taking habit-forming drugs and having a relapse. To reestablish even the partly normal stabilization of such addicts requires, in most cases, medical and environmental treatment over a period from one, two, to even three years, meaning that they should be under actual legal detention, if necessary, during such period of time. This particularly applies to the large class of addicts now under treatment in custodial institutions. This large class, because of inherent psychopathic make-up, already referred to, who have been committed by the courts either for medical treatment or in connection with criminal charges, constitute, at present, a very large percentage of all the drug addicts in the United States. Many of this class belong to the so-called underworld and include a large number of chronic addicts who have undergone treatment and relapsed one or many times. In their number are included those who have been convicted one or many times of misdemeanors and in some cases of felonies. This class also includes, particularly among young male addicts, some of the most dangerous criminals who at times commit revolting and dangerous murders and holdups and similar crimes.

It is not to be concluded, however, that all this group of drug addicts are utterly degenerate and lacking in a desire to be restored from a condition of mental and physical suffering. About 20 per cent of them apply voluntarily for treatment and are very much in earnest in their desire to be restored, and a certain small percentage of them can be restored.

As stated, uniform laws, similar to those existing in Connecticut and New York State, should be enacted in every State of the Union and by the United States to permit the legal detention of this whole group of addicts. The constitutions of the several States would not permit addicts from these States to be legally detained outside of these States or in a Federal institution.

As a result of the enactment of the Harrison antinarcotic law, chronic drug addicts seen in private medical practice have unquestionably steadily diminished, not only as a result of a fairly efficient enforcement of this law but also as a result of the educational propaganda which has been incident to the publicity given to the enforcement of the law and to the subject of the dangers of drug addiction. The psychological or mental make-up of this smaller group of addicts is different from the average psychopathic make-up of the larger group usually sentenced by courts of record to penal or charitable institutions, either for the purpose of medical treatment or because of criminal offenses committed by them.

It should be clearly understood that while the cases of drug addiction among the so-called better and noncriminal classes of our population constitute a small per cent of this whole group, yet serious cases of drug addiction are found in all classes of society—the poor, the rich, the old, the young, the chaste and good, as well as among the underworld—and while allowing for the different effects of a different environment in which these may live, the characteristics of all classes of drug addicts, both physical, mental, and moral, are somewhat similar, though some cases exist among the so-called better classes, who do not belong to the psychopathic make-up, and many of these should receive proper medical treatment, if possible, outside of public institutions, and without the publicity of legal commitment, provided such legal detention is not absolutely necessary.

EARLY ORIGIN OF DRUG ADDICTION

Opium addiction, as will be pointed out in the following references, is of somewhat ancient origin and has been very extensive in India and some of the oriental countries, but the addiction to morphine and other drugs, in English-speaking countries at least, did not exist to any great extent until the perfection by Magendie of the hypodermic syringe and a solution of morphine known by this physician's name, and some of the first cases reported of hypodermic injection of morphine, which has proven to be the most injurious form of drug addiction, was reported in this country in 1864. Drug addiction increased somewhat rapidly during the first few decades after this date, and rapidly grew to such proportions as to attract much attention and the evil was recognized as alarmingly extensive until the enactment by the Federal Congress of the Harrison narcotic law in 1914.

While this alarming situation existed for some years after the enactment of that law, reaching a number in the United States variously estimated at from 110,000 to 1,000,000 at its peak, the evil has rapidly diminished since that period until now it is estimated that there are approximately between 110,000 and 150,000 drug addicts in the United States, according to the United States Public Health Service reports.

NATURE AND CAUSES OF DRUG ADDICTION

The nature of drug addiction and the characteristics of drug addicts are well set forth in the preceding excellent contribution of Dr. Lawrence Kolb, assistant surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, already referred to.

HABIT

Habit in the use of a drug is a result, primarily, of the psychoneurotic make-up in nearly all cases, and also a result of toxic diathesis produced by a more or less prolonged use of the drug. The repeated use of a habit-forming drug, even over a period of days or weeks, will result inevitably in the demand for a continued and constant use of the drug, and even the most stable person and finest of physiques will ultimately succumb to a continued administration of narcotic drugs for a more or less prolonged period, according to the temperament of the person taking the drug.

Habit in the use of a drug is a symptom; the prolonged use of the drug causes a definite disease and habit is a result and accompaniment of disease.

HABIT-FORMING DRUGS

Narcotic drugs really mean any of the several habit-forming drugs—particularly the types known as the chief alkaloids derived from opium, morphine, cocaine, and heroin—and also the alkaloids from the Erythroxylum coca, known as cocaine; and also chloral and hasheesh, and even, in a broader sense, alcoholic drinks, the caffeine in coffee, theine in tea, and nicotine in tobacco smoked in any form. But morphine, cocaine, heroin, and other derivatives of opium—laudanum, paregoric, etc.—and cocaine are usually referred to as habit-forming drugs.

Certainly strong alcoholic drinks and certain synthetic drugs and coal-tar derivatives, and even tobacco, and coffee, and tea are habit-forming drugs if taken to any great excess; but the effect of these, while often causing functional and other diseases requiring medical treatment, are not included in our consideration of addiction to narcotic drugs here discussed.

In order to more fully appreciate the several elements involved in the modern medical treatment and management of drug addicts, we must take into consideration the nature of drug addiction with respect to its constituting both a habit and disease.

About 75 per cent of persons met with in private practice addicted to the drug habit have unfortunately contracted the habit as a result of taking drugs through the careless administration of narcotic drugs by physicians for various painful conditions.

PATHOLOGY OR ABNORMAL FINDINGS

The morbid histology (anatomical changes) in cases of drug addiction—excepting, possibly, those far-advanced chronic cases who have reached the point of gross mental changes—are not to be found either by the microscope or clinical laboratory.. The only structural changes that have been demonstrated under these conditions are possibly some changes in the blood, and these do not differ from those in other ænemic conditions. There is little basis for the foundation of the theory that a morbid chemical or other morbid material is formed in the blood as a result of even the prolonged addiction of opium or other habit-forming drugs. The essential pathology of narcotic-drug addiction or disease is, however, a toxemia or a toxemia of drugs, which not only makes a profound impression on the intestinal tract and other bodily functions and organs but also produces an unfavorable autosuggestion on the drug addict.

SYMPTOMS

The symptoms exhibited by drug addicts under the influence of and after the withdrawal of drug addiction are numerous and parthognomonic and should be recognized easily by physicians trained in this specialty, and especially is this true of addiction to the derivatives of opium. The symptoms incident to the withdrawal or the taking away, without scientific or humanitarian treatment of the drug, from drug addicts form one of the most tragic pictures incident to drug addiction. Under such conditions drug addicts suffer unthinkable torture and will commit almost any act to secure the drug of addiction. This suggests one of the most important phases in consideration of drug addiction; that is, scientific and humane treatment.

PROGNOSIS OR PREDICTION AS TO WHETHER DRUG ADDICTS WILL RELAPSE

It is difficult to predict in advance of treatment what percentage of drug addicts will recover permanently and not have a relapse after treatment. The number who will so recover and remain well and stable through the remainder of their lives is estimated from 10 to 20 per cent, and this small percentage is particularly applicable to the greater group who have an unmistakable psychopathic make-up.

TREATMENT

The treatment of drug addiction has been, from an ethical medical standpoint, one of the opprobria of medicine, and at times has been in the hands of unscrupulous and sensational physicians and quacks and commercialists of the worst type. From what has already been stated as to the origin and nature of drug addiction it will be seen that drug addiction is not a mere vice or merely a sensuous indulgence, but that it is a disease and it must be treated as a disease.

It has already been emphasized that environment is one of the most important factors in treatment, and it is believed that the environment proposed to be provided by the bill I introduced in the House of Representatives March 30, 1928, and the Porter bill under consideration, providing for the establishment of narcotic farms by the Federal Government, with ideal hospital and farm and other environment and the removal of all suggestion of prison life and appearance of penal institutions, will provide the factors absolutely necessary in the successful treatment of nearly the whole group of criminal addicts.

Without going into the extensive details of medical treatment and management of each patient, it may be stated that there are certain general lines of medical treatment now accepted by the most experienced physicians in this specialty. The general medical treatment is based on considerations of proper diet, of moderate but not extreme elimination in the initial part of the treatment, and on the administration of the proper drugs. The most successful treatment is the use of hydrobromate of hyoscine over a period of about 72 hours, during which the patient must be constantly watched by a physician and trained nurses to guard against any possible accidents in the use of this drug for this period. There are many physiological and psychological reasons to prove that the use of hyoscine as a substitute for the drug or addiction over the period of time mentioned, particularly as a substitute for morphine and derivatives of opium, is the most successful modern treatment, provided there are no contraindications because of heart, kidney, or other serious defects. It is particularly pointed out that the smallest possible doses of hyoscine to keep the patient under its influence should be used over the period mentioned and that other proper and supporting medication and diet should be employed, and that the patient should have a competent nurse and physician present every moment during the period mentioned. Even very old persons can be cured, painlessly, of the morphine habit by this and other methods now employed by competent trained physicians, but a sharp lookout must be kept for symptoms of possible collapse.

Various other sedative and supporting drugs are employed.

As has been stated, the chief factor in the general treatment of drug addicts is environment. The proper environment is absolutely necessary, and the most unfavorable environment possible is the environment of prisons and charitable institutions in which addicts are at present confined. In order to provide this important factor of environment in treatment, each of the respective States should enact humane and proper laws, already indicated, and provide separate institutions of the farm-hospital type, such as the type provided for in the Kindred and Porter bills for the proper care of drug addicts. There should, of course, be provided all necessary facilities and equipment for the medical and scientific treatment of these definitely diseased persons, which should provide especial hydrotherapy or water cure, approved occupational therapy, as well as proper work on the farm, garden, etc., and such institutions should be under the strict control of physicians and nurses of scientific experience and proven humanitarian character.

AFTER TREATMENT

Just as there is now a universal recognition of the necessity of after treatment for the insane who have recovered, so there should be provided by the Federal Government and by the various States clinics for after treatment of drug addicts who have made a recovery or partial recovery.

Each of the respective States should provide either a separate farm-hospital or an annex to existing hospitals or farms for the special treatment of drug addicts, with the special facilities already referred to.

Clinics should be provided, under the supervision of honest and competent physicians, at convenient points in each State, where proper and sympathetic after treatment could be given to drug addicts who have been treated or who have recovered from their drug-addiction disease. In this connection it is pointed out that an amendment to the Harrison narcotic law should be adopted by Congress which would permit the administration of habit-forming drugs, now prohibited by that law, to certain chronic and hopeless drug addicts who can live in comparative comfort and pursue their occupations at home, but this should be done only under the strictest supervision of Federal and State medical authorities and under honest supervision. There are many chronic addicts who could never be permanently cured who could be made self-supporting and self-respecting and comparatively useful to their families and to the community by such a change in the law.

PREVENTION OF DRUG ADDICTION

As in other unwholesome and vicious habits, tendencies, and certain diseases, education, particularly of the young, in a limited and unsensational way in schools as well as of the adult classes, is the most effective way to prevent the extension of the drug habit. While warning should be given to children and adults, it should not be done in such sensational ways as have been employed by certain lurid methods in recent years by some fanatics and propagandists. The school and text books on physiology and care of mind and body should have proper information and warning in this particular, but should in no sense be so sensational as to attract attention of the susceptible to morbid habits, which otherwise would attract no attention from normal children and adults. Any such propaganda as is now being waged in some quarters is not helpful, but, on the contrary, is distinctly disadvantageous in reducing drug addiction and helping the victims of drug addiction or the public.

The international agreements and arbitration to abandon the production of poppy and Erythroxylum coca and the manufacture of derivatives from these, to be later referred to, except for absolutely medicinal purposes, should be fostered and consummated as early as possible; and to this end the United States Government should lend its great influence in a more persistent and active manner than it has done in the past, both in cooperation with the League of Nations and through any other medium of international agreement and arbitration. It must be recognized as a result of experience and common sense and as a matter of sad history that as long as the sources of habit-forming drugs are not stopped, so long will there be smuggling and illegal distribution and bootlegging sales of habit-forming drugs.

There no doubt exists national and international organizations of bootleggers and "dope peddlers," who constitute the most shameless and cruel criminals, who prey upon the weakness of those hopelessly addicted to drugs, and also vigilantly watch every opportunity to put temptation into the way of those who have had the drug removed by medical treatment and who desire to keep away from the drug habit.

What Pinel, the celebrated French physician and humanitarian, did for the insane about 100 years ago in removing the shackles of those chained in prisons and asylums and initiating enlightened sympathetic treatment, which has resulted in a new era in the treatment of the unfortunate insane, should be done in the United States and in the world to-day for drug addicts. The fact should be recognized that drug addiction in most cases exists like insanitay because of the psychoneurotic make-up and instability of the victims of drug addiction. Certainly the confirmed drug addict is of neuropathic or psychoneuratic disposition. It is agreed by all authorities that the confirmed drug addict is certainly of neuropathic or psychopathic make-up.

There have been some advanced steps, both in the United States and in the world, in the interest of this unfortunate class. One of the most advanced steps in the attempt to control drug addiction and the sale and distribution of habit-forming drugs in the United States was the Harrison antinarcotic law enacted by the United States Congress in 1914.

Other steps to control the curse of drug addiction in the world at large was initiated in the proposal to stop or limit the production at their source of the opium poppy plant (Papaver somniferum), from which all the forms of opium are obtained, and also to stop and limit the production of the Erythroxylum coca plant, from which cocaine and other medicinal derivatives are obtained. Some of the steps in this connection are given in an extract from an address I delivered on this subject, as follows:

THE GROWTH OF THE POPPY PLANT AND OPIUM TRADE

"The history of the commercialized trade in the products of the plant called the 'white poppy' is a long and disgraceful one.

"While the growth of the poppy plant, particularly the white poppy, which grows chiefly in Turkey, Persia, India, and China, extends back in the early days, antedating so-called civilization, international traffic in opium and other products of this plant did not assume a really serious international aspect until the period from 1856 to 1907, during which period China was deluged with opium and its people cursed with the opium habit.

"In 1907, however, public opinion of the leading nations, particularly public opinion in the United States, exerted such pressure that China and Great Britain entered into an agreement covering a period of 10 years by which China agreed to reduce the area under poppy cultivation 10 per cent each year. Contrary to general belief both China—drug sodden as she was—and Great Britain faithfully lived up to this agreement until its expiration, April, 1917, when China was again officially free.

"The entering into and carrying out of this agreement by China proved an honest desire on the part of the Chinese to rid themselves of the opium curse, but it did not mean a moral change on the part of the British-India Government, which, while it was by public opinion compelled, for a time at least, to give up the opium trade in China, did not fail to seek other outlets and markets for the dwindling opium trade.

"About the year 1917 the opium business suddenly underwent a change by reason of the greater facility with which morphine, one of the chief alkaloids of opium, could be handled and shipped by methods prohibited in the case of the transportation of the more bulky opium itself.

"Great Britain, through the British-Indian Government, has been responsible for the production and distribution annually, as shown by official reports for 1918–19, of 721 tons of provision opium—the sales taking place at Calcutta monthly at public auction—which is the form of opium sent out of India, to pass into the hands of private firms and corporations to be shipped to Europe, America, or elsewhere and made into morphine, codeine, heroin, or other alkaloids of opium and distributed legally or illegally throughout the world. This enormous quantity of provision opium does not take into consideration the 532 tons of excise opium produced in India for consumption in India, the Straits Settlements, Hong Kong, and the British Crown colonies and dependencies where the opium trade is established by law.

"Official reports of the British-Indian Government show that during the past two years the acreage devoted to the cultivation of the white poppy has increased by 20,000 acres.

"Persia produces hundreds of tons of opium from a white poppy very rich in opium, and China, since the termination of the agreement already referred to with Great Britain in 1917, has in self-defense to protect herself against smuggled opium, greatly increased the acreage under cultivation in the white poppy and is now producing annually many hundreds of tons of opium.

"The Indian Government has a system of selling off to the highest bidder the privilege once a year of establishing as many opium-taking shops and smoking rooms as the traffic will bear, this privilege or monopoly being known as the opium farm.

"Once a month, at public auction at Ghazipier in India, the excise opium, already referred to, is sold at public auction to supply the wants of drug users, where it is purchased as freely as cigarettes. The British-Indian Government also increased opium-smoking rooms where it may be smoked on the premises to the number of 17,000. These, because fees and the excise tax on the public sales of opium and similar excise fees imposed by the British-Indian Government in its control of the production and sale of opium and the control of opium shops, form a considerable part of Indian revenue.

"During the years 1918–19, according to official reports, the receipts of opium—consumed in India and not exported—increased 63 per cent.

"In the Straits Settlements and in British North Borneo and Saranak, and in some of the unfederated Malay States and in Mesopotamia, all under British control, the revenue from such licensing forms from 45 to 50 per cent of the total revenue.

TRAFFIC IN AND SMUGGLING OF OPIUM AND NARCOTIC DRUGS

"The age-long traffic, legal and illegal, in opium and narcotic drugs has been the means of millions of dollars in profits to the traffickers and of untold suffering and misery to millions of people all over the world, who have in many cases, through no fault of their own, been the victims of this traffic.

"During the latter part of the period 1907–1917, covered by the agreement between Great Britain and China, for the reduction and final suppression of the British opium trade with China, when Great Britain's opium trade with China had so dwindled that she needed to find other outlets for her hellish traffic and other markets had to be found—there being no intention to abolish it—and when the official or legal shipment to China had to be stopped, the superior possibilities of morphine and the chief alkaloid or active principle of opium were shipped to China and other oriental countries from Great Britain and also from the United States and from certain South American and other countries, whose wholesale drug firms found it profitable to engage in this nefarious smuggling trade to Japan and other countries who act as go-betweens in this business.

"It is also true that a large quantity of this same morphine finds its way back to the United States. It is claimed on good authority that the enormous quantity of 28 tons of morphine was in this way smuggled into China over the protests and earnest efforts on the part of the governing and responsible Chinese people, who have so long and honestly opposed the opium curse among coolie and other classes of these people. If, as is the fact, China is now cultivating the white poppy and manufacturing it into opium, they are not producing it in competition with the Tientsin treaty terms but in competition with this smuggling.

"The British-India Government, being alive to pocketing every possible penny from the monopoly of the opium trade, has seen the possibility of the manufacture of morphine in a remote country, free from the operation of any law or pressure of healthy public sentiment, and is now making not only provision for opium export, but is also manufacturing morphine, and, according to the Blue Book issued in 1922, the manufacture of morphine and other alkaloids, which was carried on with "skill and enterprise," according to the report mentioned, with the importation of modern ice-making machines into India. However, it is in fairness admitted that since, under orders from the Government of India, all shipments of alkaloids have been stopped and the manufacturers told that it would be necessary to find other markets.

"In 1919–20 the Blue Book (Appendix IX) shows that at the government opium factory at Ghazipur, India, large quantities of morphine and other alkaloids of opium were manufactured and sold, both in and outside of India.

"The gigantic, systematized smuggling has been the means of sending into China and the United States 28 tons of morphine and other habit-forming drugs annually for the past several years. With this spirit of evading that moral law that should constitute the policy of a nation in all matters relating to the health and well-being of its citizens, it would be easy for the morphine manufacturers and traffickers of Great Britain and the United States and the other countries interested in this traffic—even if these countries accepted the laws and treaties now proposed to stop the manufacture and shipments out of these countries—to invest their capital in some remote country for the purpose of manufacturing the alkaloids of opium in a country which refused to be bound by treaties now being negotiated to suppress this traffic as long as the white poppy is grown in any country beyond reasonable medical and scientific needs. An American or British firm could, for instance, establish a morphine factory in Mexico or Brazil, or in some other convenient and complaisant country, and thus carry on the trade, and this will probably happen if necessary to the success of the enormous capital invested in this trade as long as there shall be an enormous output of opium to be disposed of.

"I as a physician and Member of the House of Representatives will earnestly endeavor to cooperate with those who, during the present—Sixty-eighth—Congress, are working to secure the enactment of a law that will more strictly prohibit the bringing of cocaine and opium into the United States for illegal purposes and the manufacturing of the latter into morphine and other alkaloids for reshipment into other countries. But, as stated, even if such a law is enacted, and even if we can secure the more efficient enforcement of the existing Harrison narcotic drug law and other existing Federal and State laws, we can not stop or lessen the activities at the national and international syndicates and monopolies engaged in the illicit manufacture and sale of opium and narcotic drugs, with unbelievable facilities for increasing their output and its distribution at enormous profits through monopolies and smuggling, unless there can be speedily brought about an international cooperation embracing all the leading commercial nations, and particularly all the white-poppy-producing nations—India, Persia, and China—in order to limit the cultivation of the poppy and the consequent production of opium. This suggestion is made here in full realization of the difficulties in the way of the only effectual method to rid the world of the opium curse. It is made, however, with confidence in its practicability and that the proposal, not by any means new, will be finally accepted, especially if the enlightened public opinion of the United States and Great Britain, so sensitive to such great reforms as are here involved, can be sufficiently impressed and stirred.

"This awkward public opinion, however, came from the United States, or at least started here. We are in position now to make our opinions and desires felt more than ever before, as all Europe is looking to us for guidance and help. If that great class of British opinion which always responds to such a cause could only have the facts forced upon their attention, not in a sporadic way but by consistent and active propaganda from this country in a spirit of good will and cooperation, we should certainly promptly get results.

"The British governing classes and certain capitalistic classes interested in the trade constitute the powerful influences which keep up this monopoly traffic, although probably more than 90 per cent of the British citizens are unaware of what their Government is doing in this respect and would instantly oppose the traffic and aid us in a successful crusade, if they and the English newspapers could be stirred to a full sense of their duty in such a world movement. But if certain countries, or practically all the countries, making or receiving opium shipments are not included in this arrangement, or fail to make and carry out adequate laws, the whole plan must fail. If any small South American country, for instance, refused to limit imports and its government falsely certified that it required a hundred more tons "for medical and scientific purposes," this would provide the necessary loophole that would cause failure of the whole plan, as the entire output of India or other opium-producing countries could go to that country to be manufactured into morphine and other alkaloids and smuggled out again into each or all the countries which had accepted the proposed treaty and passed appropriate laws prohibiting or regulating the sale of opium preparations.

"The United States has in the past, and will in the future, most certainly stand in the front ranks of the countries favoring such effective action and control as will, by concerted world action, abolish or limit the drug traffic. Under an agreement proposed, each country will agree to import only so much opium as would meet its own medical requirements, to be disposed of wholly within its own boundaries, and subject to proper legal safeguards. Reshipments, exportation in bond, and other subterfuges that are not now illegal and make possible morphine traffic with China and other countries, chiefly Japan, would by such concert of action be stopped and the demand for the products of the white poppy of India, Persia, and other fields lessened. A large public sentiment in this country and a smaller sentiment in Great Britain and other countries have initiated movements to bring about this proposed abolition or lessening of this widespread evil, as is illustrated in the effects of the opium section of the League of Nations, their efforts being chiefly a reiteration of the principles of The Hague opium convention of 1914, by which most of the great countries of the world agree to restrict the importation, sale, and distribution of narcotic drugs by uniform and comprehensive national and international legislation.

"America advocated and signed The Hague convention of 1914. Even if the opium section of the League of Nations and the different conferences that have been held, both with and without the sanction of the league, and particularly including The Hague conference, those at the more recent conferences at Geneva, and the latter conferences this summer at Lausanne, should lead to a satisfactory agreement, the Crown colonies and dependencies of Great Britain not coming under the jurisdiction of the league could continue, as in the case of India and the Straits Settlements, where the opium trade is legally established, to produce the poppies, opium, and morphine, and with bases like the Straits Settlements and Hong Kong and certain ports in Africa, utilizable either as markets or points of departure for smugglers, thus nullify all international effort and intelligent world opinion. Here again the home Government of Great Britain could easily and absolutely dominate the situation by keeping them outside the league on the ground that the opium question is a domestic one, and she will probably succeed in this effort unless public opinion is strongly and promptly aroused. The most effective way in which this could be brought to bear is for all leaders of public opinion, both in the United States and in Great Britain, who are aware of the situation to commence at once and continue, in season and out of season, to start intelligent propaganda in both these countries and continue our efforts until the responsibility is squarely placed where it belongs—up to the British home Government.

"All these and many other facts bearing on the absolute commercialization of opium to these helpless subjects of the British Empire, who have little voice in the management of themselves or their public affairs, constitute a terrible indictment of Great Britain and its administration of the sacred trusts imposed upon an imperial government. In this connection I quote from Ellen La Motte's excellent article in the Atlantic Monthly for June, 1922:

"'This makes us pause and wonder what is happening in those rather inundated territories in the great German colonies in Africa, acquired by Great Britain since the war. Is the opium trade being established there likewise? It is not a pleasant reflection to think that by our assistance in winning the war we have placed something like 1,000,000 square miles at the disposal of the British Empire, consisting largely of British people, unfit for self-government, yet fit to become customers of the British opium monopoly. Unfortunately, there is nothing in Great Britain's past or present history to make such an assumption unlikely.'

"China, realizing how unspeakably she and her people were injured by it, has for decades protested against this curse of the importation of British opium and fought and lost two wars in an unsuccessful effort to protect herself. After she was defeated in the second war she was compelled to sign the treaty of Tientsin in 1856, by the terms of which she was compelled to purchase as much opium as British traders might wish to bring in.

"It was subsequent to 1856 that China began to raise poppies on a large scale in order to protect herself against Indian opium forced upon her by the British Government, and to prevent her money from thus being drained out of the country.

"Notwithstanding this system of victimizing these helpless peoples for the sake of revenue by the British-Indian Government, for which the British home Government is directly responsible, the home government takes, very successfully, great precautions to prevent the illicit use of opium and narcotic drugs at home. In Great Britain's self-governing Dominions—Canada, Australia, and New Zealand—the opium trade is not only not established by law, but is prohibited effectively.

"In this connection it is interesting to note that the consumption of opium per capita in the United States is 36 grains, as compared with 1 grain in Italy, 2 grains in Germany, and 3 for France.

"Why this enormous consumption of opium and narcotic drugs in the United States? Reasons for this and the medical, legislative, and sociological remedies will be considered later in connection with the discussion of the gigantic systematized national and international bootlegging and smuggling of opium and narcotic drugs into the United States and other countries.

"It is estimated that the full requirements of physicians' prescriptions (medical opium and its preparations) for all legitimate purposes in the United States and all the Americas would not be more than 1 ton of opium. Allowing 1 ton for all Europe and 1 ton for Asia for all legitimate medical purposes, it will be readily seen how enormously out of proportion is the present opium production already referred to, including 741 tons of provisional opium and 532 tons of excise opium produced in British India alone, in addition to large quantities produced in Persia, China, and other countries.

"In other words, it is a conservative statement to say that 1,270 tons of opium are produced in India alone, by consent of the British Government, over and above what is required for medical and scientific purposes, for the sake of commercial gain and human destruction. How widespread this human destruction is because of opium and narcotic drugs has been graphically told during the late years by not only imaginative writers but by the cold, prosaic records in the criminal courts and hospitals and insane asylums of our country, in the North, East, South, and West, as well as in the unwritten tragedies of many private homes of rich and poor alike.

NECESSITY OF AN ORGANIZED FIGHT AGAINST NARCOTICS

"We, as physicians and humanitarians and citizens, are not only deeply concerned as to this big and serious problem as it affects persons in the United States addicted to the use of opium and habit-forming narcotic drugs but we are vitally interested also in stirring up public opinion against the unspeakable crime of the governments responsible for directly encouraging and licensing, for purely commercial purposes, the growth of the white poppy and the sale and distribution of these drugs to the enormous extent mentioned, not only among the Chinese, Hindoos, and other orientals but among our own citizens.

"We should earnestly, in an organized way, give expression to opposition to this traffic at home and in the Orient, where it has been excused on many absurd grounds, such as "the oriental is not hurt by opium." Any trained physician or intelligent layman who has seen the baleful effects of opium and drug addiction among the natives of India and China and the Chinese in New York City, San Francisco, and some other large cities, knows how preposterous and unfounded such an excuse is."

The Senate and House of Representatives passed House Joint Resolution No. 453 during the last session, Sixty-seventh Congress, which joint resolution requested the President to urge upon the governments of certain nations the immediate necessity of limiting the production of habit-forming narcotic drugs and the raw materials from which they are made to the amount actually required for strictly medicinal and scientific purposes. In conformity with this congressional resolution, a commission was appointed by the President to represent the United States in a consultative capacity at a meeting of the advisory committee on traffic in opium of the League of Nations held May 24, 1923, at Geneva, Switzerland.

Hon. Stephen G. Porter, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives and a member and spokesman of this commission, stated in part at this meeting as to the attitude of this country:

"The United States trusts that the principles set forth in the foregoing congressional resolution will commend themselves to the powers who are parties to The Hague opium convention.

"The United States suggests, therefore, that the committee adopt the principles set forth and embody them in its report and recommendations as the basis upon which effective international cooperation can be expected.

"As a concrete expression of these principles, so far as concerns opium and its derivatives, the following propositions are submitted to the opium advisory committee in the earnest hope that they will be agreed to and their adoption recommended to the council and assembly of the League of Nations, in order that the doubts, if any, which now exists as to the true intent and meaning of The Hague opium convention shall be permanently removed.

"1. If the purpose of The Hague opium convention is to be achieved according to its spirit and true intent, it must be recognized that the use of opium products for other than medicinal and scientific purposes is an abuse and not legitimate.

"2. In order to prevent the abuse of these products it is necessary to exercise the control of the production of raw opium in such a manner that there will be no surplus available for nonmedicinal and nonscientific purposes."

Right Rev. Charles H. Brent, bishop of western New York, another member and able spokesman for this commission, said in part:

"The United States for its own part, and without any attempt at self-justification, that for the period between 1915 and 1921 much was left to be desired in the character and administration of her legislation in restraint of narcotics, especially as touching export. The Harrison Narcotic Act of December 14, 1914, inadequate by itself, was reinforced by the Jones-Miller Act of 1922. To-day our House is in order legislatively, and progressively so administratively."

President Roosevelt on October 14, 1907, called an international commission, which met in Shanghai, China, in 1909, to make a similar investigation of the opium traffic and to suggest means for its prevention or limitation; President Wilson in his message to Congress on April 21, 1913, said that this action on the part of President Roosevelt "initiated the world-wide movement toward" the abolition of the traffic in habit-forming drugs.

President Taft on September 1, 1909, proposed an international conference at The Hague to give international effect and sanction to the resolutions of the Shanghai opium commission, which resulted in the adoption of The Hague opium convention of 1912 by the powers assembled, which is in full force and effect between the nations which have ratified it.

The original convention delegated certain administrative functions to the Netherlands Government (thereby constituting that Government an agent for the execution of the treaty). That Government called two conferences in 1913 and 1914 to consider problems growing out of the execution of the convention.

Certain powers who had participated in these conventions vested in the League of Nations the agency or duty of executing the convention by treaty, dated June 28, 1923, article 23 of which provided as follows:

"That in accordance with the provisions of international conventions existing or hereafter to be agreed upon, the members of the league will intrust the league with the general supervision over the execution of agreements with regard to the traffic in opiums and other dangerous drugs."

Inasmuch as the United States did not enter the League of Nations, it is only by international cooperation that the suppression of the world-wide traffic in habit-forming narcotic drugs can be accomplished and that the United States Government can be bound; and it follows that the United States in its present status with relation to the League of Nations can only participate in the proceedings of the League of Nations in this matter in a consultative capacity.

The United States, of course, is bound by The Hague convention equally with other governments to work toward this end, and therefore accepted an invitation from the committee of the League of Nations charged with limiting the traffic in habit-forming narcotic drugs to cooperate with it in the execution of the proposed treaty between all the nations producing or trafficking in habit-forming narcotic drugs.

In this capacity the United States, through the commission appointed by President Harding, already referred to, agreed that the United States construction of The Hague opium convention was that expressed in Public Resolution No. 96, Sixty-seventh Congress, already referred to, and that any other construction would render the treaty ineffective and of no practical value. In other words, if the purpose of The Hague convention is to be achieved according to its spirit and true intent, it must be recognized that the use of opium products for other than scientific and legitimate purposes is an abuse and not legitimate.

In order to prevent the abuse of these products, it is necessary to exercise the control of the production of raw opium in such a manner that there will be no surplus available for nonmedicinal and nonscientific purposes.

It was further decided at the conferences mentioned that two international conferences should be called in the latter part of the year 1924 to agree upon a plan to enforce the proposed treaty in accordance with said construction and interpretation, bearing in mind that the gradual suppression of the traffic in and use of prepared opium is not yet accomplished, particularly because of reservations that have been noted by certain powers—Great Britain, France, Germany, the Netherlands, Japan, British India, and Siam—in regard to prepared opium.

To the end that these further conferences may be held and to meet the expenses incident to the participation of the United States in them, a joint resolution was introduced in the House of Representatives by the Committee on Foreign Affairs February 20, 1924, asking that $40,000 be appropriated and authorized for this purpose.

I append below a bill introduced by me to provide for a modern Federal narcotic hospital and farm to be located in New York State:

H. R. 12575, Seventieth Congress, first session

A bill providing for a Federal and narcotic hospital to be located in the State of New York

Be it enacted, etc., That there be located in the State of New York a Federal and narcotic hospital prison in order to provide for Federal prisoners and to relieve the overcrowded prisons of the State of New York now caring for Federal prisoners; said location to be selected by the department of the United States Government having charge and control of Federal prisoners, and to be administered by them. Plans and location to be approved by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department of the United States.

SEC. 2. Said hospital must have accommodations for at least 2,500 prisoners, in addition to quarters for a sufficient number of officials, at a cost of not exceeding $5,000,000. This amount to include the purchase of 200 or more acres of land suitable for occupational farming and gardening by the inmates of said prison, and providing further for all necessary modern prison equipment and hospital and occupational facilities for the modern care and treatment of prisoners addicted to the use of narcotic or habit-forming drugs or substances; and providing further that such facilities for care and treatment shall be made available also to such narcotic habitués who may be committed to such Federal prison or narcotic hospital by any competent court of record of the State of New York, on such terms and conditions as to payment for such care and treatment as may be agreed upon by the proper officials of the United States Government and of the State of New York.

Doctor Kolb's statement is as follows:

CLINICAL CONTRIBUTION TO DRUG ADDICTION—THE STRUGGLE FOR CURE AND THE CONSCIOUS REASONS FOR RELAPSE

(By Lawrence Kolb, M. D., Surgeon United States Public Health Service, Hygienic Laboratory, Washington, D. C.)

The facility with which "cured" addicts relapse is one of the most strikingly observed phenomena about drug addiction, and it is also largely responsible for the low esteem in which addicts in general are held. Prison physicians, police magistrates, judges, and others interested in law enforcement see a procession of healthy-looking addicts return to them time after time, and physicians who treat addicts in hospitals and sanitariums know that most of those who now come to them are repeaters.

Relapse is much more common to-day than formerly. There are two reasons for this: Recently adopted narcotic-control measures have been much more effective in preventing the addiction of stable normal persons than of unstable psychopathic persons, and the coercive features of narcotic laws have already forced the cure of the more hopeful of the curable cases. In other words, it is chiefly those who by nature are more predisposed to relapse who now become addicted, and the more curable of the older cases have in the main been cured, leaving to be treated a class of addicts which is peculiarly liable to relapse. However, the relapse of cured addicts has always been very frequent; but relapse has not been so frequent nor has permanent cure of addicts been so difficult as is commonly supposed. The widely prevalent misconception about the difficulty of permanently curing drug addiction is traceable to two factors: (1) As a rule drug addicts as well as their physicians conceal the addiction as long as it is possible to do so, consequently the addiction of cured cases is seldom heard of before cure is effected, and is never mentioned afterwards; (2) the repeated treatments of so many relapsing cases make a one-sided impression on the uninformed and unreflective mind. By a study of the subject we have been led to believe that there are thousands of cured addicts in the United States to-day, and if we class as former addicts all of those persons who after several weeks of opiate medication suffered for a few days with mild withdrawal symptoms—such as restlessness, insomnia, and overactivity of certain glandular functions—the number of cured addicts must exceed those who remain uncured.

The conclusions of this paper are based on a study of 210 addicts, embracing all classes of society, from successful professional men to habitual criminals. They had relapsed a variable number of times ranging from 1 to 20. The duration of abstinence from narcotics varied from 3 days to 10 years, but each addict included in this series of cases had abstained at least once for as long as 14 days. Nearly all of them had been off the drug at one time or another for three months or more, and the majority had experienced periods of abstinence for as long as six months. Abstinence was enforced in many instances, due to confinement in prison for violations of narcotic laws, but all except a few of the prison cases had sought treatment and voluntarily abstained either before or after their prison terms. The first voluntary abstinence was likely to last longer than subsequent ones. As a rule the time would shorten with each attempt at cure until finally there would be nothing but fruitless efforts at treatment with no abstinence at all.

The idea is widely held that opiates bring about a state of moral perversity that renders addicts indifferent to cure and therefore liable to relapse, or that in many cases these drugs produce some physical change that makes their continued use necessary and the impulse to return to them irresistible. It seems plain, however, that induced moral perversity has nothing to do with it and that physical dependence upon opium, though important, is, except in rare cases of prolonged addiction, only temporary and is second in importance to psychological factors in bringing about relapse to the drug.

It has long been recognized by students of the subject that the addict is generally abnormal from the nervous standpoint before he acquires the habit, while some, like Block (1), assert that normal persons never become habitués. It is probable that Block does not class as habitués persons who because of certain painful conditions are necessarily addicted in the treatment of them. If his assertion allows for this exception and is limited in application to countries which, like the United States, have laws that protect people from the consequences of their own ignorance, its accuracy is supported by my own findings. Ninety-one per cent of this group and 86 per cent of a group reported elsewhere (2) by me deviated from the normal in their personalities before they became addicted.

The fact that becomes so clear upon the study of cases—that most addicts are in the beginning abnormal—is in the viewpoint of many persons obscured by the more obvious fact that the habitual use of opium creates in any type of persons a temporary physical dependence upon it. This dependence, being the most striking thing, is often erroneously thought to be the most important, if not the only important, cause of addiction and frequent relapse. The passage within recent years of laws making it a penal offense to possess or sell narcotics and the consequent arrest of numerous addicts who for ingrained mental reasons take narcotics but who for social reasons blame the narcotics themselves and complain about the physical discomfort of treatment that is so often forced on them, has served still further to concentrate attention upon the less important factor of physical dependence.

A study of these 210 cases has shown that psychic causes produced their peculiar susceptibility to opiates and cocaine and that the cause for relapse was primarily the same seductive mental influence that was responsible for the original addiction. This primary psychic factor was reinforced later on by memory associations and habit and by the induced physical dependence that gradually developed. The memory associations and habit were in part created by the physical dependence. The primary psychic factor remained fairly stable throughout the entire period of addiction, whereas the other three factors increased in intensity with the passage of time and brought about a gradual change in the relative importance of the various factors. The force of physical dependence increased more rapidly than the other two variable factors. In persons who had been addicted for no more than a year the primary psychic factor was almost solely responsible for relapse in those who had abstained from the drugs for as much as 14 days and the importance of physical dependence was insignificant. In those who had been addicted for 15 years or more the force of physical dependence equaled, if it did not exceed, the primary psychic factor as a cause of the relapses that occurred during the first few months after treatment with complete withdrawal of the drug. The importance of physical dependence as a cause for relapse increased more rapidly in neurotic patients than in those who were considered to be normal. It was so important in some cases of long-standing addiction of nervous persons as to preclude the possibility of recovery by any means except enforced confinement over long periods of time.

ATTITUDE OF ADDICTS TOWARD THEIR ADDICTION AND TOWARD TREATMENT

An understanding of the attitude of addicts toward their addiction and their real motives for seeking cure adds much to our knowledge of why treatment of them so often fails. Some relapsing addicts have always regarded their addiction as beneficial rather than harmful to them. This class is extremely rare. Others, much more numerous, feel that, having progressed to their present state, they would be better off if left alone and no effort were made to cure them. The former accept treatment only under physical restraint and relapse as soon as they regain their liberty. The latter seek treatment only because of the urging of friends, the difficulty of maintaining themselves as addicts or because of their fear of the law. Their efforts are half-hearted and they usually relapse promptly, because the unfavorable state of mind into which they have slumped is further accentuated by the mental depression and physical discomforts incident to the early period of abstinence. The hope for cure in these cases is to keep them away from the drug until they learn that they are not dependent upon it, and until their realization of this, together with their improved social and physical condition, brings about a change in their mental attitude toward the whole situation.

The relapsing addict who has given up the struggle for cure and only attempts it half-heartedly thinks he is very much misunderstood and abused. This is especially true of those who have served prison sentences for possession of narcotics. Some of them frankly say, "If I were left alone and allowed to have drugs I could work," and many of them feel that they would be better citizens than they are if the law and their friends would accept their addiction as final and necessary. Many others who denounce the peddlers who sell them drugs and reproach themselves for buying them and bringing themselves to their present pass plainly show, when their confidence is gained, that their denunciation of the peddlers and themselves is a thinly disguised outlet for the resentment they feel toward the forces that interfere with their normal inclination.

The relatively tolerant attitude that society has toward chronic drunkards, a more troublesome and dangerous type of individual, furnishes the complaining addict with bitter reflections that expose his real feelings about his own habit. The attitude to which they object is reflected even in the air of superiority that some drunkards assume toward them. One of these in a ward with three addicts who were intellectually, morally, and industrially superior to him looked with contempt upon them and said to the writer, "I used to take that stuff but was cured 25 years ago. My doctor said when I stopped I would drink, and I have been doing it ever since." He was a repeater in the alcoholic ward and had been arrested often for drunkenness. The addicts observe that patients like this who are arrested while drinking and disturbing the peace are commonly given small fines or a few days in jail for disorderly conduct, even though they are found in possession of liquor in violation of the law, whereas drug users are liable to be searched for narcotics while going peacefully about their business and given a year or more in the penitentiary if any is found on them. Discrimination such as this causes resentment in those seeking for an excuse to continue their addiction. They consider it to be unjust and pose as martyrs to their weakness or ideals of personal liberty. "We are much better than these drunkards but are not given half the consideration" is an observation that many of them make. They fail to see that justice as administered by law is often an abstract thing, depending upon social customs to which all members of society must conform if they would be acceptable in it.

Most persons who become addicted to opium or its preparations through medical means become alarmed as soon as they become aware of their dependence upon the drug and adopt strenuous methods, if necessary, to throw off the habit. This is easily done in the beginning; those who fail have physical diseases that make the use of the drug desirable or necessary at certain times, or they have psychopathic traits that render them especially susceptible (2) (3). The medical cases that remain uncured belong to one of these classes. They are always ashamed of their addiction, although they often defend it. Shame is a sentiment which affects even the deliberate dissipators; and practically all addicts, except the worst of the criminal psychopaths, would like to be cured. This is true even of those who have given up the struggle and who would spend the rest of their lives without giving a serious thought to another treatment but for the coercive measures that are brought to bear on them.

That this attitude of indifference to treatment is a late development is shown by the fact that of those who were addicted before the passage of the Harrison law, comprising 40 per cent of the total number of addicts in this series of cases, all but three had taken treatment at least once, and some had taken it several times before the law was passed. It is also significant of an earnest desire for cure that 20 per cent of the entire number had at some time during their addiction careers voluntarily abstained from the drug and without assistance from physicians, hospitals, or prisons succeeded in breaking the habit. Many of these simply "lay around home and kicked it out" without telling members of the family the real cause of their discomfort. These successful self-treatments occurred usually during the first two years following the beginning of addiction but they sometimes occurred later, especially in patients who were addicted to cocaine and an opiate at the same time. One of the latter, who had been addicted off and on for 20 years, got off the drug at home with very little discomfort and without any assistance whatever. One physician, after two years of addiction to morphine, repaired to the woods with a camping outfit and a servant and returned in three weeks cured. He relapsed two years later because of a painful illness and was cured 20 years after this because of the activity of narcotic agents.

Though the sincerity of addicts who seek cure is for the time being beyond question, the motives which prompt many of them are fundamentally inadequate and therefore usually ineffective.

The motive for cure in newly created addicts is the instinctive revolt they feel and the vague fears that arise when they find themselves victims of a habit that they can not control. They discover that they are in a situation that they have been taught to regard with contempt, and this creates the alarm above referred to. If cure is not immediately and permanently effected, the instinctive fears wane and later on are replaced as motives for cure by well-defined fears of the law, by fear of social ostracism, or financial dependence, and to a less extent by fear of the physical harm that the drugs might do to them. The discomfort and physical depletion caused by inability to secure at all times an adequate supply of drugs has furnished an added motive for cure to many of those who repeatedly relapse. These addicts after struggling with the situation for a time seek treatment in disgust. Others, less sincere, seek it in desperation because they have no money whatever to buy the drug they need or because a successful raid by the authorities on peddlers has temporarily cut off their supply. A large proportion of repeaters give as a reason for seeking cure that they have revolted against the idea of giving so much of their money to drug peddlers. An addict who in his motive for seeking cure illustrates the motives that prompt many others came home one winter night keyed up for the usual dose that had been delayed only to find that his wife, in a burst of indignation, had thrown his heroin away. The street cars being tied up because of a snowstorm, he walked to his peddler's, nearly 2 miles, through the snow and returned to find that for $2 he had bought an innocuous drug; another trip brought the same result, and the third one failed to secure even an interview. In disgust he sought and accomplished a cure, but relapsed in a few months. Four years later a shortage of drugs, following a wholesale arrest of peddlers, prompted him to be cured again. He has been drunk three times during the 12 months following this last treatment, but at present writing seems determined not to relapse to narcotics.

REASONS GIVEN FOR RELAPSE

The reasons the addicts gave to account for their relapses often did not furnish more than superficial evidence of the real cause, but there was a tendency to overemphasize the importance of physical symptoms. A large proportion of the psychopaths, who with full knowledge of its danger had dissipated with an opiate until they became addicts, were unable to give any reason for the relapses that occurred during the first three years of their addiction. Many of them frankly said that they just started to take the drug again, and had no excuse to offer other than that they returned to their old environment. This same type of patient would after 8 or 10 years of addiction give weakness or discomfort as an additional reason for their later relapses. Some intelligent psychopaths said they returned to narcotics to get relief from the "blues" that followed certain difficulties. One highly unstable professional man brooded over the failure he had made of life because of narcotics and traced his final relapse to this brooding.

The frankness of the psychopathic characters (2) (4) contrasted markedly with the evasiveness and self-pity of those who had frank neuroses and with the complaining attitude of certain tempermental cases. The physical necessity for narcotics loomed large in the minds of the latter. They seized upon any remembered discomfort as an excuse for relapse; a healed wound, a leg broken 20 years ago, a mild hemorrhoidal tendency, an old cured neuritis, and other conditions from which they received no discomfort while taking an opiate were credited with causing pain when the drug was withdrawn.

Ten per cent of the entire number of addicts in this series of cases got under the influence of liquor and took the first dose of narcotics while their inhibitions and judgment were lowered—but only a few of them blamed alcohol. Alcoholic dissipation was apparently a deliberate first step in their relapse, taken in order to give them courage to throw their good resolutions overboard and return to opium.

The medical cases that were considered to be nervously normal attributed their early relapses to the return of the more or less painful physical conditions for which they first took narcotics, and the later ones to this same cause or to weakness and inability to work when not taking the drug.

PHYSICAL REASONS FOR RELAPSE

Opium, unlike alcohol, does not cause, so far as known, any destruction of tissue or permanent protoplasmic change. It does, however, bring about some very obvious functional changes. These result from the efforts of the body cells to adjust themselves to a drug the normal effect of which is to inhibit cellular and glandular activity, so that when the adjustment is made the cells and organs, though bathed in the drug, perform most of their functions in a degree approximating normality. This functional adjustment becomes strikingly evident when the drug after having been used continuously over a prolonged period is suddenly withdrawn. The inhibiting influence having been removed, there is an increased functional activity of practically all organs and tissues, and the nervous system, being suddenly relieved of a benumbing influence over which it has learned to record impressions with normal intensity, becomes hypersensitive. More numerous and more intense impressions are, therefore, sent by the tissues and organs to a nervous system, which because of its hypersensitiveness record them with magnified intensity. The net result is the withdrawal symptoms, some of which are very distressing. Collapse, which sometimes occurs, is probably due to an excessive relaxation of vasomotor control due to sudden removal of the artificial check under which the system has been functioning.

Nearly every addict in this series of cases discontinued one or more treatments upon which they had ventured before the opiate they had been taking was completely withdrawn or they returned to the drug a few days later. These abortive attempts are not classed as relapses but failures of treatment. Such failures were due mainly to the acute physical symptoms accompanying withdrawal and to the unfavorable mental reaction resulting from them.

The various types of addicts reacted with different degrees of intensity of physical symptoms, the objective evidence of which was similar. Intelligent persons with outstanding temperamental traits complained more than any others, the purely neurotic and the dull neurotic came next, while the psychopaths complained least of all.

The acuteness of the intellect of the temperamental persons and their natural disgust or distaste for disagreeable things caused them to exaggerate the importance of physical symptoms as it caused them to exaggerate the every-day trifles and inconviences of life out of all proportion to their significance. There may be some physical reason in addition to their natural sensitiveness why temperamental and neurotic addicts suffered more than the others. In any event, it was observed that the complaints of normal persons under treatment were adequate to the situation, and the temperamental addicts who showed few objective signs of suffering whined bitterly, while many of the psychopaths who had made up their minds to undergo treatment complained very little, even though they vomited, had dilated pupils, and showed other signs of distress. The temperamental addicts who gave up treatment before complete withdrawal was accomplished did so because of the discomfort which they were unwilling to endure, while the psychopaths merely changed their minds. The depression that resulted from the whole physical situation and the lack of the soothing effect of narcotics on their normal mental unrest gave them a different outlook on the world, and in this state they came to the conclusion that cure was not worth while. Some of them went through with the treatment, however, seemingly to save their faces; they remained in the hospital until the acute physical suffering was over and then left for the purpose of getting narcotics.

Some of all types of addicts sought treatment with the reservation that cure was impossible. They naturally complained a great deal. An addicted dentist, formerly a drunkard, successful in his practice in spite of the time and money lost in taking 18 treatments, had himself committed to a State hospital for 8 of them, but carried in a supply of morphine on each occasion. He nevertheless came dutifully with his wife to me for an opinion as to whether he was curable. The nagging friends brings about this sort of insincere effort.

The acute symptoms that contributed so much toward failures of treatment had very little to do with relapses that occurred two weeks or more after the opiate had been withdrawn. Almost without exception the early cases felt comfortable and began to gain weight before the end of this period, but slight insomnia and mild restlessness often persisted for several weeks longer, and in some there was an indefinite feeling, probably largely physical in nature, that something was missing. Many also experienced a greater fatigability than had been usual with them, but as a rule the early cases said that they had no physical desire or necessity for the drug within two weeks after it was withdrawn. In some instances this attitude was probably an expression of forced optimism. In any event, there was in many of these cases some slight physical reason for relapse for as long as two months. These reasons were not in any way compelling, but they added something to the various factors that impelled the unstable to give up the struggle for cure.

The acute stages of glandular and nervous overfunctioning resulting from the withdrawal of opium are also quickly over in long-standing cases of addiction, but in some of these it requires months of abstinence from the drug before all of the body functions return to normal. For the first few weeks after withdrawal of the drug these addicts, although they begin to gain in weight, may have occasional mild pains in the legs and uncomfortable sensations in the abdomen. They are very sensitive to cold, and the men at first suffer with excessive seminal emissions which they think weakens them. A feeling of languor and loss of "pep" is very common and many of them get discouraged because of it. If discharged from the hospital during this period the difficulties that they encounter on the outside accentuates their weakness and discontent and prompts them to seek relief in drugs again. Yet many of the patients in this series passed through this critical period outside of institutions and relapsed months later for reasons altogether foreign to the withdrawal symptoms. But in some of the long-standing cases, particularly among the more nervous, there remained fatigability, periodic diarrhea, palpitation of the heart, restlessness, and distressing insomnia. Complaints of lack of energy and undue fatigue were very frequent, and some who had been addicted 10 or more years claimed that this condition lasted for from six to nine months after cure and was the chief reason for their relapse. "I never had any 'pep' until I took the drug again," was a common statement. Attempts to justify their relapse doubtless caused some to exaggerate the importance of this symptom, but it was so commonly complained of, and it bears such a close relation to other symptoms that could be explained by loss of vasomotor tone that it may be considered to be present to a certain extent in a large proportion of cases. A feeling that they would "fly to pieces" was experienced by some of the more nervous types who were deprived of the drug after taking it 15 years or more. In a few instances the nervous symptoms were so grave as to make a return to narcotics advisable. This is well illustrated in the two cases cited below:

Case 67: A civil engineer 65 years of age, widower, was given morphine for 10 weeks during an attack of rheumatism 35 years ago. He did not become addicted then, but a short while later there was a recurrence of pain, and a Chinaman showed him how to smoke. From that time to the present he has taken opium in one form or another, using as high as 20 grains of morphine per day. The patient's mother was addicted three years before his birth and remained addicted until her death. She was hysterical. One of her brothers is described as being extremely wild, and the patient is said to resemble him. One of the patient's brothers was a drunkard and was killed in a gambling-house brawl. Other members of the family were normal, highly respected, and successful in a business and professional way. The patient was healthy as a boy, but had several spasms from indigestion. He began to drink at college and drank heavily of a Saturday night up until the time he became addicted to opium, but never neglected his work. He is now living on an income partly derived from an inheritance and partly from the fruits of his own labor.

His emotions have been variable. At times he was extremely pessimistic and fearful of failure. He has always been afraid of lightning and of falling through windows when in high buildings; and, though he has built many railroad bridges, could never cross one until it was fully completed.

Physically he has a large frame, but very small hands like a woman's; otherwise there is normal male development. He is feeble but well nourished, and there are tremors of the hand and tongue, and he only leaves his room to go after opium. During the past 10 years he has had a few fainting spells. His mind is apparently as acute as ever, and he passes his time reading Greek and Latin classics and amuses himself with mathematical problems. More than 40 years ago he studied medicine for a short period, but when examined was still able to name obscure muscles in different parts of the body.

There have been 20 different attempts at treatment and he actually got off the drug for a period of three weeks six different times. The suffering was always intense, and after it was over there was extreme nervousness. Once, after a treatment in Antwerp, he started home immediately and had hysterical spells for two weeks. During the last week of the voyage he calmed himself somewhat by drinking brandy after an abstinence from alcoholics for 19 years.

Following the last treatment taken several years ago he stayed away from the drug for three months, and was hysterical during the entire period; would laugh and cry without adequate cause, was not able to concentrate or talk coherently, could not work mathematical problems, suffered intensely with insomnia as was the case after each cure. He felt as if he would fly to pieces and as if he could break an iron bar in two. All these symptoms subsided immediately after he resumed the use of opium.

Case 84: A physician, 61 years of age, began to take opium for severe periodic headaches. After about two years he became addicted. This was 33 years ago, and in 7 or 8 years he was taking 20 grains of morphine daily.

His maternal grandmother and an uncle were addicts. An aunt was addicted, but cured herself. His father was normal, but his mother and three of her brothers have suffered severely with migraine. One of the patient's sisters has a psychosis. His three brothers were highly successful in the business world, but one of them, now dead, became an addict through having opium prescribed in the course of treatment for sprees. One of the patient's daughters is subject to headaches, but two others seem perfectly normal and have intelligence above the average. His two sons are doing well in business. The addiction of members of his family never led to delinquency or impairment of business ability. The patient himself had a very open make-up, and apparently no nervousness, except that indicated by his periodic headaches. He contracted syphilis in 1900 from an obstetrical case, and now has some bony tertiary nodules and a suggestion of an involvement of the nervous system. He was emaciated and anemic when examined, but had been operated on for appendicitis less than a month previously. He owns a farm and practices medicine, but in recent years has limited his practice largely to office work.

There were eight treatments in this case. Six were successful in that the drug was temporarily withdrawn. Relapses occurred in from one day to two months. The reasons for relapses varied. In one case he left the hospital in such a weakened state that it was necessary to boost himself with opium in order to get home. In all cases he went to work immediately or within two weeks after returning to his home, but being somewhat weak and suffering with insomnia he found it necessary to resort to morphine again in order to keep going.

After a lapse of years the eighth and last treatment was undertaken several years ago, because the narcotic division insisted upon it. Following three weeks in a sanitarium, he returned to his home, but was unable to work, so took a short vacation and then attempted practice. He felt well, but could not sleep, was restless, hyperactive, and busied himself very much. Among other things, he wanted to lecture and tell addicts how glad he felt over being cured. He says he had a spell of religion, and his wife, an intelligent woman, reports that he expressed himself as having just waked up. She says he was entirely changed, and people thought that he had lost his mind. In about a month he resumed the use of morphine, and in a few days calmed down. The entire family, including his wife, who urged him to take treatment, were glad to have him relapse this time. It is evident that this man had a hypomaniac attack due to withdrawal of the drug.

These two cases illustrate what happens to a greater or less degree in every case of a certain type of addict from whom opium is withdrawn. Both of them had a bad heredity and a neurotic constitution. They might have been cured by proper treatment before the drug got such a hold upon them, but because of their original instability and lack of resistance they have insufficient reserve to withstand the removal of the inhibiting influence to which their nervous system had gradually become accustomed.

That the nervous manifestations following the withdrawal of opium are as a rule only temporary, even though the drug has been used for long periods, is shown by the fact that cases are cured after many years of continued addiction. In this series there are some physicians who were cured after 20 years and one after 40 years' indulgence, but there was nothing abnormal in their original make-up. The reason for their previous relapses was the lack of sufficient motive to impel them to neglect their work until the withdrawal symptoms had so far subsided as to enable them to pursue it again. The narcotic division by threatening prosecution provided them with the motive they needed. The 40-year addict was 65 years of age—he was slightly restless at times, but in no way uncomfortable after nine months of abstinence. Another physician not included in this series, because he never relapsed, took 25 grains of morphine daily for most of 18 years. On five different occasions he tried to treat himself at home by gradually reducing the drug, but failed because he would not give up his work in order to do it. Finally he took a cure through the urging of the narcotic inspectors. Insomnia was distressing for about two months and in addition there was for five months some painful bladder condition that he attributed to the medicine given during the course of treatment. He, however, never thought of returning to morphine to relieve this condition and one year after the original treatment he was a perfect specimen of health. These two cases illustrate that for several months after the withdrawal of opium normal addicts do have some symptoms that could be used as an excuse to return to the drugs but that they do not do so when the motive for cure is greater than the motive for relapse.

The motive as well as the desire for cure in many abnormal persons is as great as in normal persons but the motive for relapse is so much greater that the cure motive is less likely to gain a permanent ascendancy over it. The motive for relapse is in some of its phases continuous and is subject to exacerbation. This is why certain unstable persons relapse months after all physical reasons for it have disappeared.

PSYCHIC REASONS GIVEN FOR RELAPSE

It has already been intimated that in most cases the fundamental basis for relapse is to be found in the faulty mental make-up of the individual addicts and that the cause for addiction and the cause for relapse are in their most important phases basically the same.

The unstable individuals who constitute the vast majority of addicts in the United States may be divided into two general classes: Those having an inebriate type of personality and those afflicted with other forms of nervous instability (2). The various types find relief in narcotics. The mechanism by which this is brought about differs in some respects in the different types, but the motive that prompts them to take narcotics is in all cases essentially the same. The neurotic and psychopath receive from narcotics a pleasurable sense of relief from the realities of life that normal persons do not receive, because life is no special burden to them. The first few doses, especially if larger than the average medicinal doses, may cause nausea and other symptoms of discomfort, but in the unstable there is also produced a feeling of peace and calm to which they are not accustomed and which, because of its contrast with their usual restless and dissatisfied state of mind, is interpreted as pleasure. These people have in their normal state unusual impulses and disturbing mental conflicts because of them. They feel inadequate or inferior, their usual restlessness and antisocial conduct are expressions of compensatory strivings against this, or specific acts may be pathological outlets for impulses not properly directed. The narcotic properties of morphine and heroin are sufficient for the time being to remove all of this. Inferiority is replaced by confidence, restlessness by calm, and discontent by contentment. The degree of contrast with their usual selves is in direct proportion to their degree of deviation from the normal.

The pleasure derived from opium varies from a slight feeling of calm in persons who approximate normal in their nervous constitution to feelings sometimes approaching ecstacy in the extremely psychopathic. The greater susceptibility to addiction of the more abnormal cases is thus explained. The personality survey and clinical study of the 210 cases that form the basis of this paper shows that their nervous abnormality is the most important cause for the frequent relapse of addicts of the present day. In the psychopaths who make up the larger proportion of them the pleasurable effect of opium was dulled by the increased tolerance consequent upon excessive indulgence in it and beclouded by the discomfort and uneasiness of their situation. With benumbing of pleasure and increase of discomfort a point was finally reached where they sought release from the distress of their new situation. By resort to cure they would get rid of the physical discomfort and the inconvenience of addiction and improve physically as well as socially for a time, but with cure and the passing of their newly acquired troubles their former restlessness and discontent returned and sooner or later they sought relief for this by resorting to narcotics again. This cycle of events was repeated time and again in some cases, the final result as to relapse being more certain as the other contributing factors (physical dependence and memory associations) grew in importance with the duration of addiction.

A very large proportion of these addicts deliberately addicted themselves with full knowledge of the difficulties incident to a life of addiction. Many of them had been social problems before they became addicted and the make-up of others was such as to insure that a large proportion would have run contrary to established social customs in some serious way, even if they had not become addicts. By inference, then, it may be assumed that such cases relapse for the same reason that they become addicted. The inference is not so clear in the case of certain socially acceptable persons of normal or superior intellect who become addicts. These are temperamental or very neurotic persons, some of whom are highly useful or gifted citizens. Opium gives them a feeling of relief or contentment far in excess of that experienced by the average normal persons who because of illness are occasionally compelled to take it. The first few doses usually are taken for legitimate purposes, but, as with the psychopaths, the drugs also give such persons a pleasurable sense of calm that impels them to continue the drug—often in ignorance of the danger, sometimes in spite of it—until they become addicted. When such cases finally try to free themselves of the drug the memory of the relief that it gave them from the underlying unrest, of which their peculiar traits or symptoms are an expression, is a serious handicap in their struggle to do without it. As before stated, these people also exaggerate the ordinary difficulties of life more than do average normal persons and they register physical discomfort and pain much more acutely. It thus happens that some very useful and even gifted citizens have tried without success to be cured of drug addiction because of the force of the seductive calm that opiates gave them and because the discomfort of withdrawal seemed to them to be unbearable.

The undoubted sincerity previously referred to of some of the psychopaths who seek treatment is an expression of one phase of their valuable moods, which in a measure explains why they first experimented with narcotics, and why, after becoming addicted, they find it so hard to leave them alone. They quickly, and without reason of judgment, develop a high degree of enthusiasm for things that are new or different, whether the excitement promised is dissipation or reform, but because of their lack of emotional balance and consecutiveness of purpose the trend of their enthusiam is quickly changed by some countercurrent, or when the newness of the experience wears off they slump back into their normal channels of action and start taking drugs again.

The change in direction of enthusiasm is especially characteristic of the open make-up type of psychopathic addict that we have described elsewhere (2). Floating into addiction is easy for them because it furnishes a thrill and is otherwise pleasant, but to get cured requires effort, and having drifted into a difficulty, they find it hard to keep going in the opposite direction long enough to get out of it. The enthusiasm that some of these psychopaths develop for cure and the facility with which its direction is changed to defeat this end is illustrated by an incident that occurred in connection with the handling of three of them. These addicts voluntarily came to the hospital and the drug was rapidly withdrawn. Their sincerity and determination to get well was shown by the uncomplaining way which they suffered. On the fifth day they had passed through the most severe stages of treatment and were still in high spirits over the prospect of recovery. An interne then refused to grant them a simple request and in doing so made a remark that they construed as insulting. The rebuff in no way affected their physical comfort but it changed their entire outlook and caused them to demand a discharge from the hospital. They came in to escape at any cost from the dependence and despised social position that the addiction had brought to them and, reacting to a slight, the result of their addiction, they faced promptly about and returned to it determined now to assert their rights as free-born citizens.

In the discussion of the inebriate type of addict in another paper (2) we have already indicated one of the most important reasons for the relapse of drug addicts. It was shown that a large proportion of addicts have a so-called inebriate or narcotic impulse to an unusual degree, and that these persons have an indefinite nonspecific craving that is appeased by alcohol, opiates, ether, veronal, and other drugs having narcotic or hypnotic properties. Forty-four of the addicts in this group of 210 cases fall very definitely in the inebriate class. The business or professional man who at intervals goes on alcoholic sprees, neglects his work for a week or more and brings discredit upon himself has, in so far as the impelling motive for this conduct is concerned, the exact counterpart in many of the cured addicts who suddenly and without obvious cause begin to take drugs again.

It is appreciated that when we say a man goes on sprees or relapses to drugs because he has a periodic craving or phase of depression which narcotics satisfies or lifts him out of, we have stated only an end result and have left the primary cause of the craving or depression undisclosed.

The love of intoxicants or narcotics is an expression of a deep-seated motive that reaches its greatest intensity in adolescence and may find expression in various ways. It is closely related to various excitements, enthusiasm, cravings, and related feelings. The normal man can regulate and control this motive or impulse when it tends to take an abnormal direction. In the abnormal man with feelings of inferiority and a highly sensitive or poorly organized nervous system the motive is stronger and the appeasement of it more satisfying. He is always striving for an emotional something just out of his normal reach. Alcohol or drugs brings it within his range and gives him the satisfaction that he does not know how to obtain in any other way.

The periodic alcoholic or opiumist who has an impulse to relapse is traveling on a low and unsatisfactory emotional plane. He meets a disappointment or rebuff or encounters some form of mental or physical pain. These depress him still more and by so doing accelerate his impulse to seek relief and emotional satisfaction by the only means he knows. He brings himself under the influence of intoxicants or narcotics and by so doing relieves himself of mental pain and suffering.

A discussion of various theories as to what may be the underlying cause of the narcotic impulse would lead us too far afield to be entered into here. With the suggestions offered we give the end result as to observed fact, this study clearly shows that having once felt the soothing effects of opium, many of the cases become addicted to it in the first place and relapse time after time because of the force of the impulse.

MEMORY ASSOCIATION AND HABIT

In addition to the important etiological factors incident to the type of person who becomes addicted in the first place and the complicating physical symptoms which follow the use of opium over long periods of time, the taking of the drug results in the formation of numerous memory associations which are themselves potent reasons for continuing the drug or bringing about relapse. In this sense, opium addiction is a real habit. It is a common observation that no man lightly gives up anything to which he has accustomed himself. We see this plainly exemplified in the cured tobacco smoker who relapses after a period of abstinence and feels great relief in doing so. A cured smoker who usually does not crave tobacco may feel an intense desire resembling hunger when he gazes upon a box of cigars or sits in the company of friends who are smoking. The genesis of this desire is apparently wholly mental. The craving is due to memory associations and the habit the smoker has acquired of releasing a certain amount of energy by smoking when placed in certain environments. If smoking is indulged in, the aroused but pent-up energy flows smoothly into an accustomed channel, the tension is relieved, and relief is obtained. Habitual indulgence in opium creates memory associations similar to those connected with the use of tobacco and adds some of its own. The craving that some cured addicts experience after the state of physical discomfort is over, and the "hankering" for the drug that they speak of, is due largely to these memory associations. The impelling force of habit and the satisfaction derived from gratifying it is seen in the morphine or heroin addict, who, when deprived of his customary drug, stabs himself with needles or safety pins, so-called "needle addiction."

The addict relieves himself of oncoming discomfort several times each day by taking a hypodermic of morphine or heroin. Due to difficulty in obtaining opiates, he is often in actual pain before securing relief, and he worries a great deal about his source of supply. There is thus formed a strong association between distress, both physical and mental, and taking the drug. After a cure the first disappointment or illness he suffers brings forcibly to his mind the method of relief he has learned so well. The impulse to resort to it is strong and the stock from which addicts are recruited insures that resistance to it will be weak. We see this cause illustrated in an addict who said, "The winter came on; I was cold all of the time and could not stand it without the drug * * *," and in the one who suffered a mild attack of influenza and gave as his reason for relapse that he was weak and had to boost himself with the drug. It is chiefly memory associations that cause many cured cases to feel discouraged and have the "blues" on a rainy day.

The return of addicts, especially of the unstable type, to their old environment adds greatly to the danger of relapse. Recently cured cases are restless; they as a rule are without employment and they naturally turn for company and diversion to their old companions, among whom there are usually some addicts. Nearly all of those who have abstained from narcotics for several months report that they have no desire for the drugs unless they see some one else take them or unless they associate with other addicts in situations which they formerly enjoyed. By arousing memory associations this unfavorable environment creates a craving that the unstable cured cases seldom resist for any great length of time. The power of memory association is illustrated by the case of a patient who voluntarily stayed two months in the hospital and was off the drug five weeks of that time. He thought daily of certain former associates with whom he had been accustomed to take morphine. He complained that he could not get the subject off his mind and that it kept alive his craving. A small party in which he formerly played poker and took morphine with a few friends was reenacted several times in his dreams. The result was that the intense desire continued after the physical discomfort had passed.

It was noted in other types of cured addicts, as well as the cured inebriates, that any frustrated desire or unsatisfied longing was transformed into a desire for narcotics. Some had a craving for narcotics when they were hungry, and others when they wanted to smoke. The craving would be completely relieved by food or tobacco. In some, certain unsatisfied social impulses were directed into the narcotic channel. The craving produced by social longing is more serious than that which is purely physical in origin because it is not so easily appeased. The longing for companionship, for the good will of others, the desire for a position, the salary from which would insure the ordinary comforts of life and relieve financial worry, would, when frustrated be directed into the channel that experience had shown would resolve all longings by dulling the faculties that gave rise to them. The cured addict is advised to abandon his old associates, but he too often has no others who look upon him with understanding sympathy. When this is the case he inevitably gravitates back to them to relieve the tension of his social impulses. This, in itself, is good for him, but the environment arouses memory associations connected with the use of narcotics and affords opportunity to return to them when his resistance is weakened. Without a social environment that satisfies certain emotional impulses and an occupation that diverts the mind while it absorbs the physical energy that is seeking for an avenue of expression, the continued abstinence from narcotics by a former addict is extremely difficult.

Relapse was precipitated in some cases of this series by emotional disturbances incident to financial difficulties that could only be made worse by the return to narcotics; by the nagging influence of a suspicious wife, who, to protect her husband from relapse, watched every move he made; by a loss of position, by a deserved rebuke, and by other seemingly inadequate causes. One man, abstinent for 10 years, relapsed because of an injury that kept him in bed for a week. Such relapses, of course, occur in unstable persons, who are in constant danger of falling under the depressing influence of some cause that would impel them to seek relief in narcotics. They know that the remedy will in the end increase that difficulty, but for the time being the relief promised overshadows in importance all other considerations.

In addition to the various pathological strivings and impelling memory associations that act independently of the patient's will to bring about a resumption of the use of narcotics, some account has to be taken of the pleasurable physical thrill that large doses of these drugs give to certain addicts. This thrill has been discussed in another paper (3). It is sufficient here to say that striving for a repetition of it causes some psychopaths to inject narcotics directly into their veins, and its intensity may be judged by the fact that a few of them link it with sexual feeling. Some of these cases seem to return to narcotics purely for the physical pleasure the drugs give them aside from a negative feeling of mental relief that is also obtained.

RELAPSES TO COCAINE

What has been said about the causes of relapse to opium applies in a general way to cocaine, but the relative importance of the various factors differ. The force of physical dependence is insignificant as a cause of relapse to this drug. The cocaine addict who has been taking large doses and is suddenly deprived of it goes to sleep and it may be difficult to arouse him at all or to keep him awake for more than a few minutes at a time for the first 48 hours. He then passes through a short period of physical and mental languor, during which there is a "hankering" for the drug but no pain. The ease with which some morphine and heroin addicts are taken off these drugs is explained by the fact that they also had been taking large doses of cocaine. The hypersensitiveness resulting from the withdrawal of the opiate is counteracted in them by the sleep and lethargy that results from withdrawal of the cocaine.

The pleasure arising from the narcotic effects of cocaine is less than that from opiates, but the pleasurable physical thrill is greater and it is a general mental and physical stimulant. It differs from opiates in that it produces pleasure more by the elevation of normal feeling than by the suppression of weakness. It is therefore a more positive form of dissipation.

A number of persons dissipate with cocaine now and then but never become addicts; their indulgence is comparable with week-end drinking. Those who become addicted to the daily use of cocaine almost invariably take up the use of morphine or heroin sooner or later and then decrease the amount of cocaine or abandon its use altogether. There is not one pure cocaine addict in this series of 210 cases, but there were a number of mixed opiate-cocaine addicts among them at the time they were examined, and 35 per cent of the total number had been addicted to cocaine and morphine, or to cocaine and heroin at one time or another. These mixed cases are, on the average, more subject to relapses than those opiate addicts who have never taken cocaine regularly. The difference is not due to anything that cocaine or the mixture of cocaine and opium does to them. It is traceable to the fact observed in the study of these cases and others not reported here that the cocaine addict is more psychopathic in the beginning. He becomes addicted merely through his impulse to dissipation, whereas physical dependence complicates matters for users of opium and causes more stable persons to become addicted to it.

SUMMARY

The relapse of drug addicts is mainly due to the same cause that is responsible for their original addiction, namely, a pathological nervous constitution, with its inferiorities, pathological strivings, etc., from which narcotics give an unusual sense of relief and ease.

The inebriate impulse is one of the most important causes of relapse.

Relapse is more common than formerly because the addiction of more normal and therefore more easily curable persons is less common.

Nearly all addicts make sincere efforts to be cured during the early period of their addiction. Many of the cures taken later on are mere matters of expediency and are insincere in effort.

The hope for cure wanes as time passes and the force of habit, numerous impelling memory associations, and increasing physical dependence upon opiates is added to the original nervous pathology.

Physical dependence upon opiates is unimportant as a cause for relapse during the first two or three years of addiction in those addicts who have been off the drug for two weeks or more.

In some very nervous persons who have been addicted to an opiate for many years withdrawal of the drug may produce hysterical symptoms or hypomania lasting several months.

UNSEEN FORCES THAT HELP CONTROL LEGISLATION IN UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, in a few brief remarks I desire to comment on some unseen forces that help to control legislation in the United States Congress, telling the story of some of the directing and moving forces in the House of Representatives which are not observed from the galleries and not much played up in the press and naming the personnel of party organizations, and of some of the unadvertised committees.

These forces are more influential than speeches and oratory. They are of more power than unorganized and undirected majorities. Some of the forces of which I speak lead the majority and give it the opportunity of exercising the dominant power it possesses.

RULES COMMITTEE

In the Rules Committee is lodged much power. In former days—in the days of Tom Reed and Uncle Joe Cannon—the Speaker of the House exercised great influence over legislation—could exercise tyrannical power if he felt so disposed. In those days the Speaker appointed committees, named committee chairmen, and was chairman of the Rules Committee, which committee consisted of himself and two others appointed by himself.

Then came the legislative revolution in the House, when a bunch of insurgents joined with the Democrats and changed the rules, taking the Speaker off the Rules Committee and taking from him the power to appoint committees. That was only back in 1910.

To-day committee assignments are made by the House through a committee on committees. The Rules Committee is independent of the Speaker's influence, except as it is exerted diplomatically.

The Rules Committee has the authority to report to the House special rules at any time and they are privileged. That is, these special rules take precedence over anything before the House except conference reports. The committee rule bringing out a bill, limits the hours of debate and can limit the number of, or exclude all amendments to the bill, except one motion to recommit. Backed by the majority the Rules Committee can pretty nearly say what legislation can come up and how it may or may not be amended in the House.

In the early stages of a Congress the Rules Committee does not function often or much. As the Congress draws near a close, with calendar full and few days for consideration of the many bills reported out by regular committees the influence of the Rules Committee is in great demand. Many Members seek special rules for bills they are interested in. The procedure is for the Rules Committee to hold meetings for discussion and sometimes hearings where proponents of bills appear and present their views. Sometimes these hearings are simple and informal and sometimes they are elaborate and extended.

It is not unusual for 12,000 to 16,000 bills to be introduced in a session of Congress. A bill can not be considered in the House unless it is reported out by a committee. But after being reported favorably by a committee a bill may linger long on the calendar without being brought up in the House. Near the end of the session the calendar is full. Days are crowded with business.

Appropriation bills have the right of way. Time will permit the consideration of only a few other measures. Many a Member is anxiously watching out for the fate of his fond legislative baby. Somebody must decide whose baby may be saved—what bills may be brought out in the House for consideration. This is the very thing the Rules Committee will do. It may well be imagined that the Rules Committee will be busy the rest of the session.

Withal the Rules Committee is not all powerful. It can report out rules for the consideration of measures, but it takes a majority of the House to adopt the rule and again to pass the bill. The Rules Committee considers the merits of the bills and the sentiment of the House and the country. It listens to the wishes of the majority as expressed through the Speaker, the majority leader, the steering committee, and perhaps an occasional suggestion from the White House. The committee must pass over and by many measures, but it is pretty certain that the bills it does pick for presentation to the House are on the cards for passage.

The Rules Committee is one of the powerful agencies of the Government which is aiming at economical administration. The cost of a proposed measure is well considered before it gets favorable action by this committee. Just the other day the chairman of the Rules Committee gave to the House a list of bills that are being pressed for action which, if all were passed and became laws, would cost the Government more than a billion dollars and discourage tax reduction for years to come.

The chairman of this all-important committee is Hon. BERTRAND H. SNELL, of New York. He is a hard-working, conscientious, industrious Member of Congress and takes the duties of this important chairmanship seriously. He studies the legislation in question and knows what they are talking about when men bring their bills up for action before his committee. He has nerve and is unafraid, for he must stand between popular clamor and public duty at times. None are so great or powerful in this Government of ours that they may not some day knock at his door to ask for official favor.

Others who have been chairmen of the Rules Committee running back a few years are Philip Campbell, of Kansas; EDWARD W. POU, of North Carolina; Bob Henry, of Texas; and Uncle Joe Cannon, of the United States of America.

Members of this committee in the Seventieth Congress are—

Bertrand H. Snell, chairman, New York; Theodore E. Burton, Ohio; Thomas S. Williams, Illinois; Fred S. Purnell, Indiana; Earl C. Michener, Michigan; Harry C. Ransley, Pennsylvania; C. William Ramseyer, Iowa; Louis A. Frothingham, Massachusetts; Edward W. Pou, North Carolina; Finis J. Garrett, Tennessee; William B. Bankhead, Alabama; John J. O'Connor, New York.

THE STEERING COMMITTEE

Another influential factor in government, one of the invisible type, is the Republican steering committee of the House. It is entirely unofficial, unlisted, and unadvertised. It exerts a powerful influence but makes no effort to exhibit power. It works along diplomatic lines to feel out and consolidate sentiment for administration measures and procedure. It meets occasionally at the call of the chairman. It considers the welfare of the Government from the party point of view. It advises with the White House, the chairmen of important committees, the party leaders, and the Rules Committee. It helps to iron out differences, and to formulate and put across the majority program in the House. The chairman of the steering committee is the Republican floor leader, Hon. JOHN Q. TILSON. When the committee meets the Speaker sometimes and the chairman of the Rules Committee usually are invited in for consultation. Other members of the committee are—

THE FLOOR LEADER

The floor leader, especially the leader of the majority side, has a good deal to do with the legislative program. The majority leader, of course, represents the majority on the floor. What he asks for is usually granted. Motions he makes are usually passed. He endeavors to represent the majority view and the majority follow his leadership and back him up. He is often asked on the floor by the minority leader or by others about the program ahead and he outlines it as well as he can. He leads in debate on administration matters and gives to the House and the country the viewpoint of his party on legislative program.

The leader must keep in touch with proposed legislation, the status of bills of importance, with the steering committee of which he is chairman, and with the attitude of the Rules Committee. He confers with committee chairmen and Members in general. The majority leader often confers with the President and advises with him regarding administrative measures. He takes to the President the sentiment of the party in the House and he brings to the Republicans in the House the sentiment of the President.

The majority leader acts also as chairman of the committee on committees and of the steering committee.

The majority leader at this time is Hon. JOHN Q. TILSON, of Connecticut. He has served in the House of Representatives 18 years. He is efficient, industrious, and popular. Mr. TILSON was born in the mountains of Tennessee, worked his way through college at Yale University, took up the practice of law at New Haven, and served as speaker of the Connecticut House of Representatives before coming to Congress. Many of his friends believe that Mr. TILSON would make a good Vice President of the United States.

Other Republican floor leaders who have preceded Mr. TILSON are NICHOLAS LONGWORTH, Frank Mondell, James R. Mann, Uncle Joe Cannon, Thomas B. Reed, Nelson Dingley, William McKinley, and Sereno Payne.

The minority leader is Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT, Democrat, of Tennessee. Smooth, gracious, gentlemanly, brilliant, and convincing in debate and elsewhere. He never neglects the interest of his party, but at the same time he has been very agreeable and helpful in expediting business in the House. He is a lawyer, a native of Tennessee, and has served in the House of Representatives for 24 years. He is leaving the House at the end of this Congress, to the regret of all, but his friends hope it is to go into the United States Senate, for which he is a candidate. Other notable floor leaders on the Democratic side have been Champ Clark, Claude Kitchen, Oscar Underwood, and Samuel J. Randall.

THE WHIP

The office of whip comes to us from the British Parliament. That is, the name does, and it has been used for some two hundred years. It is probable that every legislative body, as long as there have been such bodies, have had some person who has acted in this capacity.

The whip looks after the membership of his party and endeavors to have them present to vote on important measures. When the vote is apt to be close he checks up, finds out who is out of the city, and advises absentees by wire of the important measure coming up.

There are many hours of long debate when many Members do not feel it necessary to be present and listening and they go along attending to their other business, which in many cases is pressing. The whip keeps posted on the daily program, and if something important comes up where votes will be taken he notifies the membership of his party. Occasionally Members' offices are notified by 'phone from the whip's office that "All Members are desired on the floor immediately." After such notice is phoned around you will see the House gradually fill up with Members.

The Republican whip has also a duty to perform in connection with the White House. The President occasionally seeks information from the whip as to the sentiment of the House on important administration measures, about the prospect of passage of certain bills, and the whip naturally reflects the Presdent's view about many things and is in a position to know the administration's policy.

The Republican whip was formerly appointed by the Speaker, but is now chosen by the party caucus. Hon. ALBERT H. VESTAL, of Indiana, is serving as Republican whip at this time. He has served six terms in Congress. Some others who have rendered distinguished service as Republican whip have been Thomas B. Reed; James Wilson, later Secretary of Agriculture; JAMES W. WATSON, now United States Senator from Indiana; James A. Tawney; and John W. Dwight. On the Democratic side, WILLIAM A. OLDFIELD, of Arkansas is the party whip.

COMMITTEE ON COMMITTEES

In the old days before Uncle Joe Cannon was "shorn of his power," as they say, the Speaker named the chairmen of committees and made all committee assignments. That and the control of the Rules Committee made the Speaker practically the autocrat of the House. He had almost unlimited power in the control of legislation. The Speaker to-day, while holding one of the highest offices in the land, is little more than a presiding officer over the House.

The change that was made back in 1910 when the House took away from the Speaker his great power was merely to take the Speaker off the Rules Committee and to provide that the assignment to committee places and the selection of committee chairmen should be made by the House.

It works out this way: The Republicans have a committee on committees which decides who shall go on which committee and who shall be chairmen of all committees. The Democrats have delegated to Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee the selection of committee assignments of Democratic Members. At this time with the Republicans in the majority there are no committee chairmanships held by Democrats. These bodies make their selections at the beginning of a Congress, report their recommendations to the House, and the House invariably confirms the recommendation made. Throughout the session of Congress when vacancies occur they are filled in the same manner.

Once placed on a committee, a Member may stay on that committee as long as he stays in Congress, and if he lives long enough and is elected often enough he may hope some day to be chairman. Members often seek other committee assignments, prefering other work, or by long service being entitled to assignment on more important committees.

When the change was first made and the appointment of committee assignments taken away from the Speaker, the selection of Republican committees was given to a committee of 15, selected by the Republican leader. In the beginning of the Sixty-sixth Congress, in 1919, the Republican caucus adopted a new rule, proposed by James R. Mann. The rule then adopted and in operation now provides that the committee on committees shall be composed of one Republican Member from each State which has Republican representation in Congress, and that each member of the committee shall have as many votes in committee deliberations as his State has Republican Members in Congress. So in this Congress Texas has 1 vote and Pennsylvania has 34 votes in the committee on committees.

The members of the Republican committee on committees in the Seventieth Congress are as follows:

THE CAUCUS

In the old days in State legislatures and in the Congress the party caucus was a powerful affair. The members of the party organizations met, considered many things, including legislation. A majority vote was supposed to carry with it the party mandate for all members of the party to abide by the results and be bound by the caucus action. Caucus rule is not so dominant these days anywhere as it used to be. Certainly not in Congress.

In the big flare-up in party affairs back in 1910 and 1912 the Republicans gave up the caucus altogether. They had an occasional meeting of party members under the name of Republican conferences. But they have gone back again to the old name of Republican caucus. It is a denatured affair, however, and has not much kick.

At the beginning of a new Congress each two years a Republican caucus is called together to select a Republican candidate for Speaker. If there are two or more candidates for Speaker, the matter is threshed out here. After the caucus votes all party members will stand by the man who gets a majority vote in the caucus.

The Republican caucus voted in 1919 to give the speakership to FREDERICK H. GILLETT over his opponent, James R. Mann. And again in 1925 to NICHOLAS LONGWORTH over his opponent, Martin B. Madden. In the former case the Republicans were just coming into control of the House. Champ Clark had been Speaker previous to 1919. In the latter case Speaker GILLETT had left the House on being elected to the United States Senate. Once on the job a Speaker usually stays as long as he stays in the House and his party remains in power.

The majority caucus will also name the various important employees of the House, such as Clerk, Sergeant at Arms, Doorkeeper, Postmaster, and others. The caucus will also select the party leader and the whip.

The Republican caucus meets rarely and does little in the way of considering legislation. It tried it a few times a few years ago, but the effort proved a sad failure. Much talk and they got nowhere. No one was bound by the votes taken. For several years the Republican caucus has been called only for the purpose of selecting the party organization or to help the committee on committees to decide a contested point.

The Democrats do have a real caucus which meets only occasionally. Democrats are supposed to be bound by the decision of the Democratic caucus. It requires a two-thirds vote, however, to bind the membership on matters of legislation. A Member may arise and ask to be relieved of caucus instruction in specific cases. Some Democrats who represent protective tariff districts do this. But unless a Democrat has some mighty good reasons to offer for not standing by the caucus decision and is excused, he had better vote with the party or he may be read out of it.

SENIORITY

Another powerful influence in legislative bodies everywhere, and especially in the United States Congress, is seniority. Speaker, committees, nor majorities can rarely overcome or set aside the unwritten law of seniority of service.

The preferred office rooms in the House Office Building are assigned the Member of longest service of those who ask for any certain rooms. Once on, a Member's rank in committee is according to seniority and his place at committee table is in order of length of service from the chairman's end of the table down. The chairman of the committee, while selected by the committee on committees, is almost always the oldest member of his party on the committee. Only rarely has the committee on committees violated the rule of seniority and to do so it must have a mighty strong case. The selection of Martin B. Madden as chairman of the Appropriations Committee was one of these noteworthy exceptions—the only one I recall in recent years. A chairman of a committee has very great influence in the reporting out and progress of bills. He decides the fate of many.

Conferees who meet with the conferees of the Senate to iron out differences on bills where the two Houses have not agreed are usually the oldest members on the committee which has that particular bill in charge. A great deal is at stake in these conferences sometimes. They are the deciding factor often in big issues. The conferees have big responsibilities, and here seniority helps much in molding legislation, appropriating money, and writing tax bills.

Seniority rules at social functions. The women are strong for it. They form in line at a reception according to seniority; they seat their guests at table according to length of service.

Seniority rules advancement for employees of the House, the same as it marks the progress and influence of Members. I recall in the election of a Doorkeeper some years ago a retiring Member of the House who had served only two terms wanted the job. But an humble employee who had served the House for about 30 years got twice as many votes in the Republican caucus. The powerful influence of seniority is hard to overcome.

Too much importance can not be given to the fact that chairmen of committees do have much influence in connection with legislation. Chairmen are selected by seniority.

Here is how it works out in the present Congress: Thirteen Republicans and 16 Democrats have served nine terms—18 years or more.

Of these 13 Republicans, who have served 18 years, 1 is Speaker, 1 Republican floor leader, 7 are chairmen of important committees. These committees are: Appropriations, Ways and Means, Agriculture, Naval Affairs, Post Office and Post Roads, Foreign Affairs, and Subcommittee of Appropriations for the Navy Department.

That accounts for 9 out of 13 in that class. Can you beat that for the influence of seniority?

If you drop down into the next class—those who have served eight terms, 16 years—you will find 15 Republicans. Of these, eight hold committee chairmanships. And that, I think, accounts for most of the committees of much importance.

If a strange and unusual election should occur sometime that would return a majority of Democrats in the House, you can make up a list of the new committee chairmen without waiting for the Congress to meet. You can be pretty well assured that the ranking Democrats on each committee—the one who has served on that committee longest in continuous service—would be immediately advanced to chairmanship. And you can be equally assured that they will be Members of long service in the House.

The committee on committees is made up for the most part of the Members who have served longest from their respective States. As a rule, Members have to serve some years before they are put on the Appropriations or Ways and Means Committees. The Rules Committee is made up of older Members—no Republican having served for less than 10 years. And the same may be said of the steering committee, there is no one on that who has served less than 10 years.

Fifty-seven Members in all out of the total membership of 435 have served 16 years or more. The Speaker, both party leaders, and 15 chairmenships are held in this group. Those who have served 5 terms—10 years or more—number only 182. All the key positions, nearly all the chairmenships, most every Member who is ever a conferee, a large majority of the Ways and Means and Appropriation Committees, all the Rules Committee, all the steering committee, most all of the committee on committees, and Democratic ranking members (future possible chairmen) on practically all committees are included in this group.

Seniority certainly does put Members in the places of power in the House of Representatives, and length of service gives Members an influence in the Congress and in the United States Government everywhere that can not be equaled by unusual brilliancy and ability without it. Districts which have returned their Members to Congress term after term have contributed to the cause of good government and are to-day represented by Members of important standing in the House of Representatives.

RETIREMENT OF OFFICERS AND FORMER OFFICERS OF THE WORLD WAR

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 777) making eligible for retirement, under certain conditions, officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LAGUARDIA in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to my colleague the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, yesterday you listened to highly technical arguments and to misleading statements of fact brought forth in a futile attempt by enemies of the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill to sustain a false and misleading premise.

What is this premise which opponents of this measure have vainly tried to justify?

Their premise is that the World War enlisted man is a dog in the manger.

That is what their premise is, and that is what all these highly technical arguments and misstatements are about.

Having served in France for nearly two years as "buck private," I, for one, want to take this opportunity to defend the World War enlisted man from all the implications of base motives heaped upon him yesterday. I want to deny here and now that the finest soldier the world ever saw—the emergency enlisted man—is a dog in the manger, that he wants to prevent some one else from having a thing which he can not possibly use himself.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, we can not let any such statement as that go unchallenged.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi for that purpose. The gentleman from Mississippi can not take the gentleman off his feet.

Mr. RANKIN. I make a point of order against the gentleman making any such allegation as that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am really at a loss to understand why my distinguished colleague from Mississippi is so disturbed because of the comparison I made a moment ago, but I see no reason for changing or modifying my statement. To my mind, enemies of this bill have placed the enlisted men absolutely in the position of the dog in the manger, and I know that is the wrong inference so far as the enlisted men of my State are concerned. So at the risk of being contradicted, or even scolded, my statement stands.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Mississippi is out of order in making his point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized if he desires to make a point of order. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman makes the statement that the opponents of this bill have alleged or intimated that the enlisted man is a dog in the manger. No such intimation and no such statement has been made.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter of debate. The gentleman is in order and the gentleman's point of order is overruled. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. RANKIN. The statement is not correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. From my viewpoint the statement is correct. Go read the RECORD of yesterday; it speaks for itself. If the burden of the argument of you gentlemen who are so enthusiastically opposing this measure does not, in fact, justify my statement, then I am frank to confess that I am unable to comprehend the English language. My distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is entitled to his views on this bill, but I also submit that I am entitled to mine. Now, I would like to finish what I was about to say.

Mr. BUSBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. In a moment I shall be glad to yield to my good friend from Mississippi, but I would prefer to finish my statement now.

Mr. BUSBY. I would simply like to ask if the gentleman would point out who made that statement and call the name of the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman knows I would not think of calling names here. He is simply begging the question. This is not a personal matter, but I again respectfully call the attention of my friend to the RECORD. Read the speeches of yesterday. I don't want to embarrass anyone, but the speeches speak for themselves. The pending measure is entirely too important for men who claim to be fair to quibble over technicalities or attempt to inject personalities into this debate.

Now, what are the real facts? I will tell you.

First. All of the World War dead are on a parity.

Second. All World War widows and orphans are on a parity.

Third. All World War enlisted men are on a parity.

Fourth. Eight of the nine classes of World War officers are on a parity.

That leaves the ninth class of officers—the disabled emergency Army officers—as the only class of World War victims discriminated against in their class. All others—widows, orphans, and enlisted men—have been accorded identical treatment.

The American Legion is 90 per cent enlisted, yet it is solidly behind this measure. Why? Because the enlisted men do not harbor the unworthy motives attributed to them by men on the floor of this House—by men who have vainly attempted to incite the enlisted men against the officers.

Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a petition urging the passage of this bill, signed by every patient, I am informed, able to sign his name in the Oklahoma Soldiers' Tubercular Sanatorium at Sulphur, Okla. Practically all of these patients are enlisted men, but merely because they could not profit by the passage of the bill, they would not withhold from the disabled emergency officers that which is rightfully due them.

The sick and disabled war veterans at the United States veterans' hospital at Muskogee, Okla., one of the finest veterans' hospitals in America, have also gone on record, so I am advised, in unanimously favoring the passage of this bill, and a very large per cent of the patients in that great hospital are also enlisted men.

I want to say here and now that the friends of the soldiers will not attempt to divide them.

What happens to the widows and orphans of Regular Army officers who were killed in the war?

They receive compensation from the Veterans' Bureau.

What happens to the widows and orphans of the emergency officers who were killed?

The same identical treatment that the widows and orphans of the Regular Army officers receive.

What happens to the widows and orphans of the Regular Army enlisted men who were killed?

The identical treatment which the widows and orphans of the Regular officers receive.

What happens to the widows and orphans of the emergency enlisted men who were killed?

The same identical treatment that the widows and orphans of the Regular Army officers receive.

What happens to the Regular Army enlisted man, disabled in the World War?

He goes to the Veterans' Bureau.

What happens to the emergency enlisted man?

He goes to the Veterans' Bureau.

What happens to eight out of the nine classes of officers?

Retirement on three-quarters pay.

What happens to the emergency Army officer, the ninth class of officers?

Discrimination. He is set apart from the other officers.

What is the answer to this, gentlemen?

Gentlemen, we shall answer this question here this afternoon, and I certainly hope your answer will be in favor of these officers who, in my opinion, are now discriminated against. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Certainly I will yield to my colleague from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does the gentleman believe that this bill, without certain perfecting amendments, properly takes care of the emergency officers of the World War?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I do. I am glad the gentleman has called that to my attention.

Mr. SCHAFER. How about——

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Just a moment. I yielded for a question and not for a speech. I say this bill ought to pass and it ought to pass to-day, exactly as it has been written. All of us understand that the most effective way of killing a bill is to amend it to death. It is well known that opponents of this measure will support most any kind of an amendment in the hopes of ultimately defeating it. Let us pass the pending measure to-day without a single amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. VINCENT]. [Applause.]

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it is with regret I find myself in opposition to this veterans' measure, because I have supported since I have been in Congress every measure reported to this floor for the relief of any veterans until this present occasion. Even now, if I were to take the easy way for me, I would support this bill, because I have many personal friends who will benefit by the passage of this legislation, men whom for years I have had and still have the highest regard, respect, and affection, and men who have sacrificed much for their country.

But, gentlemen, this measure to my mind contains within it so patent, so evident, so drastic a discrimination among the various men who served in the World War that it seems to me it ought to challenge the attention of every thoughtful man before it is written into the books of legislation of the United States.

Let me point out briefly just what this bill does: If a man were an emergency officer in the World War and has been rated by the Veterans' Bureau as permanently disabled to the extent of 30 per cent, then he shall draw compensation according to his rank. If he was a brigadier general when he was discharged, he will draw $375 a month for the rest of his life; if a colonel, $250 a month; if a lieutenant colonel, $218.75 a month; if a major, $187.50 a month; if a captain, $150 a month; if a first lieutenant, $125 a month; and if a second lieutenant, according to the report of the Veterans' Bureau, which will have this legislation in its charge if it is passed, he will draw $93.75 a month. This statement has been challenged here, and the statement is made that it will be something in the neighborhood of $105 or $106 a month for a second lieutenant; but this does not change the principle.

These are pensions according to rank; absolutely that and nothing more nor less than that.

The enlisted man injured and having a permanent rating of 30 per cent will still draw $30 per month after this bill is passed. I want to point out other discriminations besides that which seem to me to make it certain that we can never afford to write them into the legislation of the United States. One of the arguments I have heard constantly made in favor of the bill is this—that the officers who went into the emergency service during the war were older than the enlisted men, were as a class better educated, as a class more established in business, and as a class were in the enjoyment of a greater income than the enlisted men were. And that, therefore, when injury occurred to one of these men it was a greater financial loss to him and his family than it was to the enlisted man.

That is the principle that is taken into consideration in courts of justice, they say, when a man brings a damage suit for injury, and this principle is invoked under the workman's compensation laws, they say. But, gentlemen, let me point out to you that that same principle when invoked in court, either under the compensation law or under the ordinary rules of damage, inure to the benefit of the wife and children of the man who is killed.

What does this bill do? The officer in the emergency service who lost his life in battle on the fields of France or who later, through disabilities, has laid down his life since as his sacrifice for his country—his wife and his child are left in the same category with the wife and child of the enlisted man. If we pass this bill, we will say to the wife of the colonel who has received a 30 per cent disability rated permanent by the bureau, "Your husband has come back home, he sacrificed much for his country, and to the extent of 30 per cent he is disabled, but he is with you now, back in his occupation again, and for that disability which he suffered we will pay him for his benefit and for yourself the sum of $250 a month for the rest of his life."

We will say to the wife of the colonel who was killed over in France: "Your husband gave up his life on the altar of his country; he is dead and gone, and the little white cross decorates his grave. He will never come back to you, but you as his wife will receive from the Federal Government the sum of $30 a month, and if you have a child you will receive $40 a month, and if you have two children you will receive a few more dollars per month." Gentlemen, if that was the only discrimination in the bill it would condemn it in my mind. [Applause.] Whatever may happen to me, so long as I am a Member of this House, I can not vote for a discrimination which I think is so unjust as that. [Applause.]

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. Well, yes.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman advise the House whether he was an emergency officer?

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. I was; but I do not think that has any bearing on the argument at all. Now, let me point out some other discriminations which the bill contains. You will remember that the officer, in order to get this rate of compensation, must have a permanent disability. That means that he must have technically been rated as permanent in the Veterans' Bureau. We, on the committee, and all you gentlemen who have had experience with that bureau, know what the word "permanent" means with respect to the administration of the law as it stands to-day. It means that the doctors in the bureau, so long as they can not say conclusively that a man's condition is not going to change, will continue to carry such a man on a temporary rating. The result of that is that, for years, a man may have been flat on his back in a hospital which the Government has built for his care. But if the doctors are unable to say that it might not be true that his condition would recover to a certain extent—so long as that is true, he continues to be carried on a temporary rating. No matter whether his disability is 100 per cent, it stands as a temporary rating in the bureau.

This being true, these officers are not in the slightest degree taken care of in any way by this provision. They are left with the same compensation as enlisted men.

Now, with respect to tne officers and enlisted men. God save me from ever doing anything such as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] just charged—to incite any man who gave any service in the war against any other man who went into that service. [Applause.] I have nothing but the profoundest respect and affection for all that great mass of humanity who came up out of the heart of America, took the oath in the Army of the United States, and offered all they had to their Government. [Applause.]

And whether they were enlisted men or officers, that was their offer—all they had, even to their lives. This bill seeks to give to a colonel who comes back with a 30 per cent disability, described to you by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER] yesterday, for example, as a condition where a man could not get his arm up as high as he formerly could—$250 a month. What would an enlisted man have to sacrifice in order to get that amount of money from the Government of the United States? If he had both eyes gouged out, and an arm off, and a leg off, he would not get quite what this bill gives to this colonel who could not raise his arm above the level of his shoulder. If we are to make a discrimination among the men who served their country in the World War, are we going to make a distinction so drastic, so deep, and so broad as that? And no man in this House who knows the facts or the law can challenge the accuracy of that comparison.

We are here to-day to decide on a great policy. There were emergency officers, before, who served their country in other wars. What about the officer who led the troops in the Great War between the States? What about the officer who led the troops in the war with Spain? It has been pointed out here that for a short time—and it was passed during the Civil War—there was a pension law which did provide certain discriminations, but nothing like these, however, as between an officer and an enlisted man.

Mr. RANKIN. And, if the gentleman will yield, that was merely that retirement law passed during the Civil War in order to get rid of some old officers who were cumbersome and out of date.

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. Whatever was its purpose, it did make a slight discrimination between the officers and the enlisted men.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. I would like to finish this if I may. Just as soon as the war was over, as history has taught all of us, the tremendous influence of the Union officers came into the Congress of the United States, and through the influence of these Union officers, men and officers were placed on an equality with respect to their pensions. As to the war with Spain, the same equality between men and officers exists. All of you have had experience with respect to pensioners and those who wish to be pensioners as veterans of those wars. Is there any discrimination between a Union officer and a Union enlisted man as to which gets $65 a month or $72 a month or $90 a month? Absolutely, the matter is based on a disability, never on rank.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman speaks about discrimination. Is it not a matter of fact that the second lieutenant in the time of war, when neither was disabled, got $137 a month, and the enlisted man $30 a month, and was not that discrimination?

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. Oh, we can not correct that to-day.

Mr. CONNERY. But we can help those disabled emergency officers.

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. Those second lieutenants, as a matter of fact, did not get any more than a good sergeant got.

Mr. CONNERY. They did not eventually, but they got $137 a month, and the enlisted man got $30 a month.

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. And they had to spend it, did they not?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. For food and clothing?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. As far as I am concerned, there is nothing that we can do to go back and fix that to-day.

Mr. CONNERY. But we can help these men who are discriminated against now.

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. I am not going to enter into any quarrel with the gentleman, but I am not going to cast my vote—he can do what he wishes with his—for discriminations such as will result from this act.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. As a matter of fact the officer had to buy his own clothes and pay for his own subsistence, and it cost him just about the difference between the enlisted man's pay and the officer's pay to do that thing.

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. Unless he was an officer of considerable rank, I think it did. Mr. Chairman, I spoke a moment ago of that great throng who came up out of our Nation to fight this war. Some had to lead and some had to obey. That is the only way an army can be organized. It has to be a monarchy while it is in action. But when these officers and men come back from the war, citizen soldiers, and go back into the civic body politic of the United States, this democracy of ours, then I say they again become equal—equal as citizens in this Republic, equal before the law, and entitled to the same kind of treatment from their Government in accordance with the disability they suffered. [Applause.] I think no discrimination should ever be shown that violates that principle of American citizenship, and American equality. [Applause.]

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER].

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, I favor the enactment of this bill without amendment. The measure has been pending for six or more years, during which time it has been discussed in detail in and out of Congress. The arguments for and against this legislation have been presented over and over again and no useful purpose will be served by our attempting to discuss this bill in detail now. I am ready to vote on this bill and I believe a large majority of the Members of the House are in favor of passing this bill without any further delay. While there are some features in the bill that might be improved by amendment, I am convinced that any effort to amend or rewrite this bill will result in its defeat at this session, because Congress will adjourn at an early date and any amendments made in the House could probably not be considered by the Senate in the short time between now and adjournment. The Senate has passed this bill three times and I believe the public sentiment of the Nation is behind this measure.

Moreover, I consider the terms of the bill reasonable and fair to the disabled emergency Army officers who fought bravely in the World War and who have been discriminated against, although they fought bravely and bear on their mangled bodies mute yet eloquent evidence of their courage and sacrifice. Congress has enacted generous retirement provisions for disabled officers in the Regular Army, Navy, and marines. Liberal retirement acts have been passed to take care of disabled officers in every other branch of the service. Why should we grant disabled officers in one branch of the service liberal retirement privileges and withhold those privileges from disabled officers of the same rank who are known as emergency Army officers? Statistics show that 2,040 emergency Army officers were killed in battle or died of wounds received in action. Ninty-three per cent of the Army officers killed belonged to this class. Eight thousand one hundred and twelve emergency Army officers were wounded in action. Under this bill 3,251 emergency officers whose disabilities now exceed 30 per cent will be given a fair, not a prodigal, retirement allowance.

I respect the officers of the Regular Army. I would not knowingly withhold from them any grant or honor to which they are entitled. The Nation has dealt liberally with them and I do not think they should use their influence to defeat this grant of justice to the group of disabled officers who are designated as emergency Army officers. But it is not denied by anyone familiar with the facts that officers of the Regular Army look with a feeling akin to contempt on all volunteer units and on all officers who forsooth do not have West Point training. They do not have much respect for enlisted men or for a vounteer army, although everyone knows that the volunteer soldiers have won every war in which the United States has engaged. The principal opposition to this bill comes from the line officers of the Regular Army. If this were eliminated there would be practically no opposition to this bill.

Anyone familiar with the military history of the world knows that officers of standing armies have always looked with contempt on volunteer officers. The volunteer soldier and volunteer officer have had to establish their courage, capacity, and efficiency and win their spurs over the jealousy and opposition of Regular Army officers.

Philip of Macedon is credited with having established the first standing army, although that honor is probably due to Epaminondas, the great general with whom the commanding influence of Thebes began and ended. History tells us that Philip in his youth was a hostage held for the observance of a treaty between the Thebans and Thessaly, and while there Philip no doubt learned the art of war from Epaminondas, who first adopted the maneuvers, used with success by Napoleon, in concentrating heavy masses on a given point of the enemy's array.

And since Epaminondas or Philip established standing armies there has been an unending conflict between the professional Army officer and the volunteer soldier or officer raised from the ranks of enlisted men. I think it is time for this petty jealousy to cease. It is beneath the dignity of officers of the Regular Establishment. The enlisted men and officers from the volunteer units have won their laurels on countless battle fields. The volunteer soldier is not only a good soldier in times of war but he is a good citizen after the brazen throats of war have ceased to roar and spit forth their iron indignation. The citizen soldier in times of tranquillity demonstrates that "Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war."

If this bill does not afford full relief to all disabled emergency Army officers, then after the enactment of this bill I favor such legislation as will do full justice to any disabled emergency officer or enlisted man who do not come under the provisions of this act.

In closing, I want to read a message received yesterday by me from Hon. Dan M. Nee, commander of the Missouri Department of the American Legion, as follows:

KANSAS CITY, MO., May 9, 1928.

RALPH LOZIER,
Washington, D. C.:

Missouri Department of American Legion urges passage of the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill without amendments.

DAN M. NEE, Department Commander.

I believe this expresses the real sentiments of the members of the American Legion in Missouri. I have received many similar communications from officers of the Legion all over the Nation, and I am confident this bill has the support of an overwhelming majority of the members of the American Legion. I believe the bill is just, and I am going to vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. If the Chair pleases, the House should know that anyone who speaks on this bill has leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs when the selective draft was made a part of our military system. The committee in this respect was very much divided. It was divided into two camps; one of which favored the draft system, and the other favored the old traditional system of volunteers. I followed the lead of Mr. Kahn, of California, and favored the selective-draft system. I have never regretted it; and I hope when we come to draft the manhood of the country again we will find a way of drafting the wealth also. [Applause.]

Inasmuch as this was a very revolutionary proposition, every feature of this bill was most carefully scrutinized and discussed. I read the section 10 which has so often been quoted here, and I believed then, and I believe now, that there is but one interpretation to be given to that section. I will read it:

That all officers and enlisted men of the forces herein provided for other than the Regular Army shall be in all respects on the same footing as to pay, allowances, and pensions as officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades and lengths of service in the Regular Army.

Now, I can not understand how there can be any possible misinterpretation of that language. Some gentlemen say this is a pension bill. Well, it is covered by the language of the bill, "and pensions." For my part, I consider it simply a matter of pay and allowances attached to the rank of the emergency and Regular officers.

Not only that, but this law was followed by another statute which wiped out all distinction between the several arms of the service. When this law was enacted we had what was known as the Regular Army, and we had also what was known as the National Guard, and we had what was known as the emergency army. But subsequent legislation wiped out all these distinctions, and there was then known in all our laws but one Army, and that was the Army of the United States.

How can it be truthfully said that this in any wise discriminates as against enlisted men? The emergency Army officer received different pay and he received different treatment than the enlisted men in actual service. If there is any discrimination in this bill, there was discrimination then. Each in his own rank had his pay and had his peculiar duties. I consider this bill simply recognizes what was promised to the emergency officer when he was taken into the service.

But not only that, is there anything unjust about this proposition? Is it an equity that when an emergency officer on the field of battle is invested with the duties and responsibilities of his rank, then when he is disabled the Government, which recognized him as an officer at that moment, shall not be allowed to face him with the charge, "No; you are not an officer of the United States. It is true I placed you there with the responsibilities and the duties of an officer of the United States. It is true I made this promise that there should be no discrimination between the officers in the branches of the service; but now that you are disabled in the discharge of your duty you are nothing but an emergency man, and you are not entitled to the rank and compensation of an officer."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I for my part would never vote for any discrimination between the enlisted man and the officer. I felt my responsibilities when we drafted these men into the service. I never would vote for any law which I would suspect for a moment would make the slightest discrimination between the enlisted man and the officer. We are taking nothing from the enlisted man; we are taking nothing that is given to him. We are simply saying to the officer, "You are entitled to what the law promised you"; and to the enlisted man, "You are entitled to what the law promised you." We are simply voting here to give to the emergency officer that which under the law he has fairly earned; and for my part I rejoice in the opportunity that this day gives me to cast my vote for him. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota] 10 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ten Members are present, a quorum.

The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it is rather a unique pleasure to be recognized by the chairman to-day, for the reason that the present occupant of the chair [Mr. LAGUARDIA] happens to be the only present Member of Congress who was a Member in 1917 and who served with me in the American Expeditionary Forces, with the men affected by the measure under discussion.

I have just listened to perhaps the most interesting debate on this measure that has come before the House with reference to any legislation affecting the disabled men since the war. With honesty of purpose and great ability the different Members of the House have expressed their present convictions as to the merits of this measure. It is a proposed law over which there could be honest disagreement.

Its history, as has been said by other Members, begins early after the war, when the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] introduced the original measure. That measure, however, differed in form from this one, as shown in the RECORD published this morning. Later I introduced the bill in an entirely different form from the measure presented to the House to-day, affecting not nearly so many men and having very vital differences from the present proposed law.

My reasons for introducing that measure are as clear to-day as they were 10 years ago. Together with a great many other men in the United States now living I happened to serve with some of the men affected, and in a hospital in France, in the fall of 1918, I saw different classes of officers being given entirely different compensation.

Men would go into the service together. One would go in on a certain day and become a member of the Regular service; others would go into training camps; an officer would come to one of the men and say, "Will you take a provisional commission which will take you into the Regular service?" That young man would say he would take that commission and then enter the Regular service. Another man would become an emergency officer. I saw those men with their wounds and they were not receiving the same compensations. There would be two boys, one a provisional officer and another an emergency officer, with several fingers shot off, and one would be retired at four times the amount the other received, yet their wounds were the same. You would find a Regular Army officer who had lost a few fingers, and in those days, if he were a captain, he would receive on retirement $150 a month; but an emergency officer who had lost both arms, both legs, both eyes, both ears, and totally disabled by disease would receive but $30 a month. That was manifestly unfair, and for that reason I introduced this bill in the House in another form many years ago.

Conditions have changed a very great deal since the time it was my pleasure as a Member of the House to meet in that room in the corner occupied by Uncle Joe Fordney, with former Members of the House and Members who are now in the House. I met there with Samuel Winslow, with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], and with the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. Esch; also with that great commander of the American Legion, Fritz Galbraith, who was killed in Indianapolis, and Hanford McNider, late Assistant Secretary of War.

At that meeting an agreement was made, in that room on this floor, that the Sweet bill would be passed at the following session of Congress and the compensation of these disabled men increased from $30 a month to $80 a month with allowances, if temporarily disabled, and if permanently disabled $100 a month. So the situation has changed to that extent.

The original measure was introduced to take care of what we knew at that time were battle casualties, and they should be taken care of by every country in this world, and particularly by this, the greatest and wealthiest country in the entire world. But conditions have changed again. In this Congress, the House and the Senate, in trying to do what ought to be done for disabled men, we have been very liberal in some other degrees by presuming disabilities. For instance, the law has read, and now reads, that anyone who contracted tuberculosis, mental diseases, sleeping sickness, and some other diseases, whose technical names I shall not use, would be presumed to have secured those diseases in the service in line of duty if contracted prior to January 1, 1925. So the bill as it now reads, Senate bill 777, would take into this retirement list a large number of men that I do not believe any medical testimony in the world would say had received their diseases in line of duty and from the service. I have always thought—though I have not discussed the matter on the floor of the House to any great extent, because we have not had much discussion on this legislation—that probably not over 25 per cent of the men who were presumptively connected under the veterans' act and its amendments to be disabled, secured their disabilities in the service, but that it was better to compensate the other 75 per cent that medical testimony would not say had secured their injuries in line of duty than to allow the 25 per cent that medical testimony said might have secured their injuries or diseases in line of duty to go without compensation. For that reason I have favored the enactment of these presumptive statutes. But as matters now develop I think this proposed law needs amendment, and I am going to offer amendments if no one else does so. I promised immediately after the war that I would vote for a disabled emergency officers' bill to take care of those battle casualties.

The casualties that we knew definitely and conclusively came because we declared war in this Chamber 10 years ago and because almost 10 years ago to the day we voted for the conscription act which put them into battle. I will vote for any defensible bill.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes; but I have only 10 minutes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Does not the gentleman think an amendment to the bill would probably kill the legislation?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I intended to reach that a little later, but I would just as soon discuss it now. My honest and deliberate judgment is that if this bill is passed without amendment—and I say this without having consulted anyone connected in any way with the White House—it would be vetoed and the veto would be sustained by this body. This is my honest, deliberate judgment. On the other hand, if it were amended to take care of the battle casualties, it would stand a chance of passing and eventually becoming law, and as a practical matter of legislation I favor a bill that can become law and will do justice to battle casualties.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. I merely wish the chairman of the committee would state for the benefit of the House the situation with respect to the statement of the gentleman from Michigan about all these men in the hospital who are not permanently disabled. I wish the chairman would state the provision in the last bill which we passed, called the Johnson bill, passed last week or the week before, that takes care of the situation of a man who is totally disabled but whom they would not declare permanently disabled.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. You mean allowing them to bring their action in court?

Mr. CONNERY. No; the time limit which was put on the permanent total disability.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes; the gentleman is entirely right. That is in the bill passed by the House about two weeks ago and now before the Senate, a provision requiring the rating of those temporarily disabled for a year as permanently disabled.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER. Take an emergency officer that lay in the hospital on his back with tuberculosis, a temporary total disability, for four years, under the provisions of this bill he would not get any benefits under the act because he has never, up to this time, or perhaps for several years, been rated on a permanent basis.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. He would be rated at his 30 per cent and that is all that is required under the law.

Mr. SCHAFER. Partial disability.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes; although I have not much time and must not yield further.

Mr. RANKIN. Did I understand the gentleman to say he would not support the bill unless there is an amendment adopted?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I did not express it in that way. I said I was going to offer this amendment which I thought would help to secure the final enactment of the bill and would do justice to this group of battle casualties.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. If no amendments are adopted, does not the chairman think it would be better to recommit this bill to the Veterans' Committee to have put in the bill such amendments as he thinks necessary?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That is a question for the House to decide and is a question of its policy. I may say to the gentleman I do not think we will have to cross that road, because I think the amendments will be adopted.

Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. COMBS rose.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will yield to the two gentlemen now on their feet, and then after that I must decline to yield further.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Just exactly what does the gentleman mean by a battle casualty?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I mean by a battle casualty one who received his wounds in action.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And not otherwise, and you would not apply the compensation to those who received their disability except in actual battle?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I would not go so far as to say that. I may say that the amendment I am going to offer and which I intend to discuss if I have the time, would provide 50 per cent for those who had not received their wounds in battle and 75 per cent for the battle casualties, carrying out the precedents which I think have been established in this country since the time of the Revolutionary War.

Mr. COMBS. May I ask if the beneficiaries of the provisions of the Regular Army retirement service are limited to battle casualties or whether they include the same classifications provided for in this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman knows as well as I do that there is no limit on that.

Mr. COMBS. So far as the Regular Army officer is concerned.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. And that is based on an entirely different theory.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have only one minute and I must serve notice that this is the last time I shall yield. I want to first answer the question of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMBS].

This is an entirely different basis, one man entering the service with the idea of making a life work of it and the other going into the war, as you and I perhaps went into it. The whole question of retirement, pension, and compensation is involved in this statute. I know what we need in the United States to-day—I think I do. We need a committee of this House that would be composed of members of the Military Committee, the Naval Committee, the Civil Service Retirement Committee, the Veterans' Committee, and some other committees that would do what we did with the pay act of 1920—go over the whole question of compensation, pensions, and retirement, and draw a complete comprehensive statute.

We have some very peculiar situations. To-day, if an enlisted man is totally and permanently disabled by reason of juries received at the front, he could secure $100 a month, but if a Government employee working in one of the departments happened to stump his toe and get permanently disabled he could get $107 a month. I could take an hour and point out the inconsistencies in our present law, but the inconsistencies can not be cured for the simple reason that the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation has one part of the jurisdiction, the Pensions Committees another, and the committee of which the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. Lehlbach, is chairman, another, and there is no single committee where all these problems can be considered in an effort to secure a law that would at least be reasonably fair to all the different classes of individuals involved, soldiers or civilians.

I now want to discuss some of the concrete cases under this law. It is very easy to talk about a law from an academic viewpoint, and theories sometimes are helpful. Concrete illustrations are the most instructive. There happen to be five men in the second congressional district of South Dakota, and every one of them is my close, personal, intimate friend, who served in the Army with me, and with many of them I served in the National Guard from the time I was 18 years old. They are all affected by this act.

On page 4780 of the RECORD, and I presume this is in the minority report also, you will find a list of these men. One is Col. William Adam Hazle, who lives in my own city, whose office is right across the street from mine. I served under him and with him, and, if war were to start somewhere to-morrow I would want to see him a colonel. If my own two sons were in the service I would like to have them serve with him, because not only does he know military tactics, not only is he a great soldier in that respect, but he would see that the boys had shoes on their feet and food in their stomachs if it was possible to do it, and that they would get an even break in the military game of life. He was a lieutenant colonel. He is the present adjutant general of the State of South Dakota, and I am frank to say I helped him to secure that position because I thought, and I still think, he was the best qualified man in the State for the position.

He is a colonel in the National Guard, and he does his work remarkably well, and all of us who know him respect his service. He would get $218.75 a month for life under this bill regardless of his future disability status.

Right across the street from him is Alfred D. Haugen. I have known him for years. He was a great county attorney. He has a total permanent disability. I can refer to his disability without injury to him. He is frozen into a certain position by arthritis deformans. He can not take a step. He can not get out of bed unless some one lifts him out. He sleeps in a sitting position. He was a great lawyer, he went to Texas, was getting a fine salary, and would have been getting much more if he had retained his health. If he came under the provisions of this bill—which he will not do because he is too smart—it would reduce him from $150 a month to $125 a month in compensation.

I know these cases are not equitable. In the same city lives Lester Kirkpatrick. That man was shot up and lay on the field for two or three days before they could get him from the battle field. He is 40 per cent disabled. It will increase his pension from $40 to $125. He has a real disability.

Another gentleman on this list was presumpted into a service-connected disability under one of the laws that I sponsored, and I do not think any medical testimony in the world would say that this gentleman did necessarily receive his injuries in the service, and yet this law would materially increase his pension.

I favor a law based on the Revolutionary War pension statute. The spread is too great in the proposed law between officers and men. In all the previous wars the rule has been no one should receive more than 50 per cent of his base pay up to the grade of lieutenant colonel. If you do not hold to that rule you are going to make a spread between officers and men that will continually bring the question before the Congress and before the people, and while it may hurry things that ought to be done in the way of general revision of all the retirement statutes, at the same time it will cause class friction in the United States. I do not believe we could justify the law without amending it to cure the objections to which I have referred. [Applause.]

Now, some one else may have amendments that are better phrased than mine. If so I am perfectly willing that they should offer their amendments. If they do not do so, believing it to be my duty, I shall offer the amendments, and I hope they will be adopted, on the theory that we can pass a bill that will take care of the real battle casualties and secure legislation that we can justify in our own minds.

Mr. SPEAKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. SPEAKS. In all honor and in all fairness to everybody—to the American Legion and the membership of this House—does not the gentleman believe that up to the beginning of debate upon this bill fully 90 per cent of the Legion and of the membership of the House were almost wholly uninformed as to what results would follow if it should be enacted into law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say that 90 per cent of the House do know what is in the bill and I think the great personnel of the Legion know something concerning it, but how much I do not know. I do know that eventually all will know what is in it, and eventually will secure the sort of legislation that we ought to secure along this line. [Applause.]

I shall now give a short synopsis of previous retirement and pension legislation, together with a discussion of the differences between S. 777, under discussion, and my proposed substitute. The substitute will be offered after the reading of the bill.

RETIREMENT

The statutes provide that where any regular officer has become incapable of performing the duties of his office he shall be either retired from active service or wholly retired from the service by the President. In defining the phrase "incapable of performing the duties of his office" the Attorney General (27 Op. Atty. Gen. 14) said:

> An officer of the Army found by a retiring board duly organized and convened to be incapable of performing the duties of his office may be and ought to be retired, without regard to the causes which may have led to such incapacity on his part, but to be incapable the officer must be either no longer responsible for his own actions or subject to infirmities or disabilities which make the reasonable fulfillment of his military duties impossible for him, notwithstanding an honest desire and firm purpose on his part to fully discharge them. Even though such officer display impatience or irritability, imperfect control of his temper, intolerance, indecision, and want of alertness in the performance of his duties to such an extent as to destroy or greatly impair his usefulness as an officer, he does not thereby necessarily become incapable of discharging his duties in such sense as to justify his retirement.

Section 1254 of the Revised Statutes—the act of June 10, 1872, chapter 419—provides that officers hereafter retired from active service shall be retired from the actual rank held by them at the date of retirement. However, the act of March 3, 1875, chapter 178, further provides that all officers of the Army who have been theretofore retired by reason of disability arising from wounds received in action should be considered as retired upon the actual rank held by them whether in the regular or volunteer service at the time when such wound was received, and that they should be borne on the retired list and receive pay after the passage of that act accordingly. The act of April 23, 1904, chapter 1485, provided that any officer of the Army below the grade of brigadier general who served with credit as an officer or as an enlisted man in the regular or volunteer forces during the Civil War prior to April 9, 1865, otherwise then as a cadet, and whose name is borne on the Official Register of the Army, and who has heretofore been or hereafter may be retired on account of wounds or disability incident to service may, in the discretion of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be placed on the retired list of the Army with the rank and retired pay of one grade above that actually held by him at the time of retirement.

By the act of March 4, 1915, chapter 143, paragraph 1, it was provided that any brigadier general on the retired list who had held the rank and command of major general of volunteers, and who served with credit in the regular or volunteer forces during the Civil War prior to April 9, 1865, could be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to the grade of major general, placed on the retired list with the pay of brigadier general. This same act further provides that any officer then on the retired list of the Army who served with credit for more than two years as a commissioned officer of volunteers during the Civil War prior to April 9, 1865, and who subsequently served with credit for more than 40 years as a commissioned officer of the Regular Army, including service in command of troops in five Indian campaigns, the war with Spain, and the Philippine insurrection, and to whom the congressional medal of honor for most distinguished conduct in action has been twice awarded, and who was also brevetted for conspicuous gallantry in action may be placed on the retired list of the Army with the rank and retired pay one grade above that actually held by him at the time of his retirement from active service in the Regular Army.

Various other acts have been passed providing for retirement in one grade higher than that held by the officer at the time of retirement, including brigadier generals and colonels, for meritorious service, particularly service during the wars in which the United States has been engaged.

Section 1275 of the Revised Statutes provides that officers retired from active service shall receive 75 per cent of the pay of the rank upon which they are retired. This same act also provides that officers wholly retired from the service shall be entitled to receive, upon their retirement, one year's pay and allowance of the highest rank held by them whether by staff or regimental commission at the time of their retirement. The law also provides that, except in cases of officers retired on account of wounds received in battle, no officer on the retired list shall be allowed or paid any increase of longevity pay beyond that which had accrued upon the date of their retirement. This act, which was passed March 2, 1903, provides as to officers already retired on and after the date of its passage, no further increase of longevity pay would be allowed.

Regular Army officers are retired by an Army retiring board consisting of not more than nine nor less than five officers, two-fifths of whom are to be selected from the Medical Corps. These boards, as far as possible, are composed of men senior in rank to the officer whose disability is inquired of. The Secretary of War, under the direction of the President, assembles such boards from time to time, the members of the board are sworn in each case to discharge their duties honestly and impartially. The duties of a retirement board are to inquire into and to determine the facts touching the nature and occasion of the disability of any officer who appears to be incapable of performing the duties of his office. Such boards have powers of courts-martial and of courts of inquiry.

Section 1249 of the Revised Statutes provides that when the board finds an officer incapacitated for active service it shall also find and report the cause which, in its judgment, has produced his incapacity, and whether such cause is an incident of service. The proceedings and decisions of the board are transmitted to the Secretary of War and then laid before the President for his approval or disapproval and orders in the case. Where the President approves the findings of a board that an officer is incapacitated for active service and that his incapacity is the result of an incident of service, the officer is retired from active service and placed on the list of retired officers. However, where the President approves the findings of a board to the effect that the officer is incapacitated for active service, but that his incapacity is not the result of any incident of service, the officer is retired from active service or wholly retired from the service in the discretion of the President. The names of officers wholly retired from the service are omitted from the Army Register.

The statutes provide that no officer shall be retired from active service nor wholly retired from the service without a full and fair hearing before an Army retiring board, if upon due summons he demands it. In the case of Miller v. United States (19 C. Cls. 338) it was held that when the President approves and acts upon the findings of the retiring board he thereby determines that the officer has had a full and fair hearing. With reference to the finality of the President's decision where he has approved the findings of the board of officers, attention is invited to the case of McBlair v. United States (19 C. Cls. 528) wherein it was held that the President has the power, upon the report of the retiring board, to retain the officer in active service, retire him from active service, or wholly retire him. It was also held in the same case, however, that such power was not a continuing one and was performed to the extent of its existence by the one act of the President and, having once determined, he can not review his decision nor correct an error of judgment therein.

Officers on the retired list are entitled to wear the uniform of the rank on which they may be retired. The law also provides that they shall be continued to be borne on the Army Register and shall be subject to the rules and Articles of War and to be tried by court-martial for any breach thereof.

These men may be called to active service or for any other duty that may be specified by the Secretary of War, and while called to such duty they are entitled to receive rank, pay, and allowances of the grade on the active list not above that of major which they would have obtained in the due course of promotion had they remained on the active list.

The Secretary of War is required by law to make a list of all officers of the Army who have been placed on the retired list for disabilities and to call such officers to be examined at intervals, and such officers if found to have recovered from such disabilities are assigned to such duty as the Secretary of War may approve.

PENSIONS

The first Federal law relating to pensions was enacted September 29, 1789, and provided in substance that the military pensions which had been granted and paid by the States, respectively, in pursuance of the acts of the United States in Congress assembled to the invalids who were wounded and disabled during the Revolutionary War should be continued and paid by the United States from the 4th day of March, 1789, and to continue for the space of one year under such regulations as the President might direct. This provision was continued in force from time to time by subsequent statutes.

On March 16, 1802, Congress enacted an act providing that if any officer, noncommissioned officer, musician, or private in the corps composing the peace establishment shall be disabled by wounds or otherwise while in the line of his duty in public service he shall be placed on the list of invalids of the United States at such rate of pay and under such regulations as the President might direct. A proviso was added that the compensation to be allowed for such wounds or disabilities to a commissioned officer should not exceed for the highest rate of disability one-half the monthly pay of such officer at the time of his being disabled or wounded, and that no officer should receive more than the half pay of a lieutenant colonel. This act further provided that the rate of compensation to noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates should not exceed $5 per month. Inferior disabilities entitled the person so disabled to receive an allowance proportionate to the highest disability.

On April 10, 1806, an act was passed providing that any commissioned officer or noncommissioned officer, musician, soldier, marine, or seaman disabled in the actual service of the United States while in the line of his duty by known wounds received during the Revolutionary War had at any period since then become and continued disabled in such manner as to render him unable to procure a subsistence by manual labor should, upon substantiating his claim, be placed on the pension list of the United States during life or during the continuance of such disability. The rate of pension allowed by this act to a commissioned officer was one-half of the monthly pay legally allowed at the time of incurring his disability. A full pension to a noncommissioned officer, musician, soldier, marine, or seaman was $5 a month. It was further provided that for less than total disability a proportionate amount would be allowed to the extent of the disability, and further, that no pension of a commissioned officer should be calculated at a higher rate than the half pay of a lieutenant colonel.

On April 10, 1812, certain additional persons were included as eligible to pensions under similar provisions to those heretofore mentioned.

On April 24, 1816, an amendment was enacted to the pension statutes to the effect that all persons of the rank specified who had been on the military pension rolls of the United States on the 24th day of April, 1816, should from that date be entitled to and receive for disabilities of the highest degree the following sums in lieu of those to which they were then entitled, to wit:

	Per month
First lieutenant	$17
Second lieutenant	15
Third lieutenant	13
Noncommissioned officer, musician, or private	8

Subsequent to this time and from time to time certain additional classes, such as persons who served in the Black Hawk War, the Creek War, and the Indian depredations in Florida, and so forth, were included as eligible for pensions. Subsequent to the Mexican War section 4730 of the Revised Statutes was enacted, which provided invalid pensions for war with Mexico. Under this act officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates, and so forth, whether of the Regular Army or volunteers, disabled by reason of injury received or disease contracted while in the line of duty in actual service in the war with Mexico or in going to or returning from the same, who received an honorable discharge, were entitled to a pension proportionate to his rank and disability not exceeding for total disability one-half the pay of a lieutenant colonel.

On July 14, 1862, an act was passed (sec. 4692, Rev. Stat.) making eligible for pensions certain classes of persons disabled in consequence of wounds or injury theretofore or thereafter received in line of duty at certain specified rates. The persons specified in these classes were officers of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, including regulars, volunteers, and militia, as well as certain other persons enumerated.

Section 4695 of the Revised Statutes, which specifies pensions for total disability, provides that—

For lieutenant colonel and all officers of higher rank in the military service and in the Marine Corps and for captain and all officers of higher rank in the Navy, $30 per month.

For major in the military service and in the Marine Corps and lieutenant in the naval service, $25 per month.

For captain in the military service and in the Marine Corps and master in the naval service, $20 per month.

For first lieutenant in the military service and in the Marine Corps, $17 per month;

For second lieutenant in the military service and in the Marine Corps and ensign in the naval service, $15 per month.

For midshipmen and noncommissioned officers of the Navy, including warrant officers, $10 per month.

For all other persons not mentioned, $8 per month.

(A master in the naval service then would now be lieutenant, junior grade.)

On March 2, 1895, a minimum pension law was passed providing in effect that no pension should be less than $6 a month.

On April 24, 1906, an amendment was enacted to the pension laws providing that the age of 62 years and over should be considered a permanent and specific disability within the meaning of the pension laws. On March 4, 1907, this definition of permanent and specific disability was extended to cover various acts granting pensions to persons who served in the Civil War and war with Mexico. On May 11, 1912, an act was passed providing for a service pension of $30 per month. A proviso to this act entitled all persons who served in the military or naval forces of the United States during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge, and who were wounded in battle or in line of duty and were unfit for manual labor by reason thereof or who, from disease or other causes incurred in line of duty resulting in disabilities which made them unable to perform manual labor, $30 per month.

By the act of May 1, 1920, pensions for Civil War, war with Mexico, and the War of 1812, were increased to $50 per month and for certain serious cases, such as persons helpless or blind, $72 per month. This act also provided for maimed soldiers of the Civil War who received disability while in the service of the United States in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the line of duty. The rates were as follows:

Loss of one hand or one foot, or being totally disabled in the same, $60 per month.

Loss of arm at or above elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or being totally disabled in the same, $65 per month.

Loss of arm at the shoulder joint or leg at the hip joint or so near shoulder or hip joint, or where the same is in such condition as to prevent the use of an artificial limb, $72 per month.

Loss of one hand and one foot, or being totally disabled in the same, $90 per month.

Loss of sight of both eyes, $100 per month.

Subsequently, on May 5, 1926, an act was passed increasing the amounts for the disabilities specified in the preceding paragraph to $65, $75, $85, $100, and $125, respectively.

On October 6, 1917, an amendment was enacted to the war risk insurance act providing for compensation for men disabled during the World War at the rate of $30 per month for total disability incurred in line of duty, irrespective of rank, and proportionately less amounts for inferior disability.

On December 24, 1919, an act was passed increasing this amount to $80 per month for temporary total disability and $100 per month for permanent total disability. In connection with the temporary disabilities, certain additional allowances were provided for dependents. This act also provided that if the disabled person was so helpless as to be in constant need of a nurse or attendant, an additional sum not to exceed $20 a month would be payable. These rates of compensation still remain in the law, with the exception that for men incompetent who have been maintained by the Government for a period of six months, and who have no dependents, the rate of compensation has been reduced to $20 per month during the period they are under governmental care, and the rate for an attendant has been increased to not to exceed $50 per month.

On June 7, 1924, the World War veterans' act was passed, which took the place of the war risk insurance act, as amended. This act provided no increase in amount of compensation payable for a disability, but removed the necessity for such disability being incurred in line of duty, the new requirement being that the disability be incurred in the service or aggravated by service and such incurrence or aggravation not be the result of willful misconduct.

It must be remembered in connection with pension legislation that general pension laws have recently been enacted granting pensions at higher rates than the pay of officers during previous wars; at least those preceding the Spanish-American War. To all intents and purposes, because of these general laws, the distinctions in ranks which have theretofore existed in the pension laws have been practically eliminated.

The preceding is not intended as a complete history of the pension laws of the United States, but is merely a brief sketch of the same for the purpose of showing the distinction which has been recognized between battle-incurred disabilities, severe disabilities, and others, and the recognition of difference in rank.

COMPARISON OF PROPOSED DRAFT WITH S. 777 AND THE LAWS RELATING TO PENSIONS AND RETIREMENT

Section 1 of the proposed substitute draft is essentially the same as lines 1 to 12 ending with the word "service" of section 1 of S. 777, except that the restriction to officers who served during the World War and who were disabled in such war has been removed and the act made applicable to officers of any war, and there have been substituted for the words "and who have," on line 7, page 1, down to the words "war service" on line 4, page 2, the words "which at the time of application for retirement under this act incapacitates him for military service." This change was made in order to place the disabled emergency officers as nearly on a parity with the retired officers of the Regular Army as is possible.

Section 2 of the proposed substitute draft is in lieu of page 2, commencing with the word "and," in line 12, and ending with the date "1920," on line 23 of the same page of S. 777. The provisions of the two bills with reference to privileges for emergency officers are the same as the privileges given to Regular officers on the retired list. However, the pay and allowances are changed from 75 per cent of the pay of the officer at the time of his discharge from the commissioned service, except pay under the act of May 18, 1920, as is provided in S. 777, to 50 per cent of the pay of the grade of the officer at time of separation from the active service, computed on the basis of the pay allowed by the act of June 10, 1922, entitled "The pay readjustment act," but in no event more than 50 per cent of the pay of a lieutenant colonel. The new draft also provides that where any person who would be entitled to the 50 per cent provision has suffered the loss of any member or part of the body or the use thereof, as the result of a wound received in battle, or has reached the age of 70 or more, shall be entitled in lieu of the 50 per cent to 75 per cent of the pay of his grade at time of separation from the active service, computed on the basis of the same pay act and in no event to be more than 75 per cent of the pay of a lieutenant colonel.

Section 3 of the proposed substitute draft is essentially the same as section 2, on page 4 of S. 777, with the exception that the definition of the term "World War" has been eliminated. In view of the fact that the proposed draft is to cover officers who served in any war, and the periods of those wars are well known, it was not felt necessary to define any one war unless the period ordinarily accepted as the period of any war was to be changed for the purposes of this act.

Section 4 of the proposed substitute draft is a new section for the purpose of carrying into effect the change in section 1 of S. 777, which has previously been described.

Section 5 is a new provision inserted for administrative reasons and merely specifies that payments under this act shall be made in accordance with awards by the director and determines that such awards are to be effective from the date of application. This provision does not change the method of payment as was contemplated by S. 777, on page 2, lines 19 and 20.

Section 6 is a new provision to the effect that the director shall cause officers on the emergency officers' retired list to be examined from time to time and that when they shall have been found to have recovered from their disability by the director their name shall be removed from such list and their retirement pay discontinued. S. 777 made no provision for the removal of these officers from the retired list or the discontinuance of their retired pay, notwithstanding that they might recover from their disabilities. It was believed that such a provision should be incorporated in the bill. This added section also brings the disabled emergency officers more nearly on a parity with the Regular officers of the Army on the retired list, as it is provided for them that they shall be examined from time to time, and when they recover they are ordered to active duty by the Secretary of War.

Section 7 of the proposed substitute draft is essentially the same as the provisions of S. 777, commencing on line 24, page 2, down to line 7, page 3. It merely provides that payments under this act shall be made out of the appropriation for military and naval compensation, and that during receipt of such pay and allowances the disabled emergency officer shall not be paid compensation. Attention is invited to the change of language with reference to the bar against payment of compensation. S. 777 would bar the officer entirely from receipt of compensation, whereas section 7 of the proposed substitute draft would merely deny him compensation while in receipt of retired pay.

Section 8 of the proposed substitute draft is a substitute for lines 17 to 19, ending with the word "Bureau," on page 2 of S. 777. Under the provisions of the proposed substitute draft the emergency officer is given the right to hospitalization under section 202, paragraph 10, of the World War veterans' act, which merely entitles him to hospitalization in a Government hospital under certain conditions, whereas the provisions of S. 777 would have entitled the disabled emergency officer to hospitalization at the expense of the Government, either in Government hospitals or, if none such were available, in private hospitals. In view of the fact that Regular officers of the Army who are retired are not entitled to any hospitalization at the present time under the World War veterans' act, and the only suggested amendment to that law has been to grant them hospitalization under section 202, paragraph 10, of the act, it was thought more equitable to endeavor to place these officers on a parity.

Section 9 is a new provision to the effect that where any person entitled under the act is incompetent or for any other reason unable to apply, an application may be made by his duly authorized legal representative. It further provides that where an emergency officer is insane and has been maintained by the Government in an institution for a period of six months and he has neither wife, child, nor dependent father or mother, he shall be entitled to the benefits of this act. It is believed that the first part of the new section is absolutely essential in order that those persons who may be eligible under this act, but who are incompetent, may receive its benefits. Further, it was thought that in view of the fact that Congress has recently reduced the compensation of all men who are insane and who have been maintained by the Government in an institution for six months to $20 per month, it would be inconsistent to provide an additional amount for such men as happen to be disabled emergency officers.

Section 10 of the proposed substitute draft is a new section added for the purpose of placing all disabled emergency officers on the same plane. It merely provides that those men who have been heretofore retired must apply under the new act and shall only be entitled to the new rate of retirement pay.

Section 11 is a new section added merely for the purpose of administration. This section was added in view of the experience of the bureau in connection with the World War adjusted compensation act where no appropriation for the administrative expense of administrating that act was made and it was necessary to resort to various means in order to set up the machinery to carry the act into effect.

There is one additional outstanding change which has not heretofore been mentioned, and that is the requirement under the proposed substitute draft that the applicant, in order to be entitled, shall not have been dishonorably discharged or dismissed from the service. S. 777 is silent with reference to this matter, and it was felt that it was not the intention of the framers of the bill that a man who was dishonorably discharged from the service or separated from the service other than under honorable conditions should be entitled to its benefits.

It will be noted that the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, has been used as a basis for computing the pay of retired officers under this act. In view of the fact that the emergency officers of all wars are to be included it was thought that this pay act could be equitably used for all officers. Of course, the committee can very easily change it to any other pay act which it sees fit to use.

The last section of the proposed substitute draft provides for assignment to duty of disabled emergency officers by the Secretary of War. This section is added in order to place the disabled emergency officer in the same status as the Regular retired officer. It may be, however, in view of the lesser pay which the emergency officer will draw, that such a section is not desirable.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I can not answer the question just asked by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPEAKS] but I am prepared to say that fully 90 per cent of the Members of the House who have promised to vote for this bill did not know at the time that they gave the promise just what was involved in it. [Applause.] Although I am not a Member of the American Legion I can say this, that 90 per cent of those I have talked with who belong to the Legion did not know what was in the bill or what its significance is. I can go further and say that 90 per cent of the enlisted veterans who have mentioned the bill to me have been against it.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Excuse me, I have not the time.

I commend the frankness of those of the advocates of this bill who have admitted that it is a pension measure. It is a pension measure. It is wholly obvious that it is a pension measure. Any attempt upon the part of anyone to represent it to be anything else must result in failure. The issue which we have to decide is whether as a pension measure we can defend it. I ask each of the Members of the House, can you defend as a pension measure, a piece of legislation which gives a brigadier general $375 a month with a 30 per cent disability, when you give to an enlisted man only $30 a month for the same disability? I am not one of them but there are those who believe that there should be some difference in behalf of the officers. They feel that the magic wand of military authority having touched the shoulders of a commissioned man, he at once becomes a knight, and is entitled to be held of superior strain during his service in the Army as well as thereafter as long as he may live.

I ask you whether there shall exist between those who have been so knighted and the man who stood in the ranks, who did the sweating and the digging, and who had no opportunity for distinction and none to make him famous, whose only chance was to serve his country and to die in that service—I ask you, can you justify such a difference as that? [Applause.]

There is gross discrimination in this bill, discrimination which can not be justified. There is discrimination not merely between the commissioned officer and the enlisted man, but among the commissioned officers themselves, in their various ranks.

I do not know of anything which illustrates the injustice done better than to look over the list of the beneficiaries of this bill. Naturally, I turn to my own State, and I find an instance which shocks me beyond measure. I find here on page 7 of the list of beneficiaries attached to the minority report the name Frank Murray Dixon, of my home city. He is a fine young man who went into the service and lost his leg and has other disabilities, under all of which he is now rated 100 per cent permanently disabled. He was recently department commander of the Legion for the State of Alabama, and notwithstanding his physical handicaps is now trying to practice law. He is trying to carry on. You meet him on the streets of my city, and a fine look of courage is in his face. He served as a second lieutenant, and under the law as it now stands he receives $100 a month for total and permanent disability. According to the figures made by the minority of the committee, if this bill should pass he would receive $93.75 per month. If he elects to avail himself of the provisions of this bill, Frank M. Dixon will be cut from $100 a month to $93 a month. Some one has said that the amount would be $106. It does not make much difference as far as my point is concerned which figures are correct.

I turn over to the next page of the report and I find the name of my friend and colleague, Congressman LAMAR JEFFERS, a fine soldier, an excellent gentleman. I am delighted that he was disabled no worse than he is. He has a rating of 30 per cent permanent disability. He is now receiving $30 a month, but because he happened to be a major while in the service, if this should become a law, he will receive $187.50 a month.

I ask you gentlemen in all fairness and justice, can you go home to your constituents and say that you voted to give a totally disabled boy $93.75 a month, when he was already getting $100 a month, and voted at the same time to give a Member of Congress, who is drawing a salary of $10,000 a year, and who has only 30 per cent disability, $187.50 a month for as long as he may live?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman will excuse me. That is an instance that comes home to us all. This list is full of such glaring inconsistencies. It is full of instances in which men with large disability receive less than those with small disability. It is a pension system which you are passing, and how can you defend yourselves for not basing the amount of pension upon the extent of disability? Is it sensible, is it honest, is it good public policy to give a man who is totally disabled the same as you would give him if he was only 30 per cent disabled? That is what this bill does. As a pension measure it is illogical, and I say to you that it is indefensible.

It can not be too often pointed out nor overemphasized that Congress has already passed upon the issues involved in this bill and fixed upon a definite policy, and that what is sought now is a complete subversion of the congressional policy, which we previously adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman will please excuse me. In 1917, when the war was yet young, Congress dealt with this subject and decided upon the principles which should govern in benefits for disabled soldiers. We created the War Risk Bureau and provided for soldiers' allotments to their dependents and for insurance for those who might lose their lives and for pay to the disabled.

The committee then brought before the House a bill which based its benefits to the disabled upon percentages of the pay which the soldiers were receiving. It provided that an officer if disabled should receive a certain percentage of his pay and that an enlisted man should receive the same percentage of his pay. That bill was framed upon a purely compensatory basis, such as the States have in force applicable to men at work at a sawmill or a coal mine. In that form the measure was brought before the House. After full debate, in which I had the honor to participate, that discriminatory principle in the bill was put under foot and the principle of absolute democracy and equality among its beneficiaries was adopted. All were put on an equality and each man, whether high or low in rank, was to receive the same amount for the same disability.

A part of what I said in the debate on that bill, as is printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 11, 1917, beginning on page 12731, is:

> In this bill we have a different principle recognized. Men who are injured are compensated according to the pay which at the time of the injury they are drawing from the Government as soldiers. Some of them get several hundred dollars per month; others get only a trifling sum. It has remained for the authors of this bill to present the principle to the American Congress that an American soldier serving his country in an emergency such as now exists should be compensated exactly upon the same plane as a workman; that he should be paid for his injuries just exactly as he would be if he were a laborer in a sawmill or a brakeman on a railroad. He is paid in proportion to what he is drawing down in pay when he is injured. It has remained for this measure to put the honorable service of soldiers in defense of our flag upon the mean and sordid basis of commercial gain and the earning capacity of men in civil life.

The reputed authors of this bill are sociologists. They are accustomed to drawing workmen's compensation laws for injuries received in civilian pursuits. They have not comprehended for a moment the light that lies in the path of the man who fights for his country. They have not realized for a moment that every American soldier now in the ranks, with the exception of a few professionals who were in the service before this war came on, is a citizen soldier; that it is an army of men who are equals. Oh, I have heard a lot of talk recently about democracy. I would like to see our Army made safe for democracy. How can you say that you have a democratic Army; how can you say that conscription is democratic, that it is just, when you force some men into the ranks at the low pay of $30 a month when others have rushed off to training camps, having had college educations and social positions good enough to stand the tests, and now are to be further favored as proposed by this bill? How can you afford to discriminate between these equally deserving men, whether officers or men, when they are soldiers in the field; to discriminate between their families at home; to discriminate between them when they come home maimed and bleeding from service in their country's cause; and when they fall upon the battle field to discriminate between their widows and orphans?

I refer now particularly to the discrimination in the compensation for injury. What is the foundation for such discrimination? Those men were equal at home. Many of the officers of the National Guard were just common fellows, of the sort that Regular Army officers sort of look over their left shoulders at. Some of them have even been workingmen. Think of that! [Laughter.] They have worked their way up in the National Guard and perhaps have no large earning capacity. There are plenty of officers in the National Guard and plenty of them in the National Army—officers who were college boys, put into the Army through training camps—plenty of them who are making more money to-day in the Army than they ever made before in their lives. On the other hand, there are thousands of splendid men who have volunteered, and thousands of others just as splendid who have been conscripted, who have left good jobs, where some of them were earning as much money as some of the officers now get, and who are peers to any man who carries a sword at his side. It is a rank discrimination.

We are not dealing with professional soldiers. Your bill is all right if it was designed only for a professional army—the Regular Army, with its professional privates and its professional officers. It is all right for them, because their rank in the Army has a relation to their social position and earning capacity. But it is all wrong when it is applied to the great citizen army, a great army composed of men who are equal, a great army that is taken by force or by volunteering from all the people. There should be no discrimination among these men. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been a soldier and I know what it is. I know the difference between being an officer and an enlisted man. I know the difference between carrying a sword and carrying a gun. The difference is as great as between the owner of the factory and the humble laborer in it. The difference is just as wide as that between the owner of the sawmill and the man who totes off the slabs. It is just as substantial and means as much.

A lot of people who have had no experience as soldiers think that being a soldier is fighting and running the risk of death. That is the smallest part of being a soldier. Being a soldier is being a drudge, a laborer; it is digging and sweating; it is standing guard. It means being cold when you would like to be warm; it means being wet when you would like to be dry; and it means being hungry when you would like to be fed. And I want to tell you that all these things bear heaviest on the enlisted man. They do not bear much on the officer.

Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, we have taken thousands of young men of college education and good social position into the training camps. They were subject to conscription like the common man's son. They did not want to be private soldiers. I do not blame them. If I were one of them, I would try to be an officer because I should not want to do the sweating and the digging. But many of their brothers or other men just as good as they are have got to go and fight in the ranks, many of them have got to go as private soldiers, and the only pay they get is $30 a month. Many of the young men who went through the training camps had no great earning capacity, but now they are drawing $180, $250, $300 a month, or whatever they get. But we are not content merely to give the officer the best of it in regard to pay. When he is in the field we let him carry a sword, and that is his only weight, while the poor private has to carry a gun and other baggage weighing 30 or 40 pounds. We are not satisfied to let the officer stay in the tent in the shade, while the humble enlisted man digs in the ditches, stands guard, and does other hateful tasks—oh, I had rather fight a thousand battles than do this monotonous drudgery of camp life—we are not content to give the officer the best of it all along the line, we are not content to give him a chance to make something out of himself, to have his name mentioned in the dispatches, and come home as a hero, while the man that is doing the fighting in the trenches is not mentioned at all. Nothing is thought of the humble private; there is no chance of promotion, no distinction nor honorable mention for him. All this is inevitable in military life. Yet we propose to further discriminate between the enlisted man and the officer, to discriminate between them when they come home with equally honorable scars, between their mothers, the mothers who gave birth to them, who nourished them, between their widows and orphans, when officer and man, heroes alike, lie dead upon the battle field. [Applause.]

I had my speech printed in pamphlet and sent a copy to every voter in my district. Many things that I have done and said have been criticized, but for the sentiments expressed in that debate no word of criticism from a constituent has ever come to my ears.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman will excuse me; I can not yield.

It was in September, 1917, that action was taken. Under that law millions of young Americans went into the service. Under that action the officers performed their duties. Every man in the whole Army knew that this principle of democracy had been adopted, and necessarily he relied upon it. Every officer who served knew that he would be entitled only to the same compensation that the commonest private in his command would receive, in the event he became disabled.

If there was a trade at all, that was the trade. Talk of promises is ridiculous. There were no promises. There was a definitely established policy of law, and upon that policy so adopted officers and men enlisted and went out to fight for their country.

No man, not even including my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], ever rejected a commission because the compensation was not on the basis he desired. I never heard, before my friend spoke yesterday, of any man rejecting a commission and preferring to fight in the ranks. I have myself been a private soldier, and I know what devolves upon a private soldier in war, and if I did not have great faith in my friend from Massachusetts I should suspect his veracity when he assures me that he declined a commission.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield, since he has referred to me?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No; I regret I can not yield.

I want the Members of the House to feast their eyes on one man [Mr. CONNERY] who refused to accept the honor of a commission, who refused to accept the salary, who refused to accept the social position and the best of everything that the Army had to offer, and instead chose to cast his lot among the lowly and the louse-bitten. [Laughter.]

My heart goes out to any man who serves his country. I have had an extraordinary sympathy with the disabled and all other ex-soldiers, and I have voted for every measure that has been proposed in this House for their benefit. I voted for the increase in pay of those in the service and for all relief measures proposed for those who are disabled. I have always raised my voice on that side.

Let me tell you, moreover, by way of a little bit of "bragging," that I am the man who invented the bonus. On December 7, 1918, on the very first day of the session of Congress after the armistice was signed I introduced the first soldiers' bonus bill that was ever offered in Congress. [Applause.] And on January 9, 1919, before the American Legion had even been organized and before anybody else thought of such a thing, I made a speech in behalf of a bonus for soldiers.

I stand now, as I have always stood, willing to do anything reasonable in behalf of the soldier, so long as it is put upon the basis of equality. But I tell you now that never will I consent to give those who enjoyed the best of everything while they were in the Army, as against those who had the worst of everything while there—never will I vote to give them a superior position in civil life. To me they all look alike. There are no more colonels, no more captains, no more privates; they are just all patriotic men who should stand on a basis of equality. [Applause.]

The idea back of all pensions and other soldiers' benefits is that we give these gratuities in order to insure that the country will not lack for defenders in the future. Let me tell you that the best way to be sure of defenders in the future is to keep America worthy of defense. So long as we hold fast to the principles of democracy there need be no fear that the great masses will fail when you call upon them for service. But when we make distinctions, when we prefer class above class, when we come to countenance privilege, when we discriminate between citizens of equal worthiness—then bring on your conscription laws. We will have need of them because men will not serve willingly. [Applause.]

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wonder how many of the Members of the House have read a very thought-compelling work by Lothrop Stannard entitled "A Revolt Against Civilization"? If that book had not already been written, I am sure the author would have recognized material for the book in what we have just listened to. Think of it! An officer shot through the face, shot through the head on the battle field, lying out here in Walter Reed Hospital when Congress assembled in 1920, with his face mutilated so hideously that it was horrible to look at. He is patched up and elected to Congress by patriotic people in Alabama. He is abused in this House because he happened to be an officer.

It is popular with cynics to say that the Members of the Congress do not know anything about the legislation that is being considered; and I know it is quite popular with those who do not like the American Legion to accuse it of ignorance and to accuse it of not knowing what it is engaged in with respect to its activities in this House. Yet, I am confident that the American Legion in the State of Mississippi knows what is going on and understands what it advocates. I want to read here just one sample of hundreds of communications that have been received, a resolution of the American Legion post at Corinth, Miss., because it speaks for the enlisted man; and I speak of it because the Legion of the State of Mississippi, which may be dreadfully misinformed and as ignorant as this House and as ignorant as the American Legion is said by the opponents of this bill to be about its policy, has indorsed this bill. I read:

THE PERRY A. JOHNS POST, No. 6,
DEPARTMENT OF MISSISSIPPI,
Corinth, Miss., May 3, 1928.

Whereas the House of Representatives, Congress of the United States, now has before it a measure that has the unanimous support of all veterans' organizations in America and of a vast majority of all veterans of the World War; and

Whereas this measure is the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill, which accords to the disabled emergency officers of the Army that retirement which the disabled emergency officers of the Navy and Marine Corps received some years ago; and

Whereas a small but active minority in the House has been working against this measure and saying that the former noncommissioned officers, privates, and sailors of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps were opposed to the same and considered it a discrimination against them: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Perry A. Johns Post, No. 6, American Legion, of Corinth, Miss., who served without commissions in the armed forces of the United States, do hereby declare our unqualified approval of the above bill; that we urge our own Congressman and the Representatives of other Mississippi districts to vote for the same; be it further

Resolved, That we send copies of this resolution to every Mississippi Representative in Congress and to the Hon. ROY G. FITZGERALD, M. C., the coauthor of the bill, for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Done by a unanimous vote of the above-mentioned former members of the armed forces of the United States of American during the World War.

C. W. NORWOOD, Post Commander.

That is an example of hundreds of just such indorsements.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. The gentleman has received what, I think, practically every Member of Congress has received, and that is requests that this bill be passed without amendment. What is going to be the attitude of the gentleman from Ohio, in charge of the bill, on that matter?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. To resist every amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then those of us who have amendments which we intend to offer will have to understand that so far as the gentleman is concerned—and those who are following him, if he can control them in the House—it will be absolutely useless for us to offer our amendments?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. I make no pretense of controlling anyone in this House; neither does the American Legion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will take three or four more minutes. I want to say to you that this legislation has been before the House for seven years. It has been three times passed by the Senate, and the greatest fight possible has been made to get it before this House, but I have been assisted by yourself most ably, and others, twice before the Rules Committee, when I have sought until the present session merely to get this bill before this House for consideration, and because of that, I will say to my good friend from Nebraska, I can not jeopardize this bill, and you must not ask me to either make it more liberal or make it less liberal.

Mr. SIMMONS. What I wanted to ascertain was whether it was to be the policy of the gentleman in charge of the bill on the floor to resist amendments.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. The safety of this bill demands that course.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Is it the gentleman's position that Members of the House should not offer any amendments?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Oh, no, no.

Mr. BURTNESS. Is it the gentleman's position not to permit Members to pass upon the merits of amendments which may be offered, and vote in accordance with their judgment as to the merits of those amendments?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Certainly not. I do not ask anybody to follow me.

Mr. BURTNESS. But the gentleman takes the position that regardless of the merits of amendments we should not adopt any amendments?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. No; I do not take any such position at all, but I say to you that there is not any merit in any amendment proposed to this bill.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman know the different amendments that may be proposed?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes; I know every amendment that can be proposed to this bill. I know them.

Mr. GREEN. The gentleman believes amendments will kill the bill?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. That is the whole trouble. My good friend from North Dakota, where it is awfully cold at times, I know is a warm-hearted man and he must realize that, after I have had a part in this struggle for several years, a struggle which has been very bitter and has strained friendships, I must insist on the bill as it is. That must be my position after seven years of discussion and after all these matters have been debated and heard again and again. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is full of discussions about this bill and all its features, and those discussions have been going on for years. The matter has been so thoroughly discussed that we know in advance all the suggestions which can be made, and I say to my good friend that any amendment which is made to this bill that throws it into conference with the Senate jeopardizes its passage. I believe myself that the principles and the immediate passage of this bill are much greater than the benefit of any particular amendment, which must necessarily delay if not defeat the bill; therefore, I personally am opposed to any amendment. Of course, I do not ask anybody to follow me in this House.

Mr. BURTNESS. I appreciate the gentleman's personal position in that respect, of course, but it does occur to me that if we follow the gentleman's general view there is not very much left of representative government in this country, especially if Members are not privileged to have amendments considered.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I resent the idea that this House can be controlled by anybody within it or by anybody outside of it. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMMONS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he resents the letters, telegrams, and demands we have been getting that we pass this bill without amendment?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. No; I have a broader conception of the rights of the American people. I know they may not be diplomatic and that they may ask us to do things which we should not do. They have asked me to support this bill, some of them not having any idea, possibly, that I have had anything to do with it and where I stand. One of the Members of the House came to me and said that he resented the telegrams which he had been receiving from a number of his constituents asking him to support the bill when he said, "They ought to know I am for this bill," and it almost turned him against it. But we have heard statements made on this floor that the American Legion does not know what it is about; that the American Legion is not informed; that the American Legion is misrepresented by its officers here in Washington, and that if the rank and file only knew what was in this bill they would be against it. When such statements are made, can you blame the American Legion from all over the country, 46 departments of the American Legion urging passage of this bill, for sending in telegrams to us, from every State in the Union, telling us that they know what this is about and understand what the measure is? That is what they are trying to impress on you, and do you want to resent their attempt to show you that they know what they are doing?

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman from Alabama in his speech said the American Legion did not know what was in this bill, but the gentleman from Iowa knows that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] spoke at length on this bill before the American Legion at Omaha and was voted down. They knew everything that was in this bill, and they voted him down overwhelmingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes. Of course, the American Legion has had an opportunity to know the position taken by the gentleman from Nebraska. He has appeared before committees and he has appeared on the floor of the national convention of the American Legion. So Legion members have had every opportunity to learn everything they want to know about this bill, and at nine annual conventions of the American Legion there has been a favorable report but never a minority report with regard to this bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is true I did speak at the American Legion convention in 1925 against this bill. I think those who were there will bear me out in saying that the galleries were with me but the delegates on the floor were not. May I say in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] I did not say everything there against the bill, because we did not know then what we know now about this bill. So please do not hold that up against the American Legion.

Mr. CONNERY. The bill was up for five years in exactly this form.

Mr. SIMMONS. And gradually many of us are finding out more things against it.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. Has the gentleman received any resolution of disapproval from any Legion post with respect to this bill?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. No; but I have heard there are three or four posts out of 13,000 posts of the American Legion and auxiliary which have opposed this bill.

Mr. GREEN. Does the gentleman recall what States they are in?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. No; one of them was in Pennsylvania and was brought about by one of the Members of the House recently.

Mr. SIMMONS. One was in Toledo, Ohio, was it not?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. No; I beg your pardon. If the gentleman is referring to a letter received this morning, I want to call the attention of this House to some very dishonest things which have been done. This may not apply to the Toledo matter, but he has not got, and does not state that he has, the action of that post of the American Legion behind him. A man did this out in Arcadia, Calif., and is denounced by the American Legion because he used Legion paper to tell it, and he was sore only because we did not tack on to this bill the Wurzbach bill, which we could not do, and he is denounced by the enlisted men of Arcadia, Calif., because he, the postmaster, did this thing on Legion paper.

Mr. GREEN. May I say to the gentleman I have received a large number of resolutions and telegrams in favor of this measure and not a single one opposing it.

Mr. ABERNETHY and Mr. HUDDLESTON rose.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I first yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Is it any offense for a wounded soldier to petition Congress through a telegram? Why should anybody be offended at that time?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Some of us get irritated. I know that those cold to humanitarian appeals are annoyed.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is the gentleman acquainted with Capt. Matt Murphy, of Birmingham, Ala.?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. No; I am not.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Captain Murphy was a captain overseas, rendered very splendid service, and just this moment I have been handed a telegram from him. He was one of the organizers of the American Legion and has attended every one of its national conventions. He was a member of its national executive and its national legislative committees. Would the gentleman allow me in his time to read the telegram?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Oh, they have plenty of time on the other side.

I do want to clear up one or two matters here, because the officers have been denounced, and it has been suggested that this being a Republic we must treat all soldiers alike. It has been said that during time of war we have a sort of monarchy; that is, we have an orderly arranged machine to perform a certain kind of work; but in order to get this orderly arranged machine this Congress, representing the American people, entered into an obligation which I am here to plead with the Members of this Congress to fulfill.

It was a straightforward obligation—an obligation to treat these emergency officers in regard to pensions and all other allowances just the same as the officers of the Regular Establishment are treated. A gentleman who has recently spoken has suggested that this is a plain pension bill.

Why, gentlemen, the average amount this bill will give to these emergency officers is only $132 a month, an increase over $62 a month.

Suppose it is a pension matter and suppose we have got to do what any honorable body would do, fulfill our obligation to these men to whom the obligation was made. Is that an argument of merit? If we do not pass this bill there are at least 100 more of these men who are going to die every year it is delayed. I can not submit to amendments enlarging this bill to take in those who are less than 30 per cent disabled, no matter how great my sympathy may be, because it means delay of the bill and means that 150 more will die during the year before the bill can be passed. We never can right the wrong to those who are gone. There were 122 of these men who died last year, and we never will be able to right the wrong to those who have died during the seven years this measure has been pending in Congress.

Now, there is another matter that keeps constantly cropping up here. It is suggested that somebody, in some way, is going to be injured by the passage of this bill. My colleagues, there is not a way under heaven for any man, enlisted man or officer, to be injured by this bill. There is no way that can be devised. In the first place, he need not come under its provisions unless he wants to, and if he does come under its provisions, even the second lieutenant will be benefited by it, because the second lieutenant will get $106.25, where the greatest amount he can get now under the law is $100. I would like to read to you the plea that comes to me from one of these second lieutenants. This is the telegram:

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF., May 11, 1928.

Hon. ROY G. FITZGERALD,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Regarding emergency officers' retirement bill, believe my case typical. Voluntary enlisted as private Corps Engineers at beginning of war. Sacrifice $6,000 yearly position as engineer. Have spent 19 months in France, discharged second lieutenant with total permanent disability, service connected. Now receive $100 per month compensation. If retired under your bill on account more than 5 years' service will receive more than $160. Difference will pay interest on mortgage on home with other benefits of retired officers. Surely we are deserving of this consideration.

ROY H. FLAMM.

The reason for the wrong impression that second lieutenants would receive less than $100 was that when the Veterans' Bureau was asked for the table of those who would be benefited by this bill if it became a law, the bureau used the present pay table of Army officers, which gave the impression that a second lieutenant would receive only $93 as three-fourths pay for retirement because of disability. They will be retired on 75 per cent of the pay they received when discharged, which, until after the end of the war, was such as to yield them $106.25 a month retirement pay. Much has been said about colonels and something has been said about generals. There is only one possible general to come under this bill. I regret it exceedingly, gentlemen, that there are 4 colonels in all the United States in the 3,000 officers to be benefited. There are 17 lieutenant colonels, 112 majors, possibly including that individual known as LAMAR JEFFERS, of this House, who lay a physical wreck for months on his bed in the Walter Reed Hospital. Is it not awful that we have in the House such a criminal as would discriminate against the enlisted men? [Laughter.] Yet we have another officer, a Member of this House, who might come under this bill.

I am glad that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] has expressed himself of thinking meanly of such men, for it gives me an opportunity to say that I am proud to serve in this House with men like LAMAR JEFFERS and CARROLL REECE, men who have been decorated by our country for heroic conduct on the fields of battle in France.

Now, I want to read another telegram from California, from the city of Los Angeles. There is some little rivalry between the two cities, but evidently they are in accord on this bill.

It is as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., May 10, 1928.

Hon. ROY G. FITZGERALD,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Officially announced by press to-day Lieut. Gov. Buron Fitts, disabled emergency officer of the World War, loses his 10-year fight with medical science to save his right leg. Amputation will take place tomorrow, May 10, Government hospital, Sawtelle, in an effort to save the life of the State executive. Following 18 major operations and 10 years of intense suffering to check spreading infection, amputation announced imperative.

DISABLED EMERGENCY OFFICERS WORLD WAR.
C. C. BAYLESS.

Oh, gentlemen, is it not to be regretted that among the 28,000 employees of the Veterans' Bureau that they have only been able to find a place for 49 of these men who may be affected by this bill? The money from this bill will be used to keep homes together, to keep the little children in school and give them an education. This man mentioned in this telegram is the Lieutenant Governor of California. He has been struggling for his life all the time. He has been honored by the people of California, and assumed all the duties which his people have asked him to assume. This man can not save his limb, and we ought to pray in this House that his life may be spared long enough to show that this Congress has not repudiated its obligations, but has done the square thing. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, no finer gentleman and no braver officer ever served in the Army than Capt. Matthew Murphy, of my home city. On taking my seat a moment ago the telegraph messenger handed me this telegram from Captain Murphy:

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., May 11, 1928.

Hon. GEORGE HUDDLESTON,

Care House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Stay with 'em. Am national charter member of American Legion. Been Alabama State commander twice. Was on national executive and legislative committees. Am with you and glad you are against Tyson-Fitzgerald bill on account of discriminatory features against enlisted men.

MATT MURPHY.

The sentiments which Captain Murphy expresses show his worthiness of my description of the kind of man he is.

Mr. RANKIN. In the beginning, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I have never altered my position on this bill. I opposed it from the very day it was first offered, and I oppose it now. I am opposed to it for a great many reasons, but I am going to take the little time I have to answer the arguments made on yesterday by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD].

You will find in his remarks a reference to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], the minority leader on the floor, one of the finest and bravest and most conservative men who ever occupied a seat on this floor—a reference to his sentiments as "communistic," because he opposes this change in our American policy, wherein we pension our soldiers according to disability and not according to rank.

On page 8358 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD he makes this astounding statement:

The settled policy of this Government from the beginning down to date, including the Spanish-American War, has been to compensate those injured in the service in accordance with their rank; to compensate them for disabilities incurred in service by pensions based upon rank, and based upon the settled policy of this democratic and not communistic country from the beginning.

In the first place, he brands as "communistic" those of us who do not subscribe to the doctrine that a pension should be based on rank. In the next place, he misrepresents, possibly unwittingly, the policy of this Republic from the earliest days down to the present time.

When the Civil War closed, the greatest conflict up to that time that the world had ever seen, there had been a measure passed to take care of a few superannuated officers, and in a few years there were 30 generals of the Civil War sitting on the two sides of this House.

I am talking to you men mostly on the Republican side of the aisle now. Those men who fought in the Union Army, in whose tracks you may safely follow if you want to preserve the life, the dignity, the strength, and the glory of this Republic, for 60 years turned down and defeated and refused to subscribe to a bill that would pension the soldiers of the Civil War according to their rank.

I speak now to you men of the South and recall to you the soldiers of the Southland in that great struggle, those brave men who faced the battle lines for four long, bloody years, and who went back and redeemed their Southland under conditions from which no other country has ever survived; and yet not in a single Southern State have they ever subscribed to the doctrine that Confederate soldiers should be pensioned according to rank, instead of on disability. They would spurn this bill with contempt if it were brought to them, just as the Federal soldiers spurned it with contempt on this floor and in their meetings.

Oh, but he brands as communists those veterans of the Spanish-American War, who in the dark days of 1898, when it looked as if a world catastrophe was going to be precipitated, not in Europe but upon the burning plains of Cuba, volunteered to face dangers known to the Tropics that were even worse than those of the battle front. They have refused from that day to this to adopt the policy or to recommend a policy of pensioning soldiers according to rank instead of according to disability. Why? Because it is a repudiation of all the democratic policies of our American institutions.

The gentleman goes on and talks about the American Legion. I received a telegram from an American Legion post, composed of men of the best blood of America, at Aberdeen, in my district, men whose ancestors have fought in every war from the Revolution to the present day. Some of them were officers and some enlisted men. Every one of them is just as patriotic and just as intelligent as is the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD].

I sent them a copy of this minority report, which is all that we could get. It took us three or four years to get that. They have refused us hearings before the Veterans' Committee. They granted us hearings by unanimous consent, and then on motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD] shut us out, and we just had to dig this information out. I sent it down. It has not been questioned here. It is in this pamphlet, and was compiled by the various departments here, largely the Veterans' Bureau. I have this telegram:

Daniel W. Byrd Post in regular session at Aberdeen condemns the disability emergency officers' retirement bill. Congratulations on your stand.

The resolution read by the gentleman evidently was not passed by the Mississippi Legislature. If it had been, it seems to me the secretary of state would have sent me a copy. Perhaps it was introduced.

I sent a copy of the minority report to a young man down there who has been in the service, a brilliant young officer, a member of the Legion, and he wrote back that—

If the people generally knew just what this proposed bill was for, there would be a howl of protest the like of which has never been heard before. I am in favor of any kind of a bill for the disabled veterans, and you are, too, but this one—no!

There is a man who served just as honorably as those who have criticized us. Down at Tupelo, my home town, I received one of these inspired telegrams, which stated that the American Legion was for this bill. That is getting close to home. I am a member of that post. I wrote to those boys and said that I wanted to do what they wanted me to do if I knew what that was. I asked them to inform themselves on the subject and to discuss it. All I had was this minority report and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which I sent them. They wrote back that they had had a meeting and indorsed my stand in opposition to this measure, and the adjutant wound up by saying:

I am glad to say that there was not a dissenting vote in that instance.

Here is another one from Denver, Colo. He says:

The press reports you in opposition to the bill to place emergency World War officers on the regular retirement pay. A similar bill was introduced in Congress in 1896 and in 1898 to place the Civil War volunteer officers on the Regular Army retired list, and was opposed by the Civil War officers, and you are properly doing. They defeated it, and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show it.

That is signed by a man named Brasheer, officer, patient, wardee, and he gives the company and command. Let us now go up to Portland, Me. I see my distinguished friend from Maine [Mr. NELSON] here. He made one of the most eloquent speeches yesterday that I have listened to for a long time. I have this from a Portland man:

I have been much interested in the stand that you have taken with regard to retirement for disabled emergency Army officers. Because of the fact that I served throughout the war as a private soldier the cry of "sour grapes" may be raised, but nevertheless I stand my ground. This bill appears to be based on the policy that commissions were granted only to a group of supermen, far superior to the average mortal in every way. It has been my observation that the average emergency officer received during his active service a sum in excess of his ability to earn in civil life. Indeed, his discontent in many cases was due to the false standard of living to which he had been accustomed during the war.

He goes on and says he hopes the bill will be defeated.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Not just now.

Mr. HERSEY. It is on the matter of the way the American Legion of Maine stands on this bill. They stand for this bill. I am quoting an organization.

Mr. RANKIN. I know you are quoting from something which is the result of propaganda, just as has been done in Aberdeen and other places.

Now, here is a man from New Bern, N. C., who was in the service, according to his statement. He is a lawyer there. His name is W. B. Rouse. He says:

NEW BERN, N. C., April 10, 1928.

Congressman RANKIN,
Member Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am taking the liberty to write you my views on Senate bill No. 777, concerning benefits for disabled emergency officers of the Great War, which is now before the House for action.

Taking into consideration the high purpose of our entry into the war, the equal and universal service required of every able-bodied man in the country, it is passing strange why Congress would even undertake to set a premium on the disability of one soldier over that of another. By what process of reasoning or operation of the mind can it be said that a first lieutenant disabled to the extent of 30 per cent shall draw from the United States Treasury $125 a month as compensation for his loss of earning power, while an enlisted man with the same degree of disability shall draw only $30 a month? Further, under the compensation act the disabled man is classified according to his vocation, this to determine the actual handicap of the existing disability, but the proposed bill does not even recognize this feature in measuring the handicap of the officers. An officer may be 30 per cent disabled and engage in a vocation or profession in which his disability is not a handicap, still a first lieutenant would receive $125 in monthly payments.

In this bill Congress is undertaking to enact class legislation which, if carried out, is going to destroy the good comradeship existing between the service men of the Great War, and if passed will furnish the incentive to the enlisted men to make their demand on Congress for their equally just pound of flesh.

Please do not be fooled into believing that the service men of this country are demanding this legislation, because such is not the fact. It is true that the Legion and other organizations have been fooled into indorsing this bill. This bill was brought before these organizations under its caption only. The contents of the bill were never discussed nor disclosed. The service men have never had the opportunity to know the merits or demerits of the bill. They were duped into the indorsement of it.

You will notice that he says the contents of the bill were never disclosed. They were duped into indorsing it.

In conclusion—

Says Mr. Rouse—

the passage of this bill will be a bold, unjust, and indefensible discrimination between equally disabled enlisted men and officers, and an unjust discrimination between officers of different rank. We therefore hope that our Congressman will respect the equal rights of our comrades in arms and vote to pass only such laws as will insure the continuation of this cherished condition.

I have also a telegram here from Mr. Rouse under date of May 9 to the same effect.

Now, let us get down to the State of Alabama. Here is a protest from an ex-service man at Birmingham. We have a good many protests from that section.

They jumped on this man in California. They are denouncing him because of his opposition to this bill. And yet his post of Veterans of Foreign Wars includes this paragraph in one of its resolutions:

As enlisted men and as emergency officers with overseas service during the World War we would give the enlisted man disabled in combat more consideration than the emergency officer who remained safely at home with his family and enjoyed the emoluments of his easily acquired commission.

I venture to say now that the vast majority of these men on this list were never in a battle.

Here are two ex-service men in Alabama calling my attention to it, and saying:

It is useless for us to call your attention to the provisions of the bill, but it is our humble opinion that the bill is iniquitous, discriminatory, unfair, and un-American, and it does not in any manner reflect the sympathy of the great mass of enlisted men who served their country and served it well during the World War period.

Here is a letter from Mr. Julius B. Cooper, of Birmingham, Ala., to the same effect. And here is another one from another ex-service man in Alabama.

Now, let us get down to showing that this "communism," of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD] complains, is spreading over the country. It is invading Ohio. This "communism," in accordance with which the gentleman from Ohio says they believe in pensioning a man according to his disability instead of according to his rank. Here is one example:

DEAR MR. RANKIN: Copies of your minority report on the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill were received by me at my office in Toledo.

I have attended a good many State and National conventions of the American Legion, and fully realize how the so-called Legion support for this bill is obtained. Committees, composed in many cases of men who are personally interested in the bill, bring forth a favorable report to the main assemblage, and then it passes unanimously without discussion. Another factor is that delegates to these conventions are made up largely of former officers, or at least they led the governing voices.

Keep up your good fight. If the rank and file of the returned soldiers knew the side of this bill as you have presented it, they would ask that every Congressman vote against it.

I am a salaried employee of the American Legion in Lucas County, Ohio; have been at the same job for six years.

Very truly yours,

HENRY B. HERMAN,
Secretary Lucas County Council, American Legion,
Adams and Erie Streets, Toledo, Ohio.

Here is a resolution that was sent to me from the post at Woodville, Ohio. Let me read it:

Therefore be it resolved by Clarence Nieman Post, No. 455, American Legion, That they protest the enactment into law of the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill for being unwarranted, un-American, and tending to embarrass other legislation of superior importance affecting the welfare of disabled men.

Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but we come on down to Cambridge, Ohio. That post of the American Legion urges your opposition to the emergency officers' retirement bill and your support of the universal draft bill.

There is another one coming from Cambridge, Ohio, and if these American Legion men all over the country find out what is behind this bill you will find a stronger protest against the enactment into law of any legislation that has such discriminatory provisions in it.

I have no access to the White House any more than any other Democrat has and I do not know what the President thinks, but if he carries out the policies he has followed in the past, I can not understand how you men on that side of the House can believe he will sanction legislation of this kind. Why? Because it discriminates most violently against the enlisted man who served in the World War in favor of the officers who are claiming this gratuity. It discriminates against the officers and men of the Spanish-American War; it discriminates even against your officers in the Civil War; and last, but not least, Mr. Chairman, it most violently discriminates against the sacred dead who, as Abraham Lincoln said upon the field of Gettysburg, "paid the last full measure of devotion" upon the field of battle, or who have died since the war closed.

The most popular soldier who has ever been in this Capital, in all the years of its existence, sleeps over yonder in an unmarked grave at Arlington—the Unknown Soldier. My picture of the result of this bill is to see a broken-hearted mother, in widow's weeds, standing before that tomb which contains the composite remains of all our sacred dead who paid the "last full measure of devotion," as Lincoln said, in the World War, because she must realize, as we all know, that she is discriminated against by this bill, regardless of who that unknown soldier might have been. If he were an enlisted man, his buddies who were shot down around him and who managed to survive the conflict are discriminated against in favor of other men, a great many of whom never got nearer to the battle front than Dallas, Tex., or Los Angeles, Calif.

We say this is a pension based on rank, but in the name of all the gods at once who ever heard of a decent pension law that ignored the widows and orphans of those who made the supreme sacrifice in their country's cause?

If that unknown soldier happened to be an officer he is discriminated against, because it denies to his widow and his children the same benefits that it gives to the men on this roll who are drawing salaries of $5,000, $6,000, $10,000, and even $12,000 a year.

God forbid that this Congress should ever pass such a piece of legislation or that the President should ever permit it to become a law. [Applause.]

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I want to take a minute or two because I would like to have my good friend from Mississippi ascertain whether or not this Congress has been deceived. I would like to know if the American Legion after nine years, composed of 90 per cent enlisted men, is incapable and has not the intelligence to know what it is it has been fighting for. I am also curious to know about the State of Mississippi and whether or not what has been handed to me by that American Legion, which has been attacked on the floor alleging lack of intelligence and misrepresentation by its officers, has been deceived. I want to read a memorial of the the State of Mississippi, through its legislature, imploring Congress to pass this bill.

Mr. BUSBY and Mr. RANKIN rose.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I will yield just as soon as I read it.

M. BUSBY. I wanted to refer to that resolution and to ask whether the gentleman has a certified copy of the resolution.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I have not; and that is the reason I am asking about it.

Mr. BUSBY. I have not heard of it before; and they usually send us certified copies of such matters.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. That is why I want the gentleman to have full opportunity to investigate the matter.

Mr. BUSBY. I am not alleging it to be true; but am denying it to be true.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I do not know either; but I would like to know about it. It would really be valuable to the House to know if the American Legion has been deceived or if the American Legion has deceived me, or if the Representatives from Mississippi have been deceived about their own legislature and their own State. [Reading:]

In the Legislature of Mississippi. House Joint Resolution No. 20.

Memorializing Congress to pass the Tyson and Fitzgerald bills regarding disabled emergency officers

Whereas of the nine classes of officers who served in the World War, eight classes, namely, regular officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps; provisional officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps; and emergency officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, have been granted by Congress the privilege of retirement for disability, when incurred in line of duty, leaving only the disabled emergency officers of the Army without such retirement privileges; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States measures known as the Tyson bill, S. 777, and the Fitzgerald bill, H. R. 500, to correct this apparent injustice to the disabled National Guard and other emergency officers of the World War; and

Whereas such proposed legislation is equitable and seeks to do a long delayed justice to a class of worthy disabled officers of the World War entitled because of their service, their wounds, and disabilities incurred therefrom to the same consideration and privileges as men of their rank who performed like service, but were of the Regular Army; and

Whereas an overwhelming number of the Members of Congress since the armistice have promised to correct this injustice to disabled emergency army officers by the enactment of legislation designed to adjust the unfair condition imposed upon this one remaining class of officers: Be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of Mississippi urge upon its legislators in the National Congress the importance and desirability of speedily passing such legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Mississippi.

Passed and adopted April 16, 1928.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Has that memorial the signature of the speaker of the house?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. No; and that is the reason I would like to know about it.

Mr. RANKIN. Does not the gentleman think he is rather presumptuous to be reading resolutions alleged to have been passed by the Legislature of Mississippi when they have not the signature of the speaker of the house?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. No; because I trust the American Legion, JOHN, and I believe this was sent here, and they have probably got the original, as they furnished me a copy, properly signed, and passed by at least one chamber of your legislature. It may have been passed by both of them, but I have given you the number and I have given you the date so that you may investigate it.

I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY].

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I did not intend to say anything more about this matter until the distinguished Representative from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] read a letter from my home town from a friend of mine, Mr. Rouse, who is opposed to this legislation.

I received the same letter, or a copy of it, and thereupon I wrote to the American Legion Post of my town and asked them their reaction, and this is what the adjutant writes me, and I want the committee to listen to this very carefully. This was on April 12:

Your letter, inclosing a copy that was forwarded to you by Mr. Rouse of a letter he had written to Mr. RANKIN, received, and I note that the date of his letter was the 10th.

Mr. Rouse presented a resolution in opposition to this bill at the meeting of the post on Monday night, the 9th, and spoke forcibly for its adoption. At this meeting of the post there were 82 members present, of whom 5 were officers in the war and 77 enlisted men. His resolution was opposed vigorously by a number of enlisted men and was defeated by a vote of 81 to 1, Mr. Rouse himself being the only member to vote for its adoption.

This is all I desire to say.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MILLIGAN]. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the proponents of this legislation would have this House believe that every ex-service man, both enlisted men and officers, throughout the United States, are clamoring for the immediate enactment of this legislation.

I think it was well stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPEAKS] when he stated that he believed that at least 90 per cent of the ex-service men of the United States are not familiar with the provisions of this bill. I think this is quite true.

I have found that even the national organization of the American Legion itself is not unanimous in its position upon this legislation. I desire to read to you a letter I have received from one of the most active Legion men in the United States. This man is a member of the national executive committee of the American Legion, and his letter is as follows:

I received your letter, also the copy of the emergency officers' retirement bill.

Last night, being meeting night of our post, I thought it advisable to take the bill and your letter to the meeting. I called upon several men who held commissions in the late war and urged them to be present. We had a very good attendance. I read the report of the majority and also the minority report of your committee. Explained to them to the best of my ability the action that had been taken on this by the National Legion Convention and why.

We unanimously approved the action of the minority. I knew that you would be interested in this and thought this action wise.

This man was an officer himself and is now a member of the national executive committee of the American Legion.

I desire to read to you a letter from a constituent of mine, an officer in the late war who was disabled 61 per cent permanent disability. This man to-day is drawing $61, and under this legislation he would draw $150 a month for the rest of his life. Here is what he says about this retirement bill:

DEAR FRIEND: I have read your letter in regard to the Fitzgerald bill. I believe the bill would be a mischievous piece of legislation.

* * * * * * *

I commend your stand upon this bill.

That is a letter from a man who would receive the benefits of this legislation for the rest of his natural life. Knowing the man personally I know of his service, and there was no better soldier ever wore a uniform during the late war. I say, in his behalf, that I believe he is the most unselfish man I have ever known in my lifetime. [Applause.]

Now, I realize the futility of opposing this legislation. There has been for several years misleading propaganda spread throughout the Nation. I know Members of this House have committed themselves to this legislation without realizing the effect of its provisions. You feel obligated to these men to whom you gave the promise several years ago to vote for this legislation.

My colleague from Missouri read this afternoon a telegram from the commander of the Legion of the State of Missouri, and in that telegram he urged that this Member support this bill. I know that two years ago, when this matter was before the Missouri Department of the American Legion in convention, that convention refused to indorse it. I have been informed that at the last session the Missouri Department of the American Legion again refused to indorse this same legislation.

I say the commander of the American Legion of the State of Missouri, if these facts are true as stated, was not speaking for the American Legion of Missouri, but was only speaking personally when he directed that Member to support this legislation.

This bill is discriminatory not only as to the enlisted men that served in the late war—42,000 enlisted men who have a disability of 30 per cent permanent or more—it not only discriminates against these 42,000 men but it discriminates against 5,000 and some odd emergency officers themselves. There are at this time 8,466 disabled emergency officers, and this bill only provides for 3,232 of them, which leaves the other 5,234 on the same basis they are to-day, drawing a compensation as enlisted men are drawing under the present law.

Mr. NEWTON. Does the gentleman mean those who have less than 30 per cent disability?

Mr. MILLIGAN. No; in the first place they set an arbitrary rate of 30 per cent permanent disability to come within the provisions of the bill, but that leaves those who only have from 10 to 29 per cent on the same basis that they are to-day.

By this provision of permanent disability that leaves the man who may have 100 per cent temporary disability drawing the same compensation he is to-day. Eighty per cent of the men who are suffering from tuberculosis and drawing the statutory award for tuberculosis will not come within the provisions of this legislation.

A man with an arrested case of tuberculosis is to-day rated by the Veterans' Bureau from 12½ to 15 per cent. A man who is in the hospital with active tuberculosis will not be included in this bill because he is rated with a temporary disability, and is thereby excluded from the 30 per cent permanent disability. That provision excludes five thousand two hundred and thirty-four and odd of the 8,466 disabled emergency officers. They have a provision in this bill that provides that where the officer to-day has no disability or any rating before the Veterans' Bureau comes within its provisions.

Mr. CROWTHER. Was the gentleman in the recent war?

Mr. MILLIGAN. I was. I have served as a buck private and an officer. [Applause.]

There is a provision on page 1 of the bill that includes officers who to-day have no disability whatever, officers to-day who are drawing no compensation from the Government, who are recognized as having no compensable disability. Yet they are included in this bill. We find that in lines 6, 7, and 8 on page 1 of the bill in the following language:

who during such service have incurred physical disability in line of duty, and who have been or may hereafter within one year be rated in accordance with law at not less than 30 per cent permanent disability by the United States Veterans' Bureau.

The words "who have been" include cases of officers who to-day have no disability but who some time since their discharge have had a rating of 30 per cent permanent disability. You include those men whom the records show have recovered. Yet you exclude the emergency officer who to-day is 100 per cent temporarily disabled.

This is a pension bill. It can not be argued that this is a retirement bill. This can only be treated as a pension bill. I do not believe that we should enter upon a program of pensioning men of this or any other war according to their rank. To do so would leave this situation: You would have a man in a town or community, say, a colonel, who has 30 per cent disability drawing a compensation for the rest of his life of $250 a month, while the enlisted man living next door with exactly the same disability and having the same rating receiving only $30 per month.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLIGAN. Yes.

Mr. CROSSER. What was the gentleman's position in the Army? The gentleman says that he was an officer.

Mr. MILLIGAN. I was a captain.

Mr. CROSSER. Of machine gun?

Mr. MILLIGAN. Of Infantry.

Mr. CROSSER. And as I understand it, the gentleman was wounded?

Mr. MILLIGAN. That is beside the point. I have the greatest sympathy for the officer or the enlisted man who was disabled in this late war, but I can not bring myself to vote for a bill of this kind that not only discriminates against the enlisted man but also discriminates against the emergency officers themselves. It is my theory that the health of the enlisted man is just as valuable to him as is the health of the officer, and I believe that the enlisted man is entitled to the same standards of living as the officer. I believe that the children of the enlisted man are entitled to the same social and educational advantages as are the children of the officers under whom he served. [Applause.]

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I shall take only a couple of minutes, because the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MILLIGAN] is laboring under a couple of misapprehensions which I hope constitute the reasons why he has changed his stand on this bill. In the first place, if a man has a service disability, and he is rated temporarily 100 per cent, he can be retired if he wants to under the bill. Nothing in the bill can hurt. If he wants to be retired he certainly has his 30 per cent permanent disability to be retired with, and he may apply for retirement or not as he sees fit.

I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I shall be happy, indeed, to vote for the emergency officers' retirement legislation. The only fault that I find with the pending bill is that it does not go far enough in extending the retirement benefits. If the parliamentary situation will permit, I shall offer a motion to recommit with specific instructions to report back immediately with amendments which will perfect the bill and extend its benefits. The one-year limitation in line 8 of page 1 should be stricken out, and the 30 per cent permanent disability in line 1 on page 2 changed to 10 per cent, so that all emergency officers who have or may have a permanent disability of 10 per cent or more will be entitled to the retirement benefits of the legislation.

Much has been said on the floor of the House about the American Legion's method of bombarding Congress with letters and telegrams in favor of this legislation. I am always glad to hear from my constituents, especially when they are interested in pending or proposed legislation, but at no time will I pledge myself to a vote against every amendment which may be offered to a bill, as requested by some of the officers of the American Legion.

I do not think any such pledge would square with the fundamental principles of our democracy or with the fundamental principles of the American Legion. [Applause.]

We have heard on the floor of the House a great deal of talk about this bill discriminating in favor of one class and against another class. Our Federal laws to take care of the peace-time workers in the Government service are based on the amount of their salaries, which are based on the class of service rendered and the positions held. The service of an emergency officer compared with that of an enlisted man is similar to the service of an executive head compared with that of a clerk in his department. There is no more ground for holding that there is a discrimination against the enlisted man in this bill than there is to hold that discrimination exists against the clerks under the United States employees' compensation laws.

We listened to the fervid argument a few moments ago, in which it was attempted to show how this bill would discriminate against widows and officers of other wars. That same argument could have been used against all legislation which has been enacted for the relief of veterans, widows, orphans, and dependents, because it gave benefits to some and not to others.

You are not discriminating against any soldier because you are giving one of his buddies additional benefits.

If you look through the history of Congress you will see special pension acts granting to widows of former officers of the American Army who did not die of service disability pensions of $75 and $100 and $150 a month. Those bills passed Congress with the approval of many of the Members who now raise the cry of discrimination against this emergency officers' retirement bill. When you gave the widow of a prominent officer $75 or $100 as a pension by special act, whether or not her husband died of service disability, you could equally apply the same argument of discrimination against the widows and the children of every veteran of any war which this Nation has engaged in. [Applause.] The argument of the opponents of this bill that it will establish a precedent, discriminatory in nature, is utterly unfounded. I hope the bill will pass by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, in the debate yesterday the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] made this statement, in part:

> Only 7 per cent of the officers of the Regular Army were casualties in battle. Ninety-three per cent of the officer casualties were emergency officers.

I agree with the sentiment of his speech, which gave credit for bravery to emergency officers who were wounded in battle. They were brave men, but I think we ought to know the facts. I resent the inference that the Regular Army officers were not just as brave as the emergency officers.

Six thousand three hundred and four Regular and 92,919 emergency Army officers served overseas; 181 Regulars and 2,034 emergency officers were killed in action. That means that 2.87 per cent of the Regulars who served in France were killed in action as against 2.09 per cent of the emergency officers.

We had in the Army 199,307 emergency officers during the war. During that time there were 11,357 Regular officers in the Army. The Regular officers numbered not quite 5½ per cent of the total commissioned personnel of the Army.

The gentleman from Massachusetts says they received 7 per cent of the casualties in battle. From the above figures I take it the records are in favor of and not against the Regular officer. [Applause.]

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in reply to that I may say I think the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] is correct. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] infers that both statements are not correct. The statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts, as I understand, was that 93 per cent of our officer-battle deaths were of emergency officers and he is correct.

There is no inconsistency between the two statements.

It has been called to my attention by the gentleman from Missouri that this bill is so drawn that there is a chance that a man who has once received a rating of 30 per cent would be entitled to its benefits even though he had recovered. I wish to say that is a fallacy; it is very specious, although my good friend may have justification for placing that construction upon the language of the bill. We use your knowledge of legal phrases and common sense. If a man has been rated permanently disabled, what does that mean? It means rated honestly, fairly, and legally as permanently disabled. If a mistake has been made and has been corrected, the Veterans' Bureau will never grant retirement because of a known mistake since corrected. If a man is not rated now as having a 30 per cent permanent disability, although he had been once so rated erroneously, he would not get retirement, though my good friend so misapprehends it. The change, necessarily a correction, would show that the original rating was not correct.

Mr. MILLIGAN. What is meant by the words in line 7, on page 1, "who have been"?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. That means those who have been correctly rated, but because a mistake has been made that would not justify them in retiring a man.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Has the gentleman gone to the Veterans' Bureau for an interpretation?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. No; I have not, but that must be so.

Mr. MILLIGAN. I understand they do not so interpret it.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. If they have made a mistake and have corrected it, that mistake would not warrant them in putting a man under the provisions of this bill, and no man would be retired because of a mistake.

Mr. MILLIGAN. I will say that these officers have been informed by those who are promulgating this legislation that they are included.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I am very sorry if that is so because I am sure that that is a misrepresentation.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. What about a case which at one time received a permanent rating, as an illustration, of 35 per cent and then it is cut down to 25 per cent permanent? The permanent rating as such remains, but the percentage has been cut from a figure sufficient to come within this bill down to one that would not permit the bill to operate on such an individual. Would he not under this language be included?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I fear not, because that is a correction. If a mistake has been made and a correction has been made I am sure he could not be included under this bill. Under this bill, if it becomes a law, and under the language of this bill, retirement would be given only as a result of a correct or final rating of 30 per cent or more of disability.

Mr. BURTNESS. If I understand correctly, it may not necessarily be a mistake.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. It would necessarily have to be a mistake, because a man may have a 100 per cent temporary disability, and at the same time a 30 per cent permanent disability, but the permanent degree can never change.

Mr. BURTNESS. A person may have a permanent rating and gradually a man's condition is aggravated so that the permanent rating changes, not in its permanency, but in its percentage; and it is increased from time to time. I have secured increases for a great many such individuals myself.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. But the permanent rating should always be the same. All elements should be considered, including the progressive character of the disability and the permanent rating if correctly made should remain unchanged.

Mr. BURTNESS. Certainly; I agree with the gentleman, but the percentage may vary, depending on the circumstances.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to my colleague from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, I am not going to give you any figures or any percentages because you have been listening to figures for two meetings of the committee. I am going to talk about the veterans I have known so well since 1917.

I want to correct the impression that the enlisted men will object to the passage of this measure. I have heard that a few Members have had letters from a few men who have said they objected, but I do not believe they understood the measure. I know the unselfishness of the disabled veterans. I have worked with them steadily since 1917, first in France, then in the Walter Reed Hospital all day, day after day, from 1918 until 1922, and I have seen them all over the country since that time—and I love and respect them for their courage which beggars all description.

I find the attitude of the men in the hospitals toward their comrades is always the same from Maine to California. When I visit the hospitals I always go to the sickest ward first. In each ward the men always say, "There is a comrade who is not going to live very long, who needs help or compensation, will not you take his case first?" And perhaps those very men who send me to their sick comrade may know perfectly well that they have only a few days, and some of them only a few hours, to live. I could give you their names, but I will not take the time to do that. We want to vote upon this bill as soon as possible. However, I can prove that men are curiously gentle and tender for the welfare of others—supremely unselfish. They can not get this retirement but they do not begrudge it to the officers.

If you argue against this retirement measure why do you not argue that you should not pay officers any more during a war than you pay enlisted men? Surely their lives are no more valuable to them during the war than they are after it is over. All retirement measures in Government and elsewhere are based on position and salary at the time of retirement. The officers who went into the war were from 12 to 14 years older than the enlisted men; more of them were married, more of them had children, and more of them left lucrative positions and were entrenched in good business positions but many of them have never regained those positions owing to their war-time disability.

You can never compensate the men for what they have lost. You can not compensate a man who has lost his arms and his legs; a man who is blind; a man who is fighting the battle of the mind; or who watches the world go by from a sick bed; a man who has given up the chance for a wife, children, and all that makes life dear. It is not a question of compensation. But you can give these emergency officers little bit more. You gave retirement to the naval officers, you gave it to the Marine Corps officers, why can you not give it to the Army officers? The War Department has withdrawn its objection to the passage of this measure. But I can not honestly see what difference it makes who indorses it or who does not indorse it, if the measure is just.

I think if you analyze the fact, during the war this Government pays the officers more than it does the enlisted men. You will realize that it is perfectly sane, perfectly logical, to pay them a higher rate in retirement.

As I have said before, you can not secure this for the enlisted men. You do not retire the enlisted men of the Regular Army at any time. They are given pensions although smaller pensions just as the enlisted men after the war.

They are all equally brave. I have never seen a man, in all my experience, who was not brave, no matter how terrible his suffering was, and I have watched the men before their operations, during their operations, and I have seen them go to the great beyond. And when people are going to meet their Maker you know how they feel about things. There are no shams then. There are no pretenses, and I know these men do not begrudge their comrades anything, and this is one of the best facts I want to leave with you. I am perfectly sure the enlisted men will not begrudge the emergency officers their retirement pay. Please do not belittle them or misjudge them by believing for one instant they resent the officers being given what they can not have. I am going to vote for this measure because I think it is just, and I believe as time goes, every one of you will believe it is just also. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS]. [Applause.]

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there has been a great deal of discussion throughout this debate as to whether or not the World War enlisted man wants this bill passed. There seems to be a diversity of opinion on this subject. It is easy to find out. All that any Member of this House would have to do would be to go over here to Walter Reed Hospital and ask some enlisted man who has been totally disabled for life whether or not he wants some swivel-chair officer who fought in the great battle along the Potomac during the war and fell off a chair and was injured by his spurs, to have more money than he can receive for his wounds. [Laughter and applause.]

I am not belittling the services of the great officers who temporarily went abroad and fought in France, but this bill gives to the men who came down here in hordes when the war was on seeking commissions and remained in Washington the same privileges as the bill gives to officers who saw real service.

I was here during the time of the war, and my office, as well as yours, was crowded all the time with young men within the draft age who had come here for commissions. Some of them were lucky. Some of them had congressional pull and got a commission. Other men with just as strong mentality, other men who had just the same ability to command men, could not get a commission because there were not commissions sufficient to go around.

I have heard men on this floor talk about these officers having ability superior to the enlisted men. In some instances this is true, but in most instances it is not true. I know of college graduates, I know of men who left their law offices, I know of men who left industries as heads of such industries and went out as private soldiers in this war and served under these temporary officers who were lucky enough to get commissions.

In one instance I know where they served under a man who was a police officer. I have no quarrel with the police officer, but I do know that this argument that these officers gave up good positions is no more true than it is to say that the enlisted men gave up good positions. This was a draft army, and in most instances the private was the equal if not the superior of the temporary officer.

I have in mind now two brothers, one of them at the time the war broke out was serving as a secretary to a Member of Congress. The other brother was the superintendent of a public high school. They were reared in the same family, of the same parentage, and were graduated from the same school. The young man who had congressional pull received a commission. The young superintendent of a public school out in Ohio did not have this pull and went in as an enlisted soldier. The brother who had the pull became a captain. The one who enlisted as an enlisted man out there in no man's land one day in France, where shells went screaming and bursting by, was hopelessly crippled and to-day he is a tottering idiot almost, because his mind is entirely gone. To-day that man can draw something like $90 or $100 per month. The captain brother was injured in the knee by a shrapnel that rendered him 30 per cent disabled. To-day he is a lawyer making perhaps $10,000 or $15,000 or $20,000 a year, and yet this captain brother could get $150 a month, while his totally disabled brother would only get the insignificant sum of from $90 to $100 and without any earning capacity. Is this just? Is it American?

I do not know how you may think of this, but I never can bring myself to the conclusion that I am going to desert the policy that has been in existence practically ever since the United States has been a country and make a class distinction in time of peace between the private soldier and the soldier of rank. [Applause.]

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will take a few minutes myself. This shows the thoughtlessness of some Members of Congress. After having been told what the policy of the United States is, what it has been, what the principle was during the Revolutionary War, the Black Hawk War, and the Civil War, every war down to the Spanish War, that the policy of this Nation has been for over a hundred years to pay pensions for disabilities based on rank, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] tells us what he thinks the policy of the United States should be and what he so erroneously thinks it has been. He speaks of two brothers—and the case is not typical, because officers on an average were 12 or 15 years older than the enlisted personnel.

Mr. KEARNS. There was only two years' difference in the ages of these two brothers.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. It is not a typical case, if there ever was such a case. If the gentleman has any sympathy or love for a soldier in his heart, he may do something for the soldier brother who he thinks is not adequately compensated in this case. I want the soldiers who have given so much—84 men under this bill have been decorated for gallantry on the field of battle—and I want them to receive an increase to show the country that this country, which is constantly increasing in wealth, is constantly increasing in appreciation of the patriotism of these men who sacrificed so much. [Applause.] If the gentleman thinks the brother that he speaks of is not getting enough, I would like to help him get something for that soldier at some time and somewhere. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk, reading the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 2. No person shall be entitled to benefits under the provisions of this act except he make application as hereinbefore provided and his application is received in the United States Veterans' Bureau within 12 months after the passage of this act: Provided, That the said director shall establish a register, and applications made hereunder shall be entered therein as of the actual date of receipt, in the order of receipt in the Veterans' Bureau, and such register shall be conclusive as to date of receipt of any application filed under this act. The term "World War," as used herein, is defined as including the period from April 6, 1917, to July 2, 1921.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment to section 1. I ask unanimous consent to return to section 1 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to return to section 1 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I object.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, the House could not very well hear, there was so much confusion, the reading of the bill. I think the gentleman ought to have a right to offer an amendment to section 1.

The CHAIRMAN. That matter is in the hands of the committee and the gentleman from Ohio has objected.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, I want to say with all the sincerity I possess that I regret exceedingly that I find myself unable to support this bill. I would like to vote for it for many reasons. First and foremost, is the fact that I have some intimate friends, disabled emergency officers, who would receive practical benefits therefrom. I think naturally all of us would also like to vote in accordance with the wishes as expressed by resolutions, of that great organization that has been referred to so often on the floor, the American Legion. With many of the service men who have spoken on the floor against the bill, I believe that the membership generally of the Legion knows little or nothing about it, and that if it did most of such membership would oppose it. Almost every service man with whom I have discussed the bill in person is opposed thereto. More and more are taking that view almost daily.

Be that as it may you as well as the service men in the district I represent know of my constant interest in their welfare. I have consistently voted and worked for every bill providing larger disability compensation, better hospital facilities, more liberal construction of compensation measures, to say nothing of voting to override the President's veto of the adjusted compensation measure. I would not take a great deal for some of the fine, splendid letters I have received from service men, their dependents, and families for assistance rendered in various matters. As has been so well said this measure is not in reality a retirement bill; it is now admitted by all that it is a compensation bill. So the question arises as to how it will work out in actual practice when it comes to be administered. Are its terms fair and just to the service men themselves? I can not for the life of me see how I would be justified in voting for a bill that would result in doing such a thing as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEARNS] showed by his fair illustration applied to two brothers in his district. In that case two boys were reared in the same family, one through political influence obtained a commission, and the other served as a private.

I do not care whether there was 2 years or 12 years difference in their ages. They had the same possibilities before them; they were used to the same standard of living; they came from the same family; graduated from the same college; they both offered their services to their country; the private is permanently disabled, totally disabled, drawing compensation of $100 per month, unable to earn a dollar, while the captain has only a 30 per cent disability so receives $30 per month compensation, but is a practicing lawyer with a large income. In spite of his relatively low disability, in so far as affecting earning power is concerned, but because he held a commission as a captain, he would under this bill draw $150 a month for the balance of his life; while his brother, much more in need of help, would continue to draw $100 per month. I can not feel that this would be fair. We have not discriminated between officers and privates in pensions for veterans of the Civil War and the Spanish-American War. Would we be justified in setting up these discriminations in the case of World War veterans?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. I can not yield now. Let me give a few other illustrations. Let us note the difference in the ratings between a chemist and a bacteriologist in the Veterans' Bureau. You all recall the arbitrary test of 30 per cent disability is passed upon by the Veterans' Bureau under present compensation laws—that rating is accepted as the guide for retirement under this bill.

A chemist who has his leg off at the knee is given a rating of 33 per cent, but a bacteriologist in the same predicament, wearing the same kind of an artificial leg, is rated at 29 per cent. That is the finding of the Veterans' Bureau with reference to these two occupations. Apparently they allow $4 more to the chemist, compensating for the fact that possibly in his work he must get up from his stool or his bench a little oftener during the day than the bacteriologist. To-day such a chemist draws $33 per month and the bacteriologist $29, but what do the proponents of this bill say?

They say, in effect, that the difference of $4 a month between a chemist and the bacteriologist is not sufficient, even though they suffered the same disability and may have had the same rank, and so they propose a law under which the chemist, who, we will say, is a major, shall then get $187.50 a month for the balance of his life, while his bacteriologist friend, who may likewise have been a major, must continue to receive $29 a month. Such discriminations can not be justified by anyone, and if this bill is passed the bacteriologist will have a right to complain and will complain.

Let us take the ratings of a bookkeeper, a cashier, a lawyer, a doctor, and a stationary engineer as applied to a specific disability. Let us assume that they have had to have two-thirds of a leg amputated. Under such a condition the bookkeeper receives a rating of 25 per cent, the cashier of 29 per cent, the lawyer receives a rating of 29 per cent, the doctor receives a rating of 39 per cent, and a stationary engineer 44 per cent. This is, of course, so whether they were officers, noncoms, or privates. Assume the case of an emergency colonel in the war who happened to be a physician as compared with an emergency colonel who happened to be a bookkeeper, a cashier, or a lawyer. What is the result? The bookkeeper, the cashier, and the lawyer, whether officer or private, will continue to receive from $25 or $29 per month, while the physician colonel will under this bill receive $250 a month, or about ten times as much for the same physical disability, and a disability which under the solemn findings of the Veterans' Bureau to-day are apparently no greater to the extent of actual disability in earning power than about $10 a month.

I submit that in all fairness we can not vote for that kind of a bill if we want to do justice not only as between the enlisted man and the officer, but as between one set of emergency officers and another set of emergency officers. Privates 100 per cent permanently disabled would draw but little more than half as much as a major only 30 per cent disabled. A first lieutenant 100 per cent disabled would draw $93.50 per month less than a lieutenant colonel 30 per cent disabled. All officers of the same rank would draw the same allowance if disabled to the extent of 30 per cent, regardless of whether one is totally helpless and the other able to carry on a successful business or profession.

I am in thorough accord with the remarks made by the chairman of the Veterans' Committee, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. ROYAL JOHNSON] this afternoon, himself a distinguished disabled emergency officer. Personally, I hope the bill may be so amended that we can all support it and do justice to some of the urgent cases which will be covered by legislation of this sort. I am not going to be arbitrary in my demands of amendment before giving support, but I have retained the right as a Representative in this House to vote for each and every amendment as it comes up, and to exercise the best judgment that I have upon the occasion. I can never yield to propaganda, no matter whence it comes, which demands that I take the bill and not amend it, but vote for it just as it is. Whenever we so yield we rock the very foundations of representative government.

Mr. JOHNSON has a proposal which seems fair and which I assume he will explain, limiting the awards largely to those suffering from actual war casualties, or to disability incurred in line of duty providing for increases with age. Mr. SIMMONS has, I understand, suggested that the percentage of disability be figured on the pay received by the officer so that the person 30 per cent disabled receive 30 per cent of such pay, the man 75 per cent disabled that percentage, and so forth. Both of these propositions are worthy of serious consideration. Personally, I should be glad to see the base of $100 per month for total disability raised so that all totally or partially disabled, officer or private, may receive a larger amount proportionately under our compensation laws.

But why grant thousands of dollars per year to the New York judge drawing a salary for life of $12,000 per year? Why pay thousands per year to fairly well paid men now profitably employed in the Veterans' Bureau, some of whom are paid salaries as high as $6,200 annually? Why establish such unjust discriminations which can not help but cause great dissatisfaction? We have many fine, brave service men in this House, several seriously wounded and considerably disabled. Unless we were informed we could not tell whether they had served as privates or as officers. To-day as Congressmen they receive the same salary. Two splendid officers here having disability ratings respectively of 30 per cent and 39 per cent would, under this bill, receive retirement pay for life under this bill, but others of our colleagues who served as privates, corporals, or sergeants, though disabled as much or more, would not benefit thereby.

I repeat, let us proceed in a businesslike way to see if we can not perfect this bill so as to do more exact justice. If so, I will be glad to vote for it. If this is not done I must, under my oath and as I see the facts, vote against it, unpleasant as that duty is.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 41, after line 18, insert a new section to be known as section 3, as follows:

"That the provision of this act shall not be put into effect until each noncommissioned officer and enlisted man who participated in the World War and has been given a permanent disability rating of not less than 30 per cent based on service origin by the Veterans'

Bureau, shall be granted compensation in an amount of not less than $75 a month."

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I will reserve it for three minutes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I do not think the gentleman has a right to limit the time.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Then I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, what is the point of order?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, my point of order is that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Oklahoma on the point of order.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD], who is in charge of this legislation, in a speech to-day called the attention of the House to the fact that no discrimination should be made between officers who performed service in the last war. I am in accord with him on this point, but, for the life of me, I can not understand why a discrimination should be made against the noncommissioned officers and the men who really did the fighting in the World War. According to the information given this House, a private with a 30 per cent disability rating gets in the way of compensation only approximately $25 or $30. The average that will be paid to an emergency officer amounts to approximately $100. No one will deny that the privates and the noncommissioned officers suffered the greatest hardships. Consequently I have offered this new section with the hope that this House will adopt the same so that no one can say that the officers performed a greater service than those who fought in the front-line trenches.

Now, as to the point of order—my new section is a qualifying limitation. This House could say that a certain thing should not be done in a month or a year. It could say that the act should not have full force or effect until the President of the United States performed a certain thing. This House could say that the bill should not take effect until the Treasurer performed a certain act, or it could say that until the Veterans' Bureau took certain action the bill would not become a law. I maintain that the proper way to determine what is uppermost in the minds of the Congress is to vote this new section either up or down, and therefore I respectfully say to the Chair that in my opinion this new section should be held as in order, so that it could not later be said that this House was guilty of passing class legislation and by so doing stating to the public that the officers performed a greater service than the enlisted personnel.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out everything contained in this bill after the enacting clause and insert the following as an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota moves to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That any person who served as an officer of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States other than as an officer of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, who was separated from such service under honorable conditions, and who, during any war in which the United States has been engaged, incurred physical disability by reason of injury received or disease contracted while in the line of duty in actual service, which at the time of application for retirement under this act incapacitates him for military service, shall, upon application as hereinafter provided, be placed on a separate retired list, hereby created, to be known as the emergency officers' retired list, with the rank held by him at the time of separation from the active service, and continued thereon so long as said disability exists.

"SEC. 2. While on the emergency officers' retired list such person shall be entitled to the same privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulations for officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who have been retired for physical disability incurred in line of duty: Provided, however, That the pay of such person shall be 50 per cent of the pay of the grade in which he was serving at time of separation from the active service, computed on the basis of the pay provided by sections 1 to 31, inclusive, title 37 of the United States Code, but in no event shall such person receive more than 50 per cent of the pay of a lieutenant colonel, except that where such person has suffered the loss of any member or part of the body, or of the use thereof, as the result of a wound received in battle, or has reached the age of 70 years or more, he shall be entitled to 75 per cent of the pay of the grade in which he was serving at time of separation from the active service, computed on the basis of the pay provided by sections 1 to 31, inclusive, title 37 of the United States Code, but in no event shall such person receive more than 75 per cent of the pay of a lieutenant colonel.

"SEC. 3. No person shall be entitled to the benefits of this act unless an application therefor be received in the United States Veterans' Bureau within 12 months after the passage of this act. The Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau shall establish a register, and applications made hereunder shall be entered thereon as of the actual date of receipt in the United States Veterans' Bureau, and in the order thereof, and such register shall be conclusive as to date of receipt of any application filed under this act.

"SEC. 4. The Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is hereby authorized to create necessary boards to determine whether an applicant under this act incurred physical disability by reason of injury received or disease contracted while in the line of duty in actual service and the extent that such disability incapacitates such person at the time of application. The decisions of such boards shall be final when approved by the director.

"SEC. 5. Payments under this act shall be made in accordance with an award by the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, and such awards shall be effective as of the date of application.

"SEC. 6. The director shall cause persons on the emergency officers' retired list to be examined at such intervals as, in his discretion, may be deemed advisable, and those persons who shall be found to have recovered from their disabilities shall, from the date of recovery, as determined by the director, be removed from such list and their right to receive retired pay under the provisions of this act shall cease.

"SEC. 7. All pay to which such persons may be entitled under the provisions of this act shall be paid out of the appropriation for military and naval compensation of the United States Veterans' Bureau. While receiving such pay and allowances such persons shall not be paid compensation under title 38 of the United States Code, as amended.

"SEC. 8. Persons on the emergency officers' retired list shall be entitled to the benefits of hospitalization under the provisions of section 484, title 38, of the United States Code as amended.

"SEC. 9. Where any person entitled to the benefits of this act is incompetent or for any other reason is unable to apply, an application may be made by his duly authorized legal representative: Provided, however, That where any person otherwise entitled to be placed on the emergency officers' retired list, having neither wife, child, nor dependent parent, shall have been maintained by the Government of the United States for a period or periods amounting to six months in an institution or institutions and shall be deemed by the director to be insane, such person shall not be entitled to the benefits of this act.

"SEC. 10. Any officer of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States other than an officer of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who has heretofore been granted retirement under any other act shall from the date of passage of this act be no longer entitled to receive retirement pay unless he shall qualify under this act.

"SEC. 11. There is hereby established in the United States Veterans' Bureau under the direction of the director a separate service to be known as the retirement service. For the purpose of administration the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized and directed to perform or cause to be performed any or all acts, and to make such rules and regulations, as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying this act into effect. All officers and employees of the bureau shall perform such duties under this act as may be assigned them by the director. All official acts performed by such officers or employees especially designated therefor by the director shall have the same force and effect as though performed by the director in person. The appropriation for the administrative expenses of the United States Veterans' Bureau shall be available for this purpose.

"SEC. 12. Persons placed on the emergency officers' retired list shall be entitled to wear the uniform of the rank on which they were retired. They shall be subject to assignment to active duty in accordance with the provisions of sections 991 to 999, inclusive, title 10, of the United States Code, and to the rules and Articles of War, and to trial by general court-martial for any breach thereof."

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against this suggested amendment in a way of substitute, because it comes after this committee has passed over the first section. I insist that it comes too late.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I make the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio and sustains that of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from North Carolina is entirely correct, because this substitute would make this law apply to officers of the Civil War and Spanish-American War. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I do. It is intended to kill the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If the gentleman insists upon it, its only effect will be to eliminate from this retirement act those officers of the Civil War who are yet living and those officers of the Spanish-American War who would come under this act, the same as veterans of the World War. If the gentleman makes the point of order on that ground, that it is not germane, the point of order is sound.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order on section 1. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from South Dakota that section 1 and sections 10 and 12 are not germane.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Section 10, Mr. Chairman, might possibly be subject to a point of order, for the reason that in 1921 or 1922 special bills passed the House retiring a few naval officers and Marine Corps officers. It would make no difference, however, in the general character of the substitute. Of course, the elimination of section 12, to which the gentleman refers, could make no difference except that it would permit these officers on the retired list to wear the uniform of the rank at which they were retired. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that section 12, if he will withdraw his point of order——

Mr. ABERNETHY. I will reserve it, but I will not withdraw it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It provides that persons placed on the emergency officers' retired list shall be entitled to wear the uniform of the rank on which they were retired. They shall be subject to assignment to active duty in accordance with the provisions of sections 991 to 999, inclusive, Title X, of the United States Code, and to the Rules and Articles of War, and to trial by general court-martial for any breach thereof, the same as any Regular Army officer. I do not care to argue the point of order further.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. If the Chair should hold that this amendment is in order, and it would come to a vote, what are we people to do who have received information from the posts that the enemies of this bill were going to offer such amendments, and that we should vote against all amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from South Dakota kindly furnished the Chair with a copy of his amendment earlier in the afternoon, and therefore the Chair looked up the precedents bearing on the case, and there is no question as to its being subject to a point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer a modified amendment, with the elimination of sections 10 and 12 and the first section.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I understand that sections 10 and 12 of this substitute are sections which are pertinent in a general way and are relevant to the subject of retirement of officers for physical disability.

Now, the gentleman's amendment is to strike out all after the enacting clause and to substitute new matter on the same general subject as is described in the title, which is all that is left. If that is the case, the rule is that the subject matter so sought to be substituted does not have to be germane to the text of the bill to which it is offered as a substitute but has only got to be germane generally to the subject matter of the legislation, and therefore I think sections 10 and 12 are good.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the modified amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that is to eliminate sections 10 and 12.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. And amend section 1.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Why not ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read?

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not germane. I am insisting on the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I ask unanimous consent that this amendment, which is exactly the same as the previous one, except the first section and the elimination of sections 10 and 12, be considered as read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Following is the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota:

That any person who served as an officer of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War other than as an officer of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, who was separated from such service under honorable conditions, and who incurred physical disability by reason of injury received or disease contracted while in the line of duty in actual service, which at the time of application for retirement under this act incapacitates him for military service shall, upon application as hereinafter provided, be placed on a separate retired list, hereby created, to be known as the emergency officers' retired list, with the rank held by him at the time of separation from the active service, and continued thereon so long as said disability exists.

SEC. 2. While on the emergency officers' retired list such person shall be entitled to the same privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulations for officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who have been retired for physical disability incurred in line of duty: Provided, however, That the pay of such person shall be 50 per cent of the pay of the grade in which he was serving at time of separation from the active service, computed on the basis of the pay provided by sections 1 to 31, inclusive, title 37 of the United States Code, but in no event shall such person receive more than 50 per cent of the pay of a lieutenant colonel, except that where such person has suffered the loss of any member or part of the body, or of the use thereof, as the result of a wound received in battle, or has reached the age of 70 years or more, shall be entitled to 75 per cent of the pay of the grade in which he was serving at time of separation from the active service, computed on the basis of the pay provided by sections 1 to 31, inclusive, title 37 of the United States Code, but in no event shall such person receive more than 75 per cent of the pay of a lieutenant colonel.

SEC. 3. No person shall be entitled to the benefits of this act unless an application therefor be received in the United States Veterans' Bureau within 12 months after the passage of this act. The Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau shall establish a register, and applications made hereunder shall be entered thereon as of the actual date of receipt in the United States Veterans' Bureau, and in the order thereof, and such register shall be conclusive as to date of receipt of any application filed under this act.

SEC. 4. The Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is hereby authorized to create necessary boards to determine whether an applicant under this act incurred physical disability by reason of injury received or disease contracted while in the line of duty in actual service and the extent that such disability incapacitates such person at the time of application. The decisions of such boards shall be final when approved by the director.

SEC. 5. Payments under this act shall be made in accordance with an award by the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, and such awards shall be effective as of the date of application.

SEC. 6. The director shall cause persons on the emergency officers' retired list to be examined at such intervals as, in his discretion, may be deemed advisable, and those persons who shall be found to have recovered from their disabilities shall, from the date of recovery, as determined by the director, be removed from such list and their right to receive retired pay under the provisions of this act shall cease.

SEC. 7. All pay to which such persons may be entitled under the provisions of this act shall be paid out of the appropriation for military and naval compensation of the United States Veterans' Bureau. While receiving such pay and allowances such persons shall not be paid compensation under title 38 of the United States Code, as amended.

SEC. 8. Persons on the emergency officers' retired list shall be entitled to the benefits of hospitalization under the provisions of section 484, title 38, of the United States Code, as amended.

SEC. 9. Where any person entitled to the benefits of this act is incompetent or for any other reason is unable to apply, an application may be made by his duly authorized legal representative: Provided, however, That where any person otherwise entitled to be placed on the emergency officers' retired list, having neither wife, child, nor dependent parent, shall have been maintained by the Government of the United States for a period or periods amounting to six months in an institution or institutions and shall be deemed by the director to be insane, such person shall not be entitled to the benefits of this act.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 11. There is hereby established in the United States Veterans' Bureau under the direction of the director a separate service to be known as the retirement service. For the purpose of administration the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized and directed to perform or cause to be performed any or all acts, and to make such rules and regulations, as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying this act into effect. All officers and employees of the bureau shall perform such duties under this act as may be assigned them by the director. All official acts performed by such officers or employees especially designated therefor by the director shall have the same force and effect as though performed by the director in person. The appropriation for the administrative expenses of the United States Veterans' Bureau shall be available for this purpose.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina desire to argue the point of order? The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I will not argue it, but will let the Chair rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to offer much of the matter contained in the substitute in the form of amendments, but it would have necessitated the offering of eight or ten different amendments and I thought it would be much clearer to the membership of the committee if I offered all of the changes as a substitute.

I have a very limited time and I can therefore discuss it to a very limited extent.

This substitute would affect only those members of the different forces in the World War, the emergency officers, who are disabled to the extent of 50 per cent and in no event would they receive more than 50 per cent of the pay of a lieutenant colonel. This plan is based on all the legislative precedents of the United States Government since the time of the Revolutionary War. I do not intend to go into them at this time, because there would not be time, but I stated the facts with reference to those precedents in the remarks I made this afternoon in general debate.

There is one exception to the 50 per cent that would be received by these officers, however, and that is in cases known as battle casualties and men who have arrived at the age of 72 years. In the case of battle casualties, men who were maimed in actual warfare, and those who arrive at the age of 72, they will receive 75 per cent of their base pay, exactly as is provided in the present bill now before the House.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. Is the gentleman's substitute based on the rating of disability at the time made or is the rating based on the disability as it progresses later on in life?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. As it shall be found by the board created in the Veterans' Bureau within the next year.

Mr. NEWTON. The condition within the next year?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes. But there is this exception. I provide in this substitute the same as is provided for the Regular Army officer, that these officers will be called before this board to be examined at such times as the Government shall direct; in other words, a man might be very ill to-day and might recover entirely within the next two years. In that event, under section 12, I provided that he be called back to active duty, but that section was stricken out on a point of order, and it is now provided that a man shall be called before this board whenever that may be desired.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Do I understand that the basic principle of your bill is the idea of disability rather than rank?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It is based on both. It is based on the policy that was initiated after the Revolutionary War, after the Mexican War, and was in force and effect in this country after the Civil War until the time when pensions gave a soldier more money than he would have received by the securing of his pension based on rank.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I will ask the gentleman to repeat his reference to battle casualties.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That is the man who received his injury in battle; he would receive 75 per cent of his base pay, exactly as it is to-day with regard to Regular Army officers under the general retirement statutes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Is there any difference as to the degree of disability?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. There is this difference: An emergency officer must be 50 per cent disabled. Another requisite it provides that this bill S. 777 does not provide is that an officer must have been honorably discharged from the service. I am not entirely certain, but I do not think the bill before the committee provides that an officer must be honorably discharged, and I do not agree with the idea that a man should be compensated if he has been court-martialed and dishonorably discharged from the Army.

In the present bill before us no provision is made for an insane officer to make a claim for retirement, because there is no provision in the bill providing that his guardian can ask for retirement. I have provided in this substitute that in the case of officers who are insane the guardians may file the request.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota may proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want the gentleman from South Dakota in these five minutes, which I do not intend to object to, to explain how we are to explain our vote in favor of any amendment that is offered to this bill after the wires we have received from all of our posts. I want him to explain that, and I am not joking about it.

If the gentleman has come in here with a half-baked proposition that nobody knows anything about and is expecting us to vote for it, I would like to know it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I want to answer the gentleman. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I am very pleased to answer his question. In the first place, this is not any half-baked proposition. Many Members of Congress and some of the best lawyers in the departments have put in a great deal of time trying to work out a fair and equitable law that will give these emergency officers justice and also not violate the precedents of the United States.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. But the Legion thinks you are doing that in this bill. They do not know about this substitute.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That may be. The gentleman also talks about Members of Congress explaining their votes. I came to the point about 10 or 12 years ago, just like the gentleman did, where I do not waste time explaining my votes, and whenever any Member of Congress from Texas, and particularly this gentleman, commences to explain his vote, I will think the world is coming to an end.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I thank the gentleman for the compliment.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman now yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. The gentleman in his substitute starts in with a 50 per cent permanent disability as the basis of rerating.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That is correct.

Mr. NEWTON. If after the reexamination there should develop a disability less than 50 per cent, then he goes off the list; is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That is correct. He would go off the list.

Mr. NEWTON. But as long as it remained a 50 per cent or more disability he remains on the list and receives this disability compensation under the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. They receive 50 per cent of it based on the Army pay, but not to exceed 50 per cent of the pay of a lieutenant colonel as provided in the legislation immediately after the Revolutionary War.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the amendment contain the same option carried in the pending bill? In other words, if the amount would be less, they can continue to receive compensation from the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Oh, certainly; they do not need to come in under the law unless they desire it.

Mr. BURTNESS. If they should have a disability of 50 per cent or more at one time and then later be reduced below 50 per cent, but afterwards their condition should become aggravated, they would be entitled to go back on the roll?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes; they would be entitled to go back on the roll.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. In view of the importance of the substitute measure, why did not the gentleman publish it a day or two ago in the RECORD so we would have information respecting it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that I have explained the amendment and it has been read here this afternoon. I have voted on more important measures than this without any such publication.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McSWAIN. I would like to ask the gentleman how long the committee of which the gentleman is chairman has had under consideration the matter contemplated by the bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. About as long as the Military Affairs Committee has had under consideration the bill to conscript capital and labor—about six years.

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; about six years. When did it occur to the gentleman that the provisions contemplated in his present amendment were just and right? When did that occur to the gentleman?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That occurred after I read the Senate bill, and after I sat down night after night and day after day with Members of Congress and various men in the departments and tried to work out a fair and just bill and one that the President would sign, and I could conscientiously vote for.

Mr. McSWAIN. Does the gentleman expect gentlemen who can not hear the proposed amendment read, and can not understand its provisions in this short time, to vote for such a substitute for a bill that the committee of which the gentleman is chairman has deliberately brought in here after six years of consideration?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I would say that is entirely within the gentleman's own mind and heart. If he can not understand it this afternoon, I am not to blame for that.

Mr. McSWAIN. I can not hear it. I could understand it if I could ever hear it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I ask unanimous consent that the substitute may again be read so that the gentleman from South Carolina can hear and understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the amendment may again be reported. Is there objection?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. I object.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is no disposition on the part of the American Legion or myself or anyone in charge of this bill to ask any Member of this House to vote for anything that his conscience does not approve.

This matter has been before Congress for seven years, and if this particular bill has not been reported from the Senate until the last two months to attract the attention of my good friend from South Dakota, other bills almost exactly similar have been before us which should have incited him to give the matter this study.

I realize if we do not pass the bill which the Senate has three times passed and sent to the House, after all our efforts to get a hearing in the House, we can not pass the bill at all. I therefore plead with the members of the committee to be a little patient with the American Legion that has given so much attention to this matter in order to do something for these disabled men.

The bill only raises the average compensation to $132 a month, and I hope you will resist the fascinating attempt to improve the measure at the last minute. I do not say but what the amendment might be a good substitute, but it is practically impossible to attempt to do this now. We have no statements or estimates or any complete study of it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is it the intention of the chairman of the committee to complete the consideration of the bill to-night?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I hope so and I would like to.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does the chairman intend to?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. I certainly do not want to obstruct anybody or obstruct any effort anybody may make to develop his own opinion.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am not talking about that, but is it the intention to try to keep a quorum in the Committee of the Whole until we get through?

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Oh, I would like to do that but I am not going to be ugly about it.
